Third, the number of U.S. citizen claimants against the Czechoslovak system appears to be substantially lower than the number of Czechoslovak resident claimants against the U.S. system.

Fourth, it is considerably more difficult to qualify for benefits under the Czechoslovak social security system than under the U.S. system.

Fifth, the benefits realized even by U.S. citizens who qualify under the Czechoslovak system are substantially smaller—on an individual basis—than those the United States pays to social security beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia.

In total, it means that while equality of payments between the two countries is not a realistic objective, the United States should seek better treatment of its citizens under the Czechoslovak system. There is also a strong case to be made for liberalization of certain Czechoslovak qualification criteria—as applied to U.S. claimants—particularly in view of the relative case with which the Czechoslovak claimants are able to qualify for benefits under the U.S. system.

I believe that the U.S. Government has a responsibility and a duty to pursue this matter promptly. The Department of State is now engaged in negotiations with Czechoslovakia to resolve this unfair situation. I hope that the results of these negotiations will correct the current problem and make additional legislative action unnecessary.

REPORT TO THE CONGRESS

In Compliance With Public Law 97-127, Section 11—On the 1968 Exchange of Letters Between the United States and Czechoslovakia on Reciprocal Payment of Social Security Benefits

Section 11 of the Czechoslovakian Claims Settlement Act of 1981 (PL 97-127, December 29, 1981) requires the Secretary of State to conduct a detailed review of the 1968 exchange of letters between the U.S. and Czechoslovakia on reciprocal payment of social security benefits and, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, to report to the Congress on the results of the review, together with recommendations for achieving greater equity for residents of the two countries. The following report is submitted in compliance with Section 11.

I. THE 1968 EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

The complete texts of the letters exchanged in 1968 by the Czechoslovak Ambassador to the United States and the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs are at Attachment 1. In this exchange of letters the Czechoslovak Government affirmed that it would pay social security benefits "to otherwise qualified United States citizens and nationals without regard to their residence or its duration . . ." The U.S

confirmed that the social insurance system of Czechoslovakia thereby met the requirements of Section 202(t)(2) of the Social Security Act, and that the U.S. could lawfully pay social security benefits to citizens of Czechoslovakia outside the U.S. Based on the assurances provided by the Czechoslovak Government, and following U.S. Government removal of Czechoslovakia from Treasury Department Circular 655 listing, the U.S. began making Social Security and other benefit payments in Czechoslovakia as soon as individual claims could be verified.

To reiterate, Czechoslovakia informed the U.S. Government through its letter that it would pay benefits to U.S. citizens living anywhere in the world who established entitlement to annuities from the Czechoslovak social security system. The U.S. acknowledged that, this being the case, the U.S. would no longer be barred from paying social security benefits to residents of Czechoslovakia. This understanding need not have been reduced to writing, nor was the legal effect of this understanding altered in any way by its having been spelled out in an exchange of letters. It was the Czechoslovak Government which requested a written exchange of letters on this subject; such an exchange, or other formal agreement, was not and is not a requirement of U.S. law for foreign social security systems to be found in compliance with Section 202(t)(2) of the Social Security Act.

Under Section 202(t)(2), the U.S. has been concerned only with ensuring payment of U.S. citizens who establish entitlement to benefits under foreign social security systems. The understanding expressed in the exchange of letters with Czechoslovakia is similar to those which the U.S. has reached—in various forms—with numerous other foreign countries to whose citizens the U.S. pays social security benefits outside the U.S.

There was no U.S. presumption in 1968, nor has there been to date, that the benefits each country would pay to residents of the other would be equal or nearly equal. Indeed, a "balance" of social security benefit payments is not required to satisfy the provisions of Section 202(t)(2) of the Social Security Act.

While it is not clear existing records precisely what motivated the U.S. and Czechoslovakia to address the social security issue when and in the manner they did, it would have been reasonable to assume in 1968—given the differences in the two systems which then existed—that U.S. benefits to residents of Czechoslovakia would be substantially greater than Czechoslovak benefits to residents of the U.S. (In this regard, it is important to note that Czechoslovakia made no commitment with regard to payment of benefits to non-U.S. citizens residents of the U.S., nor is Czechoslovakia required to do so to comply with Section 202(t)(2).)

Not only has there been no requirement that social security benefit payments "balance", there also has been no requirement or intent under U.S. law that qualification criteria under foreign social security systems be similar to those under the U.S. system. It was not (and is not) relevant to a Section 202(t)(2) determination that Czechoslovak qualification criteria were (and still are) far more restrictive than those of the United States.

It should be emphasized, however, that even in 1968 there was a clear U.S. presumption that all U.S. citizen claimants under the Czechoslovak social security system would receive fair and equitable consideration of their claims.

II. COMPARISON OF BENEFITS PAID SINCE 1968

Detailed charts showing amounts paid by the U.S. to residents of Czechoslovakia, and by Czechoslovakia to citizens of the U.S., are at Attachment 2.

U.S. social security benefits payments[1] to residents of Czechoslovakia in 1969 were approximately $85,000 per month. The monthly benefits total in 1981 was approximately $480,000. The current annual total, therefore, is about $6,000,000. The number of beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia, once over 2,000 (1973-74), is now about 1,500, of whom about 20-25 percent are U.S. citizens. While the number of beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia has declines steadily since 1974, the total annual amount paid by the U.S. to beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia has risen steadily since 1968. This apparent inconsistency is explained largely by the substantial increases individual U.S. social security beneficiaries have realized in recent years.

Czechoslovak social security benefits payments[2] to U.S. citizens in 1970 were approximately $1,520 per month. The monthly benefits total (paid to U.S. citizens) in 1981 was approximately $32,000. The current annual total, therefore, is about $381,000. The number of U.S. citizen beneficiaries of the Czechoslovak social security system, as low as 14 in 1970, has risen to a reported 198.

Czechoslovak authorities reportedly believe that, given U.S. and Czechoslovak emigration/immigration trends, the number of U.S. citizens qualifying under the Czechoslovak system is likely to continue to increase, with a concomitant increase in Czechoslovak social security payments to U.S. citizens in this country. (We doubt this would prove to be the case unless Czechoslovak eligibility criteria were eased.) At the same Czechoslovak authorities reportedly anticipate that in the coming years only a small number of persons who qualify under the U.S. social security system will take up residence in Czechoslovakia. In view of this projection, and the advanced age of many of the current U.S. social security beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia authorities reportedly believe that U.S. benefits payments to residents of Czechoslovakia are likely to decline in the coming years. In our view, whether U.S. payments to residents of Czechoslovakia decline in the foreseeable future is likely to depend most importantly on the rate of increase in individual benefits under the U.S. system.

III. EVALUATION OF "IMBALANCE" IN BENEFITS PAYMENTS

There are various reasons why the U.S. has consistently paid substantially more benefits to residents of Czechoslovakia than Czechoslovakia has paid to residents of the U.S.

(a) Czechoslovakia probably pays few, if any, social security benefits to non-U.S. citizen residents of the U.S., although this is a matter on which the Czechoslovak Government has provided us no information. As noted earlier, the exchange of letters relates solely to U.S. and Czechoslovak social security payments to citizens of the other country. The Czechoslovak Government has never acknowledged or assumed an obligation, vis-a-vis the U.S. Government, with regard to payment of social security benefits to non-U.S. citizens residents in the U.S. The U.S. has had no authority to intercede on behalf of Czechoslovaks or other non-U.S. citizen residents of the U.S. who may have applied for and been denied Czechoslovak benefits.

(b) The number of U.S. citizen claimants against the Czechoslovak system appears to be substantially lower than the number of Czechoslovak resident claimants against the U.S. system. This comparison is difficult to make, however, since the number of Czechoslovak resident claimants who fail to qualify under the U.S. system is unknown, as is the number of U.S. citizen claimants who fail to qualify under the Czechoslovak system.

(c) It is considerably more difficult to qualify for benefits under the Czechoslovak social security system than under the U.S. system. As noted above, this disparity in qualification criteria was not relevant to the Section 202(t)(2) finding, for which the two governments exchanged letters in 1968. U.S. social security qualification criteria are quite liberal compared to those of Czechoslovakia. For example, to obtain benefits under the U.S. system, a person who reaches age 62 in 1982 needs to have accumulated only 31 quarters (7 and ¾ years) of qualifying work. To obtain benefits under the Czechoslovak system, by contrast, most persons must work a minimum of 25 years and must have worked within the 2 years preceding the normal age of entitlement to benefits, i.e., age 60. While most persons who work under the Czechoslovak system and reside in Czechoslovakia throughout their lives probably have little difficulty qualifying, persons who, for example, emigrate to the U.S. in their 50's, even after having worked 20-30 years, normally would not qualify.

(d) The benefits realized even by U.S. citizens who qualify under the Czechoslovak system are substantially smaller—on an individual basis—than those the U.S. pays to social security beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia. Difference in per capita income and wage levels contribute to differences in levels of benefits realized by beneficiaries under the two systems. We have seen no evidence that U.S. citizens who qualify for Czechoslovak benefits (and are paid in dollars) receive less per month or per annum than their counterparts living in Czechoslovakia (who are paid in crowns).

IV. EVALUATION OF CZECHOSLOVAK BENEFIT PAYMENTS PERFORMANCE

Section 11 of PL 97-127 requests a determination of the extent to which Czechoslovakia "is complying with the spirit and provisions of the letters". It is difficult to differentiate Czechoslovak "compliance" as between the "spirit" and the "provisions" of the letters.

Several facts seem indisputable:

(a) The Czechoslovak Government has been making payments to U.S. citizens—regardless of their place of residence—whom it has found qualified to receive benefits under the Czechoslovak social security system.

[1] Statistics maintained by the Social Security Administration do not permit identification of U.S. social security benefits paid to Czechoslovak citizens living outside Czechoslovakia. It is reasonable to assume, however, that the amount of such U.S. benefits, if any, would be small.

[2] The U.S. does not maintain records on, and cannot verify, numbers of beneficiaries in the U.S. paid under the social security systems of foreign governments, or the amounts these beneficiaries receive. This information on Czechoslovak payments to U.S. citizens was provided by Czechoslovak eligibility criteria were eased.) At the same time Czechoslovak authorities in response to a U.S. request.

(b) There was no understanding between the two governments in 1968, nor has there been since then, that benefits paid by each government to residents of the other country were to be equal or nearly equal, or, indeed, that the "balance" of benefit payments was relevant to either party's meeting the commitment it expressed in the exchange of letters.

(c) There was no understanding between the two governments in 1968, nor has there been since then, that benefit payments qualification criteria under the two social security systems were to be similar, or nearly similar, or that differences in such criteria were relevant to either party's meeting the commitment it expressed in the exchange of letters.

(d) The Czechoslovak qualification criteria which most U.S. citizen claimants have failed to meet (and because of which their claims have been denied) have not changed since 1968.

The above considerations might suggest that Czechoslovakia has been complying with the commitments it expressed in the exchange of letters. However, Czechoslovakia appears to have been implementing its restrictive social security law—at least in the cases of U.S. citizen claimants—in a severely restrictive manner. The effect of Czechoslovakia's implementation of its law has been to make it virtually impossible for all but a relatively few U.S. citizen claimants to qualify. For example:

In the social security law of the U.S., as well as that of Czechoslovakia, there is room for some judgment in determining whether certain periods of work or other activity meet legal requirements to be counted in calculating whether a claimant has completed the requisite period of work under the system to qualify for benefits. In some cases, U.S. citizens who had nearly the requisite number of work years in Czechoslovakia nevertheless were denied benefits by a discretionary finding that all or part of normally credited non-work activity (e.g., wartime resistance, etc.) was not creditable. Some lacked only a very short period of creditable activity to qualify.

Czechoslovak authorities exercise similar discretion in determining whether a claimant's activities were covered activities within the requisite two years of the normal age of entitlement to benefits. Again, based on discretionary findings, Czechoslovak authorities have determined in some cases that U.S. citizens, who had acquired the requisite number of years of qualifying work under the Czechoslovak system, nonetheless failed to qualify for benefits because their work or other normally creditable activity during the two-year period before age 60 was not recognized as creditable.

A review of specific cases suggests a strong predisposition by Czechoslovak authorities to reach a negative decision on claims by U.S. citizens where any defensibly credible grounds therefor can be found. One case has been brought to our attention involving the extremely rare occurrence of a Czechoslovak court's having overturned the denial by Czechoslovak social security officials of a U.S. citizen's claim. Rather than to comply with the ruling and pay the claim, Czechoslovak social security officials, after prolonged delay, resorted to extraordinary procedures to appeal the court's ruling. The grounds of the appeal involved, again, a discretionary determination about a period of qualifying activity. The social security authorities were sustained, as anticipated, by a higher court.

In conclusion, the Czechoslovak Government expressed a commitment in the 1968 exchange of letters to pay U.S. citizens who "qualified" under the Czechoslovak system. They have done so. However, as a result of Czechoslovak law and/or practice, the number of U.S. claimants who "qualify" obviously has been kept to a minimum.

V. HOW TO OBTAIN BETTER TREATMENT FOR U.S. CLAIMANTS

Section 11 refers to achieving "greater comparability and equity of benefits for the residents of the two countries". We know of no precedent in the field of social security for seeking to obtain equality or near equality of social security payments between the U.S. and a foreign country. There will continue to be different and constantly varying numbers of claimants in the U.S. and Czechoslovakia against the social security system of the other country, and there will continue to be substantial differences in levels of individual benefits paid by the two systems.

While we believe that equality of payments between the two countries is not a realistic objective, we also believe that the U.S. should seek better treatment for its citizens under the Czechoslovak system. While there is no need for the two social security systems to be comparable in every respect, there is a strong case to be made for a liberalization of certain Czechoslovak qualification criteria—as applied to U.S. claimants—particularly in view of the relative ease with which Czechoslovak claimants are able to qualify for benefits under the U.S. system.

DIPLOMATIC OPTION

The U.S. has proposed negotiations with Czechoslovakia to resolve this issue. We have informed the Czechoslovak Government:

of the seriousness of the Congress' concern over the treatment afforded numerous U.S. citizen claimants under the Czechoslovak social security system; and that we seek immediate negotiations aimed at:

(1) amending or supplementing the 1968 exchange of letters so as to modify, in law and/or in practice, certain Czechoslovak pension requirements which have had the effect of denying all but a relatively few claims by U.S. citizens; and

(2) satisfying existing claims which appear to have been dealt with in an inequitable manner.

We shall consult closely with the Congress as we seek to resolve these issues expeditiously through diplomatic channels.

Legislative options

Section 11 raises the possibility of a legislative approach to ensuring greater "comparability and equity of benefits for the residents of the two countries." Section 11 also raises the possibility of terminating U.S. benefit payments to residents of Czechoslovakia in response to existing "inequities and incomparabilities". We believe that resort to such a legislative approach would be premature at this time in view of the proposed negotiations. However, we provide the following information in response to the request in Section 11 that we address the "feasibility, likely effects, and advisability" of terminating benefits to residents of Czechoslovakia:

Congress obviously has the authority to legislate a termination of benefits to all residents of Czechoslovakia, and such legislation could be implemented.

The effects of a termination of benefits are difficult to calculate. The effects of a U.S. cutoff on beneficiaries in Czechoslovakia obviously would depend on the alternate sources of income available to each, but one might presume that the impact on the standard of living of most of these beneficiaries would be severe. One "likely effect" of a U.S. termination of benefits would be a cutoff of Czechoslovak benefits to those U.S. citizens who now receive them. Czechoslovakia might, in addition, seek to respond in other areas, but discussion of any Czechoslovak response (or U.S. counter-response) beyond social security benefits would be highly speculative.

In view of the proposed negotiations between the U.S. and Czechoslovakia to resolve this issue, we do not believe it is now advisable to exercise the legislative option of terminating U.S. social security benefits to residents of Czechoslovakia.

Legislative options may merit further consideration should a diplomatic effort prove unsuccessful in resolving this issue within a reasonable period of time. In that context, we would be prepared to discuss how we believe such legislation might best be drafted.●

LOVE YOUR FARM

HON. ED JONES

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues in the House the reprint of an article written by Dr. Clarence Poe, a respected journalist and former editor in chief of the Progressive Farmer magazine. The name of this article is "Love Your Farm."

I want to share with all of the Congress this article because I think it captures magnificently the tradition and the rationale for the love of farming that so many of us in the agriculture profession feel. It captures so well the essence of the farmer's role as a steward of the Earth and his responsibility to this Earth.

More important, it reminds all of us—farmers and manufacturers, urban and rural, young and old, rich and poor—of our own individual obligation to the natural resources that our land has been blessed with.

The article follows:

LOVE YOUR FARM

Love your farm. Every farmer should not only love his work as the artist loves his work, but in this spirit, too, every farmer should love his farm itself as he would love a favorite horse or dog.

He should know every rod of the ground, should know just what each acre is best adapted to, should feel a joy and pride in having every hill and valley look its best, and he should be as much ashamed to have a field scarred with gullies as he would to have a beautiful colt marked with lashes; as much ashamed to have a piece of ground worn out from ill treatment as to have a horst gaunt and bony from neglect; as much hurt from seeing his acres sick from wretched management as he would be to see his cows half-starving from the same cause.

Love your ground—that piece of God's creation which you hold in fee simple. Fatten its poorer parts as carefully as you would an ailing collie. Heal the washed, torn places in the hillsides as you would the barb-scars on your pony. Feed with legumes and soiling crops and fertilizers the barren and gullied patch that needs special attention; nurse it back to life and beauty and fruitfulness.

Make a meadow of the bottom that is inclined to wash; watch it and care for it until the kindly root-masses heal every gaping wound, and in one unbroken surface the "tides of grass break into foam of flowers" upon the outer edges.

Don't forget even the forest lands. See that every acre of woodland has enough trees on it to make it profitable: "a good stand" of the timber crop as well as of every other crop. Have an eye to the beautiful in laying off the cleared fields—a tree here and there, but no wretched beggar's-coat mixture of little patches and little rents; rather broad fields fully tended and of as nearly uniform fertility as possible, making of your growing crops, as it were, a beautiful garment, whole and unbroken, to clothe the fruitful acres God has given you to keep and tend.

And so again we say, love your farm. Make it a place of beauty, a place of joyous fruitfulness, an example for your neighbors, a heritage for your children! Make improvements on it that will last beyond your day.

Make an ample yard about it with all the old-fashioned flowers that your grandmother knew; set a great orchard near it, bearing many manner of fruits, lay off roads and walks leading to it and keep them up; plant hedges along the approaches, and flowering bulbs and shrubs—crape myrtle and spirea and privet and roses—so that your grandchildren will someday speak of their grandsire, who cared enough for the beautiful and loved the farm well enough to leave for them this abiding glory of tree and shrub and flower.

Name the farm, too; treasure up its history; preserve the traditions of all the romance and adventure and humor and pathos that are in any way connected with it; and if some of the young folks must leave it, let them look back to it with happy memories of beauty and worthy ideals and of well ordered industry.

Love your farm. If you cannot be proud of it now, begin today to make it a thing you can be proud of.

Much dignity has come to you in that you are owner and caretaker for a part of God's footstool; show yourself worthy of that dignity. Watch earnestly over every acre. Let no day go by that you do not add something of comeliness and potential fertility to its fields.

And finally, leave some spot beneath the shade of some giant tree where at last, "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season," you can lay down your weary body, leaving the world a little better for your having lived in it, and earning the approval of the Great Father (Who made the care of the fields and gardens the first task given man): "Well done thou good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of Thy Lord."—Clarence Poe.●

REFUGEE ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS OF 1982

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law, which I have had the privilege to chair since the start of this Congress, has been very diligent in its efforts to examine the United States refugee program. This careful oversight has been carried on in addition to the tremendous workload attendant to the long-overdue reform of our Nation's immigration and naturalization laws.

I want to commend my six able subcommittee colleagues—SAM HALL, BARNEY FRANK, GEORGE CROCKETT, HAM FISH, DAN LUNGREN, and BILL MCCOLLUM—for the devoted and high caliber work they have given to the complex and sensitive refugee issue. My colleagues on the subcommittee have approached refugee issues with compassion such issues deserve but also with the hard-headedness befitting any program costing several billions of tax dollars.

One of our concerns from the start has been with the health screening and subsequent health treatment of refugees admitted to this country. My subcommittee took a close look at refugee health-related matters in August 1981 when we traveled through the refugee camps in Hong Kong and Thailand.

Because of our concerns, I requested the General Accounting Office (GAO) to do a study on the overseas medical examinations and treatment administered to Indochinese refugees about to enter the United States for resettlement. The study, entitled "Improved Overseas Medical Examinations and Treatment Can Reduce Serious Diseases in Indochinese Refugees Entering the United States," was issued on August 5, 1982. GAO found that the incidence of disease among Indochinese refugees is a costly public health problem. In a careful and objective manner, the GAO investigators established that State and local governments sustain today—and will face in the future—severe public health and financial problem stemming from the presence of infectious and communicable diseases among such refugees.

GAO also reached the conclusion that overseas medical examinations and treatment could be substantially improved and that this would be a less expensive, more effective way to treat the refugee population than waiting to screen and treat them after they enter.

The GAO concludes that treatment abroad of ill and diseased refugees lessen the public health hazard here in the United States as compared to screening and treatment here.

The GAO report strongly underscores two provisions which my subcommittee included in H.R. 5879, the Refugee Assistance Amendments of 1982, the bill which this House passed overwhelmingly on June 22, 1982.

The first provision is an authorization of $14 million to defray costs to State and local health departments for medical screening and treatment of resettled refugees. It is not appropriate, in my judgment, for State and local taxpayers to bear the costs of initial health screening and treatment of refugees. This is a Federal responsibility.

The second important provision the subcommittee placed in the measure is an instruction to the Department of Health and Human Services, the State Department, and to the Justice Department—through the Immigration and Naturalization Service—to improve and tighten today's rather loose system of overseas medical screening and treatment of refugees headed for the United States.

I am extremely pleased that the House supported my subcommittee in its efforts to improve our important and needed refugee program.

My subcommittee will continue to examine the refugee program in the Next Congress. We will continue to pay close attention to the health questions which have such broad potential impact on the American people.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I am including the executive summary of the GAO report and some of its recommendations at the conclusion of these remarks.

IMPROVED OVERSEAS MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS AND TREATMENT CAN REDUCE SERIOUS DISEASES IN INDOCHINESE REFUGEES ENTERING THE UNITED STATES

DIGEST

From April 1975 through February 1982, about 1.4 million Indochinese refugees fled their homelands, and about 580,000 (40 percent) resettled in the United States. The United States has set an admission level of 100,000 for fiscal year 1982.

Before persons can be admitted to the United States, they must be eligible under the terms of the Immigration and Nationality Act. The act denies persons, including refugees, the right to enter this country if they have certain mental or physical conditions, including several specified contagious diseases (active tuberculosis, infectious leprosy, and certain venereal diseases).

Because refugees had difficulty meeting the act's medical eligibility requirements, many were being detained in overseas camps. To expedite their movement, the medical requirements were relaxed in April 1980, and refugees were routinely granted medical waivers. About 21,000 refugees diagnosed as having certain health problems, such as active (but noninfectious) tuberculosis, were granted medical waivers and permitted to come to the United States. The Surgeon General concluded that this would not pose a problem to the health of the American public because refugees were to receive follow-on care by local health departments in the United States.

At the request of the Chairman, Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees and International Law, House Committee on the Judiciary, GAO evaluated the medical procedures used to screen Indochinese refugees overseas and followup procedures in the United States to see if they were adequate to protect the American public health.

INCIDENCE OF DISEASE IN INDOCHINESE REFUGEES: A COSTLY PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEM

The incidence of several serious and contagious diseases in Indochinese refugees far exceeds that found in the U.S. population. Among these diseases are active tuberculosis, serious parasitic diseases, hepatitis B, malaria, and leprosy.

For example, in 1980, the incidence of tuberculosis was 12 cases per 100,000 in the United States but 407 cases per 100,000 in Indochinese refugees. Refugee children had particularly high rates of tuberculosis.

Because these diseases could spread to others, some State and local health officials believe a potential public health problem exists. Although the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has maintained that there is no public health problem, it has encouraged health departments to make special efforts to monitor and treat refugees.

The Federal Government provided about $173 million in fiscal year 1981 and will provide about $217 million in 1982 for medical services to refugees in the United States—about 77 percent of whom are Indochinese.

Several State and local health departments said that refugees pose more of a financial burden than a public health problem and that their diseases could be controlled provided adequate funding was provided. The health departments also said that providing services to Indochinese refugees has proven costly and hindered their efforts to provide services to the general population.

IMPROVED OVERSEAS MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS AND TREATMENT NEEDED

To determine refugees' medical conditions, physicians of the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration conduct medical examinations overseas using Public Health Service criteria. However, these medical examinations were—

Cursory and not in conformance with medical procedures commonly used in the United States or by other countries admitting refugees and Inadequate to detect and treat certain diseases and health conditions.

As a result, serious contagious diseases, as well as other medical problems, went undetected and untreated overseas. These problems became difficult to deal with once refugees were dispersed into the U.S. population. Moreover, Immigration and Naturalization Service authorities made their decisions to admit refugees before medical examinations were performed; therefore, the examinations' results were not considered in the decisionmaking process.

While local health departments had succeeded in making initial contact with most refugees, a number of barriers (such as refugees' movement within the United States) hindered their ability to provide follow-on care.

GAO believes that the overseas medical examination and treatment procedures for refugees should be improved to preclude many of the difficulties confronting U.S. health departments in dealing with refugees' health problems. These improvements would result in granting medical waivers only for compelling reasons in contrast to the current procedure of routinely granting such waivers.

GAO estimates that adequate overseas medical examinations for an expected 100,000 refugees could be accomplished for about $5.8 million in fiscal year 1982. This would represent a $3.1 million increase over the $2.7 million now expected to be spent on overseas medical examinations—a modest increase in cost compared to the $217 million the United States will spend to take care of refugees' medical problems in 1982.

GAO also believes that the results of the medical examinations should be made available to immigration officers for use in making final determinations concerning whether refugees are eligible for admission into the United States.

RECOMMENDATIONS

GAO is making several recommendations to the Secretaries of State and HHS to improve the Government's overseas capability for detecting and treating refugees' health problems and minimize the potential of communicable diseases being transmitted to the U.S. population.

Also, several recommendations are being made to the Attorney General to (1) assure that refugees are not admitted to this country until the medical requirements of the Immigration and Nationality Act are met and (2) grant refugee medical waivers only when there are compelling reasons to do so.

AGENCY COMMENTS AND GAO'S EVALUATION

Federal, State, and local agencies made numerous comments on the issues and recommendations discussed in GAO's report. HHS and the State Department took action to improve the usefulness of refugees' medical records and medical examinations to both the Immigration and Naturalization Service and health departments. However, HHS—the lead agency responsible for setting health admissions criteria for Indochinese refugees—generally disagreed with GAO's recommendations to improve the medical procedures used in Southeast Asia.

HHS said that GAO's report generally overstated the public health risk posed by diseases in refugees. HHS cited several factors, such as sanitary conditions and medical care in the United States, which it believed rendered such diseases to be personal health problems and of minimal public health importance. HHS believed the American public's health was adequately protected by the current medical system.

Many State and local health departments said that the overseas medical process should be improved but saw some difficulties in doing this. Some believed the overseas medical work would be unreliable. Some said that the chronic nature of refugees' diseases would necessitate reexamining them after arrival in the United States.

The seriousness of refugees' diseases and the protection afforded to the American public is a matter of judgment; however, GAO believes that it would be more prudent to prevent the introduction of diseases into the United States rather than attempt to deal with them afterward. Therefore, GAO believes that the overseas medical examination and treatment procedures should be improved.

In May 1982, the House Committee on the Judiciary, in a report on pending refugee assistance legislation (H.R. 5879), authorized $14 million in fiscal year 1983 to defray costs to health departments for medical screening and treatment of refugees. The Committee also instructed HHS, State, and Justice to improve the overseas medical processing of refugees. The Committee's dual approach of increasing medical care to refugees both overseas and in the United States should help improve the health of refugees and protect the American public.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

We recommend that the Secretary of HHS arrange with the Secretary of State to change the procedures for giving overseas medical examinations to Indochinese refugees destined for the United States and request that a medical history and examination for each refugee be performed by a physician using medical procedures commonly used in the United States. This examination should include:

An examination for diseases commonly found in Southeast Asia—tuberculosis, leprosy, parasites, hepatitis B, and malaria. The examination for tuberculosis should include analyses of sputum cultures to further verify the presence or absence of the disease.

An evaluation for mental illness.

An examination of body systems to help the physician determine if the refugee is suffering from a health problem which may affect his or her ability to earn a living in the United States.

Because of the high incidence of tuberculosis in refugees under age 15 and the significant number of cases undetected overseas in this group, we recommend that the Secretary require that all refugees under age 15 be tested for tuberculosis.

We also recommend that treatment be initiated and completed in Southeast Asia for refugees with active tuberculosis, malaria, amebiasis, or giardiasis before they are cleared to enter the United States. In the case of leprosy, the treatment should be sufficient to render the patient noninfectious.

In addition, we recommend that the Secretary transmit to the State or local health department at the refugee's destination all pertinent medical information available on the refugee.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE SECRETARIES OF STATE AND HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

We recommend that the Secretaries ensure that medical records developed and maintained while refugees in overseas camps are under the care of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees are transferred to the overseas physicians before they perform the medical admissions examinations.

We also recommend that the Secretaries require that the results of overseas medical examinations be provided to INS officials for use in INS' final determinations of eligibility of refugees for entry into the United States.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

We recommend that the Attorney General:

Not admit refugees into the United States until they have received a thorough medical examination to diagnose health conditions specified in the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Require that the results of medical examinations be used in making final determinations concerning the eligibility of refugees for admission.

Not admit refugees with active tuberculosis, infectious leprosy, amebiasis, giardiasis, and malaria until treatment for these diseases has been completed, unless compelling reasons exist to justify a medical waiver.●

THE HIDDEN EFFECTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, our Committee on Appropriations reported out House Joint Resolution 562, the urgent jobs supplemental bill. The resolution specifies that 85 percent of the funds will provide temporary employment to thousands of jobless to work on essential public works and public health and safety activities in communities experiencing high unemployment. This legislation is badly needed given the impact of this current recession on unemployment. The unemployment rate has climbed from 7.2 percent in July 1981 to 9.8 percent in July 1982, which means that almost 10.8 million persons are currently jobless. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that each 1-percent increase in unemployment adds $25-30 billion to the Federal deficit because of lost tax revenues and increased costs for unemployment compensation, welfare payments, and other forms of public assistance.

We have heard countless stories about the hardships endured by the jobless, the hopelessness facing the unskilled, the obstacles encountered by minority jobseekers, the dashed dreams of those who fled to another region of the country in search of employment. But do we fully understand the depth of frustration felt by the jobless, of the emotions with which he or she is forced to cope?

According to the National Institute of Mental Health, a series of studies underway since 1977 have found that declines in the work force are significantly related to reported child abuse. Other studies have demonstrated that increases in unemployment are usually followed by increases in the rates of suicide and other health problems. As early as 1976, a study presented to the Joint Economic Committee contained some shocking correlations between unemployment and health problems. When enemployment rises 1 percent, the study indicated, 4.3 percent more men and 2.3 percent more women are admitted to State mental hospitals for the first time; 4.1 percent more people commit suicide; 5.7 percent more people are murdered; 4 percent more wind up in State prisons; and over a 6-year period, 1.9 percent more people die from heart disease, cirrhosis of the liver and other stress-related chronic ailments. The study estimated that the economic slump of 1970, with its 1.4-percent rise in unemployment, was linked to 51,570 additional deaths by 1975 and cost our society nearly $7 billion in lost income due to illness and mortality, and in added States prison and mental hospital outlays.

These problems will exist even after our economy begins to recover, a terrible price to society. Lives are being thrown into turmoil, more each day, and I am very concerned that we in Congress are not responding appropriately.

Apparently lured by the administration's promises of prosperity, the Congress has given President Reagan everything he has asked for. And what have the working men and women received in return? Certainly not the 13 million new jobs the President promised his program would create. Nor the period of economic growth his tax policies were supposed to stimulate. Instead, we are faced with 3 million additional unemployed workers, 400,000 more discouraged workers who have given up looking for jobs, and the worst rate of business failures since 1933. In short, we are experiencing the worst recession in 40 years.

The facts clearly show that for many of the 10½ million unemployed persons in this country, as well as their family and friends, Reaganomics has created an environment of deep frustration and lost hope. For the sake of this country, for the sake of all those faceless statistics, it is time we adopt a new course based on full employment. I urge all of you to join with me in support of such efforts.●

THE DAY THE BUBBLE BURSTS

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, Time recently quoted an officer of the Chase Manhattan Bank as saying that: "If Latin America goes into default, it will bring down all the major banks in this country."

William Quirk argues the present insolvency of the Nation's second largest bank, Citibank, and the pending insolvency of still others in "Busted Flat on Wall Street" from The New Republic. His analysis of the situation is extremely important, and I hope my colleagues will attend to it.

BUSTED FLAT ON WALL STREET

(By William J. Quirk)

The mattress doesn't pay interest, but it's probably safer.

Is Citibank bust? Do its liabilities exceed the value of its assets? It sure looks that way.

The specter of major bank failures was first raised by the banks themselves when they were pressuring the Reagan Administration for the $400-million midnight bailout of the Polish grain loans. The banks persuaded the Administration not to declare Poland in default because it would set off other default declarations, and, as a New York Times account put it, "no one was sure where it might end." Presidential counselor Ed Meese explained: "If we should require these banks to exercise the default clause in the contracts, this could plunge a number of banks, particularly in Europe, into bankruptcy."

The Meese explanation conjures up a picture of Western banks swooping and exploding like alien creatures in a game of Space Invaders. The savings and loans and savings banks are already popping spectacularly: more than four hundred have been merged out of existence in the last eighteen months. The commercial banks are now failing at the highest rate since 1942. The chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, William Isaac, explains why: "A combination of the recession and a prolonged period of high interest rates are finally having an effect on the ability of borrowers to repay loans." When the Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma City went under, it took $190 million of uninsured deposits with it. For the first time since the Depression a large number of uninsured depositors will take a loss. It's beginning to look a bit like 1933, when Senator Carter Class of Virginia, author of the Federal Reserve Act, described the banks as falling "like the leaves in Vallambrosa."

The chairman of Citibank, Walter Wriston, has certainly shown the shortness of temper of someone who believes himself put upon. Early this year The New York Times got hold of a ton of leaked documents and ran a front-page story on the 3-to-1 vote of the Securities and Exchange Commission to kill the recommendation of its staff that enforcement proceedings be brought against Citibank. The issue was whether Citibank had cooked the books to shift foriegn profits from foggy London to the sunny Cayman Islands, a favorite tax haven. "Thousands of false documents," said the staff reports, were used to make things appear other than they were. There was also no question that Citibank had fired an employee who reported the fancy bookwork to the SEC.

Was this anything for Chairman Wriston to get excited about? The SEC staff should not be that big an irritant to the head of New York's largest bank, the second largest in the United States, with $119 billion of assets and fifty-eight thousand employees. Yet Mr. Wriston wrote the Times on February 23:

Gentlemen:

Joseph McCarthy in his "best days" could not improve on your caption under my picture in your paper. Finely crafted by some libel lawyer, it quotes some unnamed source that I "authorized disguised foreign exchange transactions."

I don't know what a disguised FX [the abbreviation is apparently Wriston's] transaction is, but if you imply that I ever authorized any illegal transaction, you are wrong. My memory is that the Times thought McCarty's methods were reprehensible, but now you have apparently adopted these as a model. It is a shame to see a great newspaper stoop to these methods.

The Wriston letter is notable for its clear and direct use of language. Normally, bankers use euphemisms as reflexively as preachers use analogies. A poor country is a "less developed country," and that gets abbreviated to "LDC"; a default is a "rescheduling"; a second default is a "re-rescheduling"; and "fund availability risk" is the possibility that tomorrow you won't have any money because the Arabs have pulled out their deposits. A sour loan is a "nonperforming loan," which gives the impression of a James Thurber seal who, when a ball is tossed at him, just lies there and looks quizically at it.

Last fall, in what was to become one of the best-kept secrets on Wall Street, Standard & Poor's dropped the AA rating of Citibank's parent, Citicorp, to AAA. The rating agency cited "reduced profitability levels" during the past two years. Specifically, it noted a management strategy to offer fixed-rate consumer loans and mortgages, installment loans, and credit cards in the hope of funding the loans with low-interest deposits. Citicorp has over $22 billion of such loans outstanding. Instead of profiting, Citicorp has had to cover by borrowing funds at very high interest rates, causing what the industry calls a negative spread.

Moody's followed suit on Citicorp in January, and in March issued an extensive report dropping the rating on nine major bank holding companies, including Bank of America, Chase Manhattan, Chemical New York, Manufacturers Hanover, Mellon National, and Continental Illinois. In a roaring understatement, the bank analyst John Ward observed: "Everyone's concerned about the banks."

Some of Citibank's business is as profitable as the dreams of greed could imagine. For example, it holds $2 billion in savings accounts. It pays the hapless depositors 5 percent and relends their money at an average rate of 17.8 percent. All by itself, this scam produced half the bank's total profit for 1981: $260 million out of $530 million. This source of easy money will diminish as time goes by, since, as the S&Ls have discovered, the old low-interest savings-account pigeons are getting smarter and flying to money market funds. Even better than the savings accounts are domestic demand deposits, $7.5 billion, on which Citicorp pays zero percent and and relends at 17.8. There's a flight problem here, too—checking accounts and other demand deposits were $10 billion a year earlier, a drop of $2.5 billion in one year. In 1960 half the funds of U.S. commerical banks came from demand deposits; in 1980 the figure was 17 percent.

Even so, it shouldn't be too hard to make money under these circumstances. As Walter Bagehot pointed out in his book Lombard Street, published in 1873, banking "ought to be simple; if it is hard, it is wrong." Certainly that was the view of William Rockefeller, brother of John D. and a co-founder of Standard Oil, who was a major figure in the history of Citibank.

Lately, however, Citibank has fostered a reputation for brilliant complexity. Its managers have been acclaimed as geniuses. The 1960s were smashing. In 1961 Wriston invented the Certificate of Deposit, a deposit with a time limit; in 1968 came Citicorp, the first-ever bank holding company, which permitted diversification and added more borrowing power. Both of these innovations would later cause trouble, but at the time seemed brilliant. Citibank staffed its branches aboard with, as Martin Mayer writes, the "same hard-driving, bright, vain people" who ran the bank at home. But the 1970s brought hard times: the foreign loans became a bad joke. The bank's foreign operations contributed two-thirds of total earnings, but it was increasingly clear that the principal of the loans would never be paid. Domestically, the bank's main strategy—increasing consumer business—had proved, as Standard & Poor's said, "more successful in generating consumer assets [loans] than consumer liabilities [deposits]." The effort at consumer business had also led to some spectaculars; in 1976 Citibank blanketed the country with twenty-six million unsolicited blue-and-white plastic credit cards. Naturally, people with credit problems accepted the offer. Consumer operations cost the bank $225 million in 1980 and 1981.

By 1981 earnings were hard to come by. Moody's reported that the bank was repurchasing debt—a "new and visible method of maximizing reported profits." The phony profit comes from retiring old low-interest debt (say an 8 percent note with a market value about half of its face value) and issuing a new obligation at market rates. The reduction in outstanding liabilities is technically a gain, although you are obviously no richer after than before. In 1981 Citicorp issued two million shares of common stock in exchange for $88-million face value of Citicorp notes paying 8.5 percent and due in 2007. The notes were held by First Boston and Goldman Sachs. At current interest rates the $88 million of notes were worth only $47 million, so Citicorp could report a $41 million gain. These phantom profits, together with a $61 million gain from the sale of real estate, accounted for almost 25 percent of its bank's total profit.

We have all been told it was our patriotic duty to pay absurd interest rates, formerly the province of the tommy-gun and cement-booties set, because it was part of the fight against inflation. Many were confused when the rates stayed up as inflation went down. Milton Friedman, who was recently questioned about this, said: "It's simple, the banks are getting even." All those years of listening to fixed-interest debtors brag around the barbecue about how the bank had financed their beach house and how they were repaying it with dollars worth 33 cents had taken a toll. In any case, with Citibank, the need for stratospheric interest is clear. In 1981, charging an average interest rate of 17.8 percent, the bank earned $13 billion on total loans of $72 billion. Since each 1 percent of interest was worth $720 million, a 1 percent drop in the rate—all the way down to 16.8 percent—would have reduced earnings by $720 million. Instead of a gain for the year, a reported $531 million, the bank would have had to report a large loss, $189 million.

Citicorp's 1981 annual report lists $1.1 billion of "nonperforming loans," an increase of 30 percent over 1980. Even though such problem loans do not pay interest, the bank leaves them on the balance sheet as assets, taking the position that they will ultimately be good. The bank won't specify the companies or industries involved, but the airlines, International Harvester, the S&Ls, and Poland are likely. If the loans were written off, as they should be, it would wipe out Citibank's earning for the next two years.

In the summer of 1980, Citibank laid down a big bet that interest rates would go down—and lost. Barron's reports that Don Howard, a Citibank executive vice president, brought $3 billion of intermediate-term government bonds paying 11 percent. He paid for the purchase with the shortest of short-term money—what bankers call "federal funds." These have nothing to do with government spending; they're the funds that banks lend to each other overnight, in order to meet federal reserve requirements. The price changes daily. At one point Citibank was paying 21 percent to fund an investment paying 11 percent. Even geniuses falter at times.

Citibank is so short of cash (what the bankers call liquidity) that it must borrow $5 billion of "federal funds" from other banks each night so it can open its doors the next morning. Citicorp owes $22.4 billion of short-term debt, "federal funds," and commercial paper due within a year. In 1981 it paid an average of 19 percent interest on these funds.

Citibank has done so badly in the banking business that it is now trying to become a fee collector. In the future it expects to live on fee income and service charges rather than on its interest revenue. Savings accounts, in addition to receiving their generous 5 percent interest, are now charged $1.50 per month if the balance is under $500. In 1981, the bank's fee income was 39 percent of net interest revenue. Fees are the coming thing in banking. One bank customer opened an account with $500 and left it undisturbed for a month. His statemeent showed a charge of $8.32, which was designated "EOM." The small print explained that EOM meant End-of-the-Month Charge, whatever that might be.

The market's judgment on Citicorp's troubles has been harsh. In 1973 Citicorp stock sold for $51.50—twenty-five times earnings. Today it sells for around $26—five times earnings. The bank is earning less, when adjusted for inflation, than it did five years ago. In the last few years, earnings have dropped severely: 1979, $614 million; 1980, $486 million; 1981, $465 million. This is not a lot to show for $119 billion of assets. Of course, $119 billion is a bit of an exaggeration; Citicorp holds a lot of fixed-interest mortgages and bonds, which are worth substantially less than their face value. If the assets were "marked to market," the bank would be instantly insolvent.

But all these gloomy facts are just prelude. The real trouble was that the geniuses didn't believe Lord Palmerston. In 1848 Palmerston said that, historically, the British government had thought it "undesirable that British subjects should invest their capital in loans to foreign governments instead of employing it on profitable undertaking at home." Her Majesty's government, "with a view to discouraging hazardous loans to foreign governments who may be unable or unwilling to pay the stipulated interest thereupon," had therefore abstained from taking up as international questions the complaints of British subjects against foreign governments that failed to pay. Finally, said Palmerston, in words designed to ruin Walter Wriston's next cocktail hour, the British Government has considered that the losses of imprudent men who have placed mistaken confidence in the good faith of foreign governments would prove a salutary warning to others, and would prevent any other foreign loans being raised in Great Britain, except by Governments of known good faith and ascertained solvency.

For governments of "known good faith," read $80 billion of loans to Communist bloc countries. For governments of "ascertained solvency," read $200 billion of commercial bank loans to poor countries such as Zaire, Zambia, and Malawi, sometimes referred to as non-oil-exporting developing countries. The main thing these countries have been developing lately is debt. When loans to them by international agencies and western governments are counted in, they owe a stunning $500 billion. Since they have run trade deficits for as long as anyone can remember, and will for as long as anyone can foresee, the prospects for repayment are nil. U.S. banks have loaned $83 billion to these poor countries, and are contractually committed to loan another $25 billion. Neither the Federal Reserve Board nor Citibank will disclose its share of these disastrous loans already made. A reasonable guess is $8 billion to $10 billion—which is about 200 percent of the bank's reserves, or enough to wipe out the shareholders twice over. Citibank's stated capital is $4.9 billion. U.S. banks have loaned $7 billion to the Communist countries, of which Citibank's share is probably around $1 billion.

The commercial banks accelerated their lending to the LDCs even after it was clear that repayment was impossible. Some time ago ("The Bankers' Dilemma," TNR, January 27, 1979) I wrote: "The problem seems to be that the American banks have loaned $37.7 billion which will probably not be repaid. Default on this much money would bust the banks which in turn would bust the country which in turn would bust the world." Undismayed, in 1980 and 1981, Western commercial banks loaned the LDCs a new $90 billion (over and above net of "refinancing" repayments). Now the banks say they are getting worried.

Mexico's public- and private-sector foreign debt is $75 billion. It says it needs at least $25 billion more this year, while running a trade deficit of $4 billion. The bankers bet on the oil bubble to pull Mexico out of centuries of poverty. Many Americans will be surprised to learn that Mexico has a line of credit with Mr. Volcker's Federal Reserve Bank. In April Mexico was so hard up for cash that it had to draw down $600 million of its $700-million line. About 40 percent of its people are under 16 years of age; when they grow up they may understandably, decide they are not responsible for their parents' debts.

Citibank is reported to have over 4 percent of its total assets in Brazil and earns 15 percent of its worldwide profit there; Brazil owes $63 billion of long-term debt and needs at least $14 billion more this year. Argentina owes $32 billion, which you could buy up cheap. Argentina had to reschedule its bank debt in 1976; at the time it only owed $2 billion. The U.S. banks probably have a greater stake in these countries than their own people do. Venezuela, previously considered a blue-chip credit, has $14 billion due within a year, and is having trouble coming to terms with the bankers.

At no point has Citibank claimed that its loans to Communists and dictators were intended to support U.S. policy or add to the measure of freedom in the world. Quite the contrary. The head of the bank's international division, Thomas C. Theobald, will go down in history for this statement: "Who knows which political system works? The only test we care about is: can they pay their bills?"

On July 12 the world's central bankers met at the Bank for International Settlement in Basel, Switzerland, to assess the degree to which international lending poses a threat to the world's banking system. A group of the central bankers, identified by the Financial Times as "the pessimists," estimated "that more than $200 billion of outstanding international debt is of doubtful or potentially dubious quality." Leading the doubtful list is the $80 billion of Communist loans, but there is also "growing concern" about the $210 billion Latin America owes. Most of the central bankers concede that high interest and recession are squeezing the poor countries. Others would not say so publicly, the F.T. goes on, "for fear of undermining the already fragile confidence of the marketplace."

The old "recycling" scam is coming to a bitter end. From 1974 on, the banks borrowed from oil-soaked Arabs, loaned to LDCs, and lived comfortably on the spread. At times, to add to the excitement, the banks would engage in currency speculation: borrowing deutsch marks at 9.5 percent and converting them to dollars to be loaned to Brazil at 17 percent. Now the scheme is unraveling at both ends. The LDCs are still so poor they can never pay back what they already owe, let alone the new funds they must have. At the other end the Arabs, having induced a worldwide recession, now need money themselves; in 1980 OPEC ran a $105-billion surplus, but is expected to show a deficit this year. The Arabs will have to pull out their short-term deposits, busting the banks, which cannot recall their loans so quickly—if at all.

Recently, Mr. Kit MacMahon, deputy governor of the Bank of England, recalled that the central bankers had promised, in the mid-1970s, to act as lenders of last resort to provide liquidity for the Euromarkets if needed. This means the central bankers will print up enough money to hold off a run on the international banks—maybe. The central bankers at the Basel meeting failed to renew this promise.

As far as Citibank is concerned, the foreign loans fall into two distinct periods: the original, or They Always Pay, period was based on the observation that countries don't disappear. Mr. George J. Clark, an executive vice president of Citibank, is a vestige of this early period. He recently said Citibank's new policy is to discourage reschedulings: "If governments set their priorities and rearrange their financial affairs, virtually all of them can meet their obligations. I can envision the day when we do only a few, if any, reschedulings."

Chairman Wriston demonstrates the current, or They Never Pay, period. He was asked on "Face The Nation" last January 24 how Poland could possibly pay any interest—much less principal—due in the future. He replied: "As far as paying off debt is concerned, there are very few instances in history when any government has ever paid off debt. . . . What we are talking about is access to a marketplace." "Market access," of course, is another euphemism for more borrowing.

The rest of the year is sure to have its moments. One unnamed U.S. official recently told the Wall Street Journal that 45 percent of the $300 billion in international loans is due this year: "There's an increasing concern just about getting through the next year or so. If there's a panic reaction anywhere, it could lead to an implosion of the system." The bank's bad loans have created the purchasing power which has given the world the greatest inflation since Roman times. The banks manufactured the money to escape one reality after another. The LDC deficit is still rolling along, and the banks are left with only two choices. They can loan more money if they can get it. Or they can stop and watch the LDCs go off like a string of Chinese firecrackers, with the banks as the cherry bomb on the end.

Along with other commercial banks, Citibank, in apparent recognition of its big problems, has silently latched on to an S&L bailout now rolling through Congress. Under the bailout, the taxpayer will get to put money into failed banks to keep them floating along. Euphemistically called a "capital infusion" plan, the bailout is supposedly to help out the poor S&Ls, but the commercial banks will be the main beneficiaries.

The reality is that Citibank is bust. The true value of what it owns is less than what it owes. It has made a lot of stupid loans that are not going to be repaid. Once the bankruptcy of Citibank is established, there is not much more to say. Except perhaps that when you're dead you're not supposed to be walking around.●

KREMLIN USES BILLY GRAHAM

HON. LARRY McDONALD

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, Billy Graham's recent trip to the Soviet Union was a propaganda triumph for the Soviet Union. The Soviets succeeded in getting Billy Graham to say things about the freedom of the churches in the Soviet Union that they themselves hesitate to say in their own propaganda. They gave him an officially conducted tour through the state approved churches, with state approved ministers, and they even went so far as to stack the congregations with KGB members to insure that everything went according to the script. The State Committee for Religous Affairs attached to the Soviet Council of Ministers, (also overseen by the KGB), saw to it that Billy Graham saw and did only the correct things. Billy Graham, instead of chaffing at this treatment, did even better than they expected. Billy Graham saw none of the suffering Christians and Jews in the forced labor camps. He saw none of the true church in the Soviet Union that has to meet furtively in people's homes or in the forests for services. He, evidently, knows nothing of a young Soviet citizen, who while serving in the Red Army, was beaten to death for his beliefs. He knows nothing of children taken away from their parents for teaching belief in God at home. He appears to be unaware of the fact that smuggling a Bible into the U.S.S.R. is a crime against the state, but the traffic flourishes. He did a disservice to his calling and the cause of religious freedom the world over by his visit to the U.S.S.R. This whole, sad affair, was recently summed up in the Birch Log by John F. McManus in the July 8, 1982, issue of that publication. The item follows:

[From the Birch Log, July 8, 1982]

KREMLIN USES BILLY GRAHAM

(By John F. McManus)

BELMONT, MASS.—It must be a constant delight for the leaders of world Communism to note that the people whom they are working to enslave have so little appreciation of what Communism is all about.

The world should be well aware that Communism's fundamental premise is a denial of God and the supplanting of His law with rule of all by a few ruthless criminals. Communist morality is, of course, no morality, a tenet confirmed by Lenin as follows: "Our morality is entirely subordinated to the interests of the class struggle."

For most of the Twentieth Century, Communist leaders translated their words into actions by murdering churchmen and closing their churches. But when they either found or trained clergymen who would overlook Red crimes and preach socialism from pulpits, they began a working relationship with religion, not only in conquered nations but in the United States and elsewhere. Far from being a contradiction of Communism's real attitude about religion and morality, the use of churchmen to preach Communist goals or to foster a belief that it has mellowed has helped immeasurably to spread Red terror.

BILLY GRAHAM CHANGES TUNE

Twenty-five years ago, Rev. Billy Graham clearly understood all of this. But the man who then declared that Communism was "inspired, directed and motivated by the Devil himself" has softened his attitudes tremendously. Years ago, he condemned America's leaders for "silence during the 1956 Hungarian rebellion" and for "failing to aid the Cuban freedom fighters at the Bay of Pigs." As late as 1965, he declared: "Communist China is the most dangerous enemy of freedom in the world."

By 1970, however, Graham was refusing to condemn Communism, saying instead: "I cannot go around the world and say who is right and who is not right." In 1972, he defended Richard Nixon's announced plan to visit Red China's bloody tyrants. One year later while in Japan, he proclaimed: "Mao Tse-tung's eight precepts are basically the same as the Ten Commandments." He then promptly denied that he had uttered such a blasphemy, but the journalist who reported it impressively stood by her story.

NOW WELCOME IN RED TERRITORY

In 1977, Graham conducted a religious crusade in Communist Hungary where Cardinal Mindzenty and so many others had been persecuted. There he admitted: "During the last five years, my heart has been expanding and changing to take in all the churches of the world." But as far back as 1966, his World Congress on Evangelism had endorsed the World Council of Churches, whose membership included the KGB-directed Orthodox Churches of Russia, Romania, Bulgaria and Poland.

Earlier this year, many Americans who have been unaware of Billy Graham's strange conversion were shocked to read that during his trip to Moscow in May, he praised "religious freedom" in the Soviet Union. He also stated that the Orthodox Churches he visited "were jammed to capacity" and that "you would never get that in Charlotte, North Carolina." Even if he chooses to overlook the known fact that these churches in Russia are led by Kremlin-approved KGB functionaries in clergymen's garb, he ought to acknowledge that the few churches are full precisely because there are so few. Charlotte Pastor Charles Page responded by saying that his church was full and added: "I find it hard to believe that they (the Russian people) are not experiencing a great deal of suffering over there in order to worship."

Not in Russia on purely church business, Graham was there to take part in a Soviet-sponsored conference on nuclear weapons. Vice President Bush, acting in the name of President Reagan, had sought to persuade him to stay home. Their fear was that he would be used to promote Soviet aims. Perhaps they did not know that what they tried to prevent has been going on for a long time.

WHISTLE BLOWER FIGHTS FORCED TRANSFER ATTEMPT

HON. JACK BROOKS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues two recent newspaper articles from the Washington Times written by Clark R. Mollenhoff. These articles point out yet another area where DOD is wasting hundreds of millions of dollars in weapons contracts.

According to the articles, Air Force Secretary Verne Orr issued a directive aimed at cutting back on excessive contractor costs. Secretary Orr should be complimented for the decisive action he has taken to eliminate these abuses. I commend these articles to my colleagues and urge all Members to support the Secretary in this matter.

[From the Washington Times, Aug. 19, 1982]

WHISTLE BLOWER FIGHTS FORCED TRANSFER ATTEMPT

(By Clark R. Mollenhoff)

A veteran audit chief for the Defense Contract Audit Agency (DCAA) is being pressured to accept an unwanted transfer or resign after disputes with superiors over the need for agency-wide audits of labor union contracts that add millions in "excessive costs" to major military weapons systems.

George R. Spanton, a 30-year veteran of military contract auditing, filed a controversial report last March 13 pinpointing at least $150 million in "this unwarranted waste of public funds" caused by "excessive wage escalations" in the labor agreements of one major defense contractor.

Spanton, in an appeal filed with the special counsel at the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board, claimed his transfer from Palm Beach, Fla., to Los Angleles, Calif., was an illegal retaliation for pointing out the laxity and compromises of DCAA superiors during inadequate and ineffective audits of major defense contractors.

Spanton had no objection to The Washington Times reviewing the papers he filed with the special counsel's office, established to protect whistle-blowers on fraud and corruption from retaliation by superiors.

Harold Lamb, special assistant to DCAA Director Charles Starrett, said the DCAA was "not prepared to comment" on the charges of an illegal retaliatory transfer of Spanton.

Lamb said the DCAA would comment "tomorrow" on Spanton's request for an agency-wide audit of excessive wage escalations in defense contracts.

The DCAA also will review Air Secretary Verne Orr's directive on the need for tighter policies on excessive wage hikes involving defense contractors.

Ironically, Orr's policy directive to Air Force contract negotiators sets out essentially the same line as Spanton's controversial report.

Orr's directive on the millions being lost through defense contract labor agreements was the result of his thoughtful observation after more than a year as Air Force secretary.

He said his disputes with superiors involved instances where he believed "the DCAA mission was being compromised by timidity in dealing with defense contractors who barred direct access to records and expected us to be satisfied with summaries or partial access to records."

"A half audit is no audit," Spanton said.

Spanton was pleased to find, he said, that Orr's directive to Air Force contract officials "was totally consistent with my thinking."

Several months ago he tried to get his DCAA superiors in the Atlanta regional office and Washington to approve an agency-wide audit of major defense contractors by arguing that billions probably were being lost annually through uncontrolled labor agreements that boosted wages from 15 to 18 percent a year while federal salary raises are restricted to from 4 to 8 percent.

When Spanton persisted in his campaign for an audit of all major contractors on labor, he received a cold shoulder and notice that he was being transferred because he could not get along with his superior in Atlanta.

When Spanton attempted to get the Washington office to examine his report, he learned that he still was being transferred to Los Angeles despite his protests.

"It is necessary for us to relocate you by no later that 15 September 1982," wrote James R. Brown, deputy director of DCAA on May 11. "Your failure to relocate by that date will be grounds for possible disciplinary action including removal."

In late May, Spanton made one more attempt in a report on waste in labor costs.

Fearful the Atlanta office would delay forwarding the controversial report, Spanton simultaneously sent the report to DCAA headquarters in Washington.

Washington DCAA officials asked the Atlanta office to call Spanton's attention to the proper chain of command for filing such documents and they ignored the substance of the special report.

They were no longer ignoring the Spanton reports Wednesday when they had a special request for them from Air Force Secretary Orr's office and from the House Government operations subcommittee headed by Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, an outspoken critic on Pentagon waste and mismanagement.

Brooks' subcommittee staff has received the two Spanton reports on "excessive costs" resulting from uncontrolled labor union contracts. The subcommittee has oversight responsibilities over military spending and over the manner in which the auditing policies of DCAA control and expose unwarranted military costs.

AF CHIEF ACTS TO CURB WAGE RISES FOR LABOR FORCES BUILDING WEAPONS

(By Clark R. Mollenhoff)

Air Force Secretary Verne Orr has directed Air Force contract negotiators not to buy labor peace with contract settlements containing wage agreements that are excessive when compared with federal government pay guidelines.

"I am fully prepared to accept work stoppages in some of our weapons acquisition programs, if that is what it takes to bring inflation under control and to bring wage settlements down to the level which the federal government deems adequate for its own people," Orr wrote on April 15.

Orr acknowledged Monday that he personally wrote the tough internal directive "to try to stiffen the backs" of Air Force contracting officers on negotiated contracts that are not now controlled by the government pay lids imposed by the Reagan administration in its fight against inflation.

"It makes no sense to have pay lids on government salaries at 5 to 8 percent and have these procurement officers come in here on negotiated contracts and explain that the best they could do was to limit the wage boosts to 16 or 18 percent," Orr said.

The eight-paragraph policy directive was addressed to Russell Hale, deputy assistant secretary in charge of financial management. It said: "Will you see that this policy is distributed widely to the civilian and military members who negotiate with our contractors. It should be made available to the contractors before they complete labor negotiations and not after."

He noted in the first paragraph of the directive that when President Reagan's budget is submitted to Congress "there is a 5 percent cost-of-living raise for civilian personnel and 8 percent for military."

"I think it is absolutely ludicrous to expect all elements of government and all retirees and pensioners from government to undergo strict limitation of their receipts from our federal government while at the same time, through our contracts, we pay substantially larger increases to labor forces building our weapons systems," he wrote.

In asking contract negotiators to "make every effort to see that we do not pay negotiated wage settlements to weapons producers which are greater than" federal pay policies, he added:

"This may involve insisting that some contractors take the excess negotiated payments out of their profits. It could even involve a case where there are work stoppages."

Orr said he had no idea of how much defense money is lost through excessive wage boosts for labor unions or other defense contract or employees. He estimated it could run into the hundreds of millions of dollars and perhaps more.

Orr said he was not aware of any studies the Pentagon has done on the subject, and had not heard of a detailed 15-page report by George R. Spanton, a Defense Contract Audit Agency accounting chief in Florida.

Spanton drew on his 30 years experience as a defense contract auditor to write the report. It is accompanied by charts on "excessive labor escalation" resulting from firms with government contracts making agreements with labor unions and boosts to other employees far above the government pay lids.

The defense firm "granted raises which were 178 percent higher than federal employee escalation and 108 percent higher than all private industry (nonsupervisory, nonagricultural) workers," the report said.

Orr told The Washington Times he is interested in reviewing the Spanton report and will take steps immediately to obtain a copy from the Defense Contract Audit Agency.

"Obviously, there is a limited amount of good any Air Force secretary can do on some of these matters because of long-term contracts—many months before I got here," Orr said.●

SUPER NOW ACCOUNT

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, Newsweek magazine columnist Jane Bryant Quinn recently noted, "Banking institutions are mad as hell and they're not going to take it any more."

The object of the wrath of depository institutions is the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee—which is not in the opinion of a substantial and ever-increasing number of banking officials.

Recently the DIDC again confirmed the opinion of banking officials by effectively saying "no" to the Super NOW account which had been proposed by the South Dakota State Banking Commission. The Super NOW account, which had been approved earlier this year by the South Dakota Banking Commission, is identical to the existing NOW account with the exception of no interest rate ceiling on balances over $5,000.

The Super NOW account is a reasonable step in the right direction. The Super NOW account would further interest rate deregulation mandated by Congress and enable federally insured depository institutions to become more competitive.

The DIDC, unfortunately, has not been willing to move its feet or even wiggle its toes in the direction of the Super NOW account. To the detriment of consumers and increased competition, the DIDC has instead chosen to ignore the Super NOW account proposal. The DIDC pocket veto of the Super NOW account is not a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, to facilitate needed competition and in the interest of consumers, I am today introducing legislation which will permit federally insured depository institutions to offer the Super NOW account. I invite my colleagues to join with me in support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I request the text of the measure I am introducing today be printed in the RECORD at this point as well as a letter which I recently received from Mr. C. P. "Buck" Moore, president of the Northwestern National Bank of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., and the recent Newsweek article which I referred to earlier.

A bill to remove the limitation on the maximum rate of interest which may be paid on certain balances maintained in a negotiable order of withdrawal account

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, after the date of the enactment of this Act, no provision of Federal law shall regulate the amount of interest which federally insured depository institutions may pay on balances in excess of $5,000 which are maintained in a negotiable order of withdrawal account.

NORTHWESTERN BANK,
Sioux Falls, S.D., July 27, 1982.

Hon. THOMAS DASCHLE,
Cannon House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR TOM: This letter expresses my complete frustration at the inadequate action taken by the DIDC at its June 29th meeting.

When the Depository Institutions Deregulation Act was passed in 1980, Congress gave the DIDC as a directive:

". . . provide for orderly phase-out and the ultimate elimination of the limitations on the maximum rates of interest and dividends which may be payed on deposit in accounts as rapidly as economic conditions warrant."

At its recent meeting, the DIDC once again failed to fulfill its responsibility in the deregulating of interest rates on deposits. The account authorized by the DIDC falls far short of a short-term, low denomination, deregulated transaction account which the banking industry so desperately needs in order to continue to finance local communities.

At the meeting, the opening statement made by the DIDC Chairman, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, evidences my frustration in watching the actions of the DIDC. Secretary Regan noted that:

". . . after legislation has passed and the asset powers for thrifts are expanded further so these institutions (thrifts) can generate the earnings needed to pay for additional market rate deposits, I will urge the Committee (DIDC) to consider authorizing a truly competitive market rate, transaction type account."

What is abundantly clear from this statement is that the DIDC is not about to be responsible for the task of unravelling the structure of deposit rate interest ceilings, but is content to throw the deregulation question back at Congress. When the Depository Institutions Deregulation Act was passed in 1980, it was a consensus among many points of view and as such a compromise. Congress decided to turn the actual process of dismantling the rate structure to the Committee rather than involving itself in the daily push and shove of the deregulation process. I believed at that time this was a sound decision.

Intense lobbying by the various affected parties to delay the phase-out of interest rate ceilings is well documented. The Committee was expected to be able to reaffirm the need for deregulation of depository institutions without political repercussions, thereby assuring that an orderly process could continue uninterrupted by political machinations.

However, the statement by Treasury Secretary Regan shows that the DIDC is not going to fulfill its mandate, but instead would return to Congress the daily push and shove of the deregulation process. It seems ironic that Congress would create a committee and charge it with responsiblity, only to have the committee in turn charge Congress with a task before the committee will act.

I urge you as a member of Congress to instruct the DIDC to begin to do its duty. As a member of Congress, you can exert influence on DIDC to take positive action now, or in the alternative, pass legislation authorizing us to offer a competitive account.

Yours truly,

C. P. MOORE, President.

THE BANKS STRIKE BACK

(By Jane Bryant Quinn)

Banking institutions are mad as hell and they're not going to take it anymore.

For 10 years they have stood like pitiful, helpless giants while depositors pulled their savings out of banks and S&L's and reinvested in high-interest money-market mutual funds. Money funds now hold $216 billion in assets, and the bankers want it back. To get it, they're starting to fight the money funds on their own turf.

Where the law allows, they are starting a variety of money-fund look-alikes, combining high interest with ready access to your savings. Where the law does not allow, frustrated bankers are starting to rebel.

"Super NOW." The civil-disobedience campaign began last month in South Dakota. The state banking commission unilaterally eliminated all interest-rate ceilings on checking deposits larger than $5,000 and called this new account the "Super NOW."

Under federal regulations, the interest paid on insured checking accounts cannot exceed 5¼ percent. But two defiant banks in South Dakota started offering rates linked to those on 91-day treasury bills. Both banks backed down after the Federal Reserve threatened them with heavy fines. Last week, however, the state attorney general's office decided to sue the Federal Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee for failing to decide about the Super NOW and for dragging its heels on interest-rate deregulation.

Several other states are raising mutinies of their own. The Super NOW's are being considered in North Dakota, New Jersey and Ohio. Similar raids on federal rate ceilings are being planned in Utah and Georgia.

The savings banks and savings and loan associations already hold a potent—and legal—weapon against money-market funds. Since May the thrifts have been able to offer an automatically renewable, daily retail repurchase agreement, or repo for short. It's an uninsured investment, paying high and variable interest rates. You may withdraw your money from daily repos at any time without penalty. Some S&L's even advertise them as money-fund accounts.

Repos are often linked to interest-paying checking accounts. The first $2,000 or so of your deposit goes into an insured NOW account earning 5¼ percent; everything above the minimum balance is swept into a repo, currently paying around 14 percent. When you write a check for, say, $25, a similar sum will be removed from your repo to keep the NOW account at $2,000.

Repos are backed by U.S. government securities, which makes them safer than other uninsured deposits. But on a daily basis the value of the underlying securities may not match your actual investment. If the S&L suddenly folded you could take a loss. The risk is small, but it's there.

Only a few thrifts offer money-fund accounts, but they're bound to spread. Some commercial banks are tying NOW accounts to regular money-market mutual funds. By fall the banks should be authorized to give automatically renewable repos of their own.

Credit Unions: The only money-fund look-alikes legally covered by federal deposit insurance are the few begun by deregulated credit unions, among them the Monsanto Community Credit Union in St. Louis and the McGuire-Public Employees Federal Credit Union in Wrightstown, N.J. Both accept deposits from the public, but only credit-union members are insured. Unlike true money funds, these accounts pay no interest on balances of less than $5,000.

A handful of S&L's in Maryland and Ohio offer money-fund look-alikes that are privately insured. Private insurance is state regulated but carries no state or federal guarantee. Depositors rely entirely on the ability of the insuring institutions to meet their obligations. It's probably a good bet. The Maryland Savings-Share Insurance Corp. is backed by 102 S&L's. In 20 years it has suffered only one liquidation (in 1964) and one merger (1979). But there is no certainty outside of government insurance.

The Boston Five Cents Savings Bank hopes to attract deposits by starting its own money-market mutual fund. This makes the Investment Company Institute see red. The ICI, representing mutual funds, says it's illegal for banks and money funds to mix and is suing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. for doing nothing to prevent it.

Last year banks tried—and failed—to stifle competition by shackling money funds with legislation. With any luck the ICI's return match will fail, too. If the funds can't live with interest-rate deregulation, they should find something else to do.●

EFFECTS OF AGENT ORANGE

HON. MARGARET M. HECKLER

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mrs. HECKLER. Mr. Speaker, as the Veterans' Administration continues to grapple with the still unknown effects of the herbicide agent orange on those men and women who served their country in Vietnam, the discussion continues on the best method to test for the after effects of exposure to the chemical.

I would like to insert in the RECORD today an article which appeared in today's Boston Globe and which outlines the continued questions regarding the effects of agent orange. Those troubling concerns—the current lack of adequate testing and the still unfinished comparisons between soldiers exposed to the herbicide and control groups—should lead us to double our efforts to seek expedited yet complete answers to the hundreds of questions that remain.

As the second ranking Member of the House Veterans Affairs Committee I have long fought for VA recognition of the effects of exposure to agent orange suffered by some Vietnam veterans. I will continue to do so and welcome the efforts of my colleagues to bring recognition to the problem and thus find the answer—if there is one, or many—more quickly.

AGENT ORANGE TESTS CALLED INADEQUATE

PHILADELPHIA.—Two doctors told the first national convention of United Vietnam Veteran's Organization yesterday that current tests are often not good enough to give an accurate diagnosis for ailment that may have been caused by exposure to the herbicide Agent Orange.

"It's entirely possible that none is going to come with an answer," said Doctor James Erwin of the Veteran's Administration.

Doctor Ron Codario, a Philadelphia physician, who has studied 278 Vietnam veterans who think they were exposed to Agent Orange, said he understands Veterans' frustrations when doctors cannot tell them what is wrong.

But he said it takes time for the proper tests to be developed.

"Just because you have a battery of tests and the tests turn out normal doesn't mean there is nothing wrong with you," said Codario.

Edmund Miller of Buffalo, who served in Vietnam in 1970–1971, said repeated examinations have not discovered the cause of the heartburn and stomach disorders he has had since he returned from the war.

"They'll tell me what I don't have," he said, "they won't tell me what I have. I'd like to feel good again one day, but I need some help. They're treating my symptoms and not my cause."

Erwin said it still has not been determined what effect herbicides have on human beings who are exposed to them.

"The major group of people interested in herbicides have been environmentalists," Erwin said, "but even that group has yet to come up with a clear cut picture of what herbicide poisoning in humans is."●

MEDICAL DEVICE AMENDMENTS OF 1982

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced H.R. 7052, the Medical Device Amendments of 1982. This legislation, which amends the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, incorporates three changes requested by the Department of Health and Human Services. These amendments would improve the rulemaking procedures for developing safety standards for medical devices. They would also permit manufacturers of drugs and devices to disclose in labeling or advertising that the product has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). Further, they would repeal the unconstitutional Filled Milk Act.

In addition, I have included a provision which would require the manufacturer of a medical device to notify FDA when it learns of a defect in a device that presents an unreasonable risk of substantial harm. Once notified of the potential hazard, FDA could then investigate and determine whether corrective action (recall of the device, replacement of the defective part, and so forth), is required under its existing authority.

FDA has similar authority with respect to electronic products that emit radiation under the Radiation Control for Health and Safety Act and infant formula under the Infant Formula Act of 1981. The agency also generally imposes reporting requirements upon drug makers with respect to adverse drug reactions. Even agencies which deal with products less critical than medical devices have such authority. For example, the Consumer Product Safety Commission has statutory reporting authority with respect to most consumer products (for example, toys, irons, hair dryers, bicycles) that pose substantial product hazards. Certainly, FDA should have comparable statutory authority over medical devices which may be implanted in the human body or support bodily functions during an operation.

MEDICAL DEVICE AMENDMENTS OF 1982

SECTION 1: SHORT TITLE

Section 1 provides that the short title of the bill is the "Medical Device Amendments of 1982."

SECTION 2: PROCEDURES FOR ESTABLISHING PERFORMANCE STANDARDS FOR MEDICAL DEVICES

Section 2 amends Section 514 of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (FDCA) to substitute informal rulemaking procedures for existing law. Currently, the Secretary must use a novel form of rulemaking called the offeror process which requires third parties, rather than the Secretary, to develop proposed rules. In lieu of the offeror process, Section 2 requires the Secretary to comply with the notice and comment rulemaking procedures of the Administrative Procedures Act. In promulgating regulations under this section, the Secretary must consult with the advisory panel expert in that field of medical devices.

SECTION 3: INFORMATION FROM MEDICAL DEVICE MANUFACTURERS

Section 3 amends Section 518(a) of FDCA to require a manufacturer of medical devices intended for human use who obtains information that a device presents an unreasonable risk of substantial harm to the public health to notify the Secretary immediately of the defect. The manufacturer need not report if he has actual knowledge that the Secretary has been informed of the risk. An unreasonable risk of substantial harm exists when: (1) a medical device fails to comply with an applicable performance standard creating a substantial risk of death or serious injury to the public; or (2) a defect in a medical device creates a substantial risk of death or serious injury to the public. Failure to report a defect is a prohibited act under Section 301(q) of FDCA.

SECTION 4: REPEAL OF PROHIBITION ON USE IN LABELING OR ADVERTISING OF REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING DRUG OR DEVICE APPROVALS UNDER THE ACT

Section 4 repeals the ban in Section 301(l) of FDCA against the use of representations regarding FDA approval in the labeling or advertising of any drug or device. The effect of this provision is to permit the inclusion of accurate statements concerning FDA approval in labeling or advertising for drugs or devices. False or misleading statements are prohibited under Section 301(b) of FDCA.

SECTION 5: REPEAL OF THE FILLED MILK ACT

Section 5 is a technical amendment. It repeals the Filled Milk Act which was declared unconstitutional in Milnot Co. v. Richardson, 350 F. Supp. 221 (S.D. Ill. 1972). The Act banned the shipment in interstate commerce of milk, cream or skimmed milk containing added fat or oil other than milk fat.●

MICHIGAN SHOULD RETAIN WATERWAY CONTROL

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, on June 24, I was joined by Congressmen TRAXLER, SAWYER, and BLANCHARD—and on August 4, Congressmen DUNN and BRODHEAD—in introducing legislation which would block efforts by the Army Corps of Engineers to gain control of nearly 4,700 miles of Michigan rivers and streams.

Utilizing previously dormant authority granted under section 10 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1899, the Corps of Engineers' Detroit district office has proposed to expand its jurisdiction from 571 miles of "navigable" waters to a total of 5,227 miles—a seven-fold increase. These inland lakes and streams, not previously considered navigable by the corps, are already protected by strong Michigan environmental laws such as the Wetlands Protection Act of 1979 and the Inland Lakes and Streams Act of 1972. This unnecessary assertion of Federal jurisdiction runs counter to clear congressional intent that States should be responsible for the management of their water resources.

If the Corps of Engineers is successful, this change would result in a wasteful duplication of State and Federal regulation, and would seriously interfere with Michigan's efforts to assume full regulatory control of its wetlands under section 404 of the Clean Water Act. In a period of deregulation and administrative streamlining, it seems odd that the Army Corps of Engineers would seek to expand its jurisdiction and add another layer of Federal bureaucracy.

Mr. Speaker, I include here the text of a letter to Vice President George Bush from Michigan Lt. Gov. James H. Brickley, who has been the leader in this campaign against this expansion of corps authority in his capacity as chairman of Michigan Regulatory Review Task Force. I also include a letter from myself and a number of my Michigan colleagues to William Gianelli, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Civil Works.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR,
Lansing, Mich., March 12, 1982.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR VICE PRESIDENT BUSH: Because of our respective efforts to reduce unnecessary governmental regulations, I want to bring to your attention recent actions of the United States Corps of Engineers to expand their regulatory responsibilities over waters in Michigan. I am concerned by these actions, find them an unnecessary assertion of federal jurisdiction, and request that the Presidential Regulatory Relief Task Force review the Army Corps of Engineers' regulations.

Under Section 10 of the 1899 River and Harbor Appropriation Act, the Detroit office of the Corps has conducted widespread navigability studies, and the result of these studies may lead to an expansion of the Corps' jurisdiction over approximately 4,500 miles of streams in Michigan. Legal interpretations of the term "navigable" water have led to the possibility of this expanded role for the Corps in our state.

Michigan's concerns are further magnified in that we have actively pursued assumption of the Clean Water Act (Section 404) regulatory program. Assertion of Section 10 jurisdiction could not only prevent the state from assuming this regulatory authority but would dramatically expand the scope of the undesired duplication of state/federal regulation of the same waters.

I am quite sure that your task force will find this situation to be an unnecessary assertion of federal jurisdiction. Additionally, we believe that the regulations should be revised to prevent this occurrence in states like Michigan having adequate regulatory programs.

I appreciate your attention to this important issue. It was good seeing you in Green Bay.

Sincerely,

JAMES H. BRICKLEY,
Lieutenant Governor.

THE VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, March 22, 1982.

Hon. JAMES H. BRICKLEY,
Lieutenant Governor of the State of Michigan, Lansing, Mich.

DEAR JIM: Many thanks for your letter concerning the Corps of Engineers' expansion of its jurisdiction over waters in Michigan.

The Presidential Task Force on Regulatory Relief designated the Corps' Section 404 regulatory program for thorough review last August. The Corps has now developed its proposal for change, a copy of which is enclosed. One of the Corps' recommendations is to provide the states with greater responsibility for running their own programs. There is broad agreement on the need to eliminate unnecessary duplication of state/federal regulation of the same waters and to streamline the permit approval process. While it is unlikely that the Administration will act on all of the Corps' proposals, the state/federal issue will be one of the Task Force's highest priorities. Any comments you might have on the Corps' recommendations would be greatly appreciated, especially since you have focussed on an issue—Section 10 jurisdiction—that we may not have sufficiently addressed. In the meantime, I will make sure your comments are fully taken into account in our review, and I will keep you informed of our progress.

Again, thank you for your letter and for your help in the effort to reduce unnecessary government regulations.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR,
Lansing, May 18, 1982.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
Vice President of the United States, the White House, Washington, D.C.

DEAR VICE PRESIDENT BUSH: Thank you for sharing with me a copy of the Presidential Regulatory Relief Task Force's report on the U.S. Corps of Engineers permit programs. As you know, I had previously written to express my concern that the Corps, under Section 10 of the 1899 Rivers and Harbors Act, was planning to expand federal jurisdiction over an additional 4,700 miles of Michigan waters. While I support many of the changes proposed by the task force concerning the Corps' 404 authority, I nevertheless want to again express deep concern with the Corps' Section 10 jurisdictional expansion. In fact, we are most concerned that the reforms in the Section 404 process may well be lost through the proposed Section 10 expansion.

The enclosed report is Michigan's detailed response to the Corps reform proposal. In addition to supporting your efforts to streamline and reduce the bureaucratic processes of the Corps, we offer the following recommendations to resolve the navigable waters issue:

(1) The definition of "navigable waters in the United States" must be limited to what is commonly referred to as the "traditional, navigable waters of the U.S." This would require a change in 33 CFR 329, the regulations of the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

(2) Legislation should be introduced in the US Congress to prohibit the expansion of Section 10 jurisdiction by the Corps "solely on the basis of historical use in interstate commerce." A draft bill is enclosed in our report to accomplish this change.

I continue to believe that any expansion of Corps Section 10 authority over Michigan waterways is unnecessary and duplicative of existing state programs. I urge you to give careful consideration to the enclosed proposals.

Your continued interest is most appreciated as we both strive to improve governmental regulations.

My continued best wishes.

Sincerely,

JAMES H. BRICKLEY,
Lieutenant Governor.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., July 2, 1982.

Mr. WILLIAM R. GIANELLI,
Assistant Secretary for Civil Works, Department of the Army, the Pentagon, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. GIANELLI: It recently has come to our attention that the United States Army Corps of Engineers is taking action to expand its regulatory jurisdiction over several thousand miles of Michigan's waters. As U.S. Representatives from Michigan we are deeply concerned over this proposed change. We urge the Corps of Engineers to reconsider its position.

By changing the definition of "navigability" under Section 10 of the 1899 River and Habor Appropriation Act, the Corps would assume "supreme federal jurisdiction" over some 4,500 miles of Michigan's inland streams and lakes. In light of the lack of any demonstrated need for increased federal involvement in our state-regulated waterways, we view this action as being both unwarranted and unnecessary. Contrary to the President's goal of lessening the federal regulatory burden at the state level, this proposal would only lead to needless duplication of effort and resources between state and federal government.

We are concerned that this assertion of Section 10 jurisdiction would seriously hamper the efforts of our state to assume the direction of the wetlands regulatory program under Section 404 of the Clean Water Act. your proposed action would negate the state's progress in this area and would result in additional duplication of effort in a program which is now being assumed by our state Department of Natural Resources.

It is our sincere hope that the Section 10 regulations can be revised in a manner which will both simplify the oversight of Michigan's waters and protect the clear state role in the management of our natural resources. We would be pleased to lend whatever assistance you may require in achieving these ends.

Thank you for your consideration of this important matter.

Sincerely,

Robert W. Davis, James J. Blanchard, Harold S. Sawyer, Bob Traxler, Guy Vander Jagt, Dale E. Kildee, Howard Wolpe, William D. Ford, David E. Bonior, Carl D. Pursell, Jim Dunn.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR A MIDDLE EAST PEACE

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, when the evacuation of the PLO from Beirut is completed, attention can then be directed toward achieving a total withdrawal of PLO and Syrian forces from Lebanon. Once that is accomplished, an independent Lebanon with a central authority can become a reality.

It seems ironic that the defeat of the PLO was a necessary condition for a potentially peaceful settlement of the Palestinian issue. The PLO had brought nothing but despair to the people it claims to represent. Now, for the first time, Palestinians will have an opportunity to choose negotiation, and peace.

I have written to President Reagan, joined by colleagues on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee of Appropriations, urging the President to allow the true Palestinian voice to be heard, and to also press the Government of Jordan to join us in seeking autonomy. Surely those Arab nations who claim to be our moderate friends, and who wish U.S. arms, should be willing to participate in the Camp David peace process. The letter follows:

President RONALD REAGAN,
The White House,
Washington, D.C. 20500

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We applaud the efforts of Ambassador Philip Habib in bringing to a successful conclusion negotiations to remove the PLO from Beirut. We are hopeful that the evacuation will be carried out without incident and that subsequent steps can then be taken to ensure the withdrawal of PLO and Syrian forces from Lebanon and to guarantee a return to Lebanon's sovereignty.

With the removal of the PLO from Palestinian civilian populations, the development of free political expression can become possible. Palestinians have never before had the opportunity to choose peaceful negotiation. The emergence of free political expression will enable a resolution of the Palestinian issue that PLO involvement could never achieve.

It would be a grievous error to allow the PLO to achieve politically what it could not attain militarily. Future reconstitution of the PLO and its possible acceptance of United Nations Resolution 242 does not mean that the ultimate aims of the PLO would be abandoned. PLO spokesmen have unambiguously stated on numerous occasions that they will exploit any means, including political or diplomatic means, to achieve the ends so clearly spelled out in the PLO covenant.

We must begin to seize the opportunities before us. Israel has pledged, in the Camp David Peace Treaty, and reiterated in recent days, to proceed toward a peaceful settlement of the Palestinian issue. We urge your administration to encourage non-PLO Palestinian involvement in the autonomy talks, and to urge the government of Jordan to participate in the Camp David peace process.

Sincerely,

DEDICATION FOR ST. JOSEPH MEDICAL CENTER

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my name to the long list of persons who will be honoring St. Joseph Medical Center in Burbank on September 17.

On this special date, a dedication ceremony will be held for the opening of the hospital's new emergency rooms and cardiac care facilities.

St. Joe's as the hospital is affectionately known to many, has been providing the San Fernando Valley with skillful, caring medical service since its establishment in 1942.

At that time there was no health care facility in the valley so the business and entertainment community, led by Bob and Delores Hope, Walt and Roy Disney, Bud Abbott and Lou Costello, Ozzie and Harriet Nelson, joined together and seek a solution.

The Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles and the Sisters of Providence responded to the call and began construction of a 100-bed facility on land located across the street from Disney Studios and given to the hospital by Lockheed.

Now St. Joseph is the largest hospital in the San Fernando Valley. It operates a 498-bed acute care facility and the 149-bed Esther Pariseau Pavilion for Rehabilitative Care.

It is recognized throughout the State and medical community as an excellent institution. It is recognized by the people of the community as a great benefactor and an entity they point to with pride.

St. Joseph Medical Center deserves this credit as its history is a distinguished one, full of outstanding achievements and significant contributions.●

IN MEMORY OF ART SARRIS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, with the defense bill now on its way to the President, I would like to make a statement on behalf of Mr. HANSEN of Utah, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. MCCURDY, myself, and several staff people in the Congress.

Among the many items in the conference report is a section which will put a stop to the consolidation of critical supply and logistics functions away from the armed services. This may not seem like an important issue to Members who are not familiar with it. To those of us who have studied the problem and have worked to maintain the ability of the services to control supplies necessary to do their job, it is an issue with far-reaching implications.

The gravity of these consolidations was also apparent to Mr. Aristides Sarris, one of the finest civil servants it has ever been our privilege to know. We would like to dedicate our successful efforts of the last year on this issue to Art Sarris.

Whenever I hear anyone denigrating Federal civil service employees, I need only think of Art Sarris to appreciate how wrong the critics can be. Our country was never served by a more talented and dedicated individual.

For more than 30 years, he worked in the logistics field for the Air Force. He was in the best position of anyone to witness the steady accretion of power to a central agency which was strangling the Air Force's ability to perform its mission and which was increasingly wasting taxpayers' money. It appalled and outraged him. And rage was not a common emotion to this quiet, gentle man.

I first met him when he was one of about 20 Air Force officials to give short briefings which several Congressmen had requested. I was so impressed that shortly afterward I asked him to educate my staff and me on the issue of supply centralization. That turned out to be one of the warmest and most rewarding associations of my public career.

Consolidation of supply and logistics is such an apparently esoteric and mundane issue that Art Sarris found it difficult to get an audience. In 1980, he was given a $10,000 award for his work in the Senior Executive Service. In 1981, he offered to return the entire award to demonstrate the depth of his concern, just to be able to get some sort of airing of the issue in a fair and open forum. His dedication was also evidenced by his constant refusal to take the retirement that he became eligible for several years ago.

Finally in March of this year, the Armed Services Subcommittee on Readiness, led by our very distinguished friend from Virginia, DAN DANIEL, held 2 days of hearings on the consolidation of management of consumable repair parts. Art Sarris sat eagerly through those hearings and was called to testify and made his unique contribution to the public record. The issue was being exposed to the light of day; and from the merits, the conclusions were inevitable.

I do not believe it is melodramatic to say that Art had been to the mountaintop. That is about how he felt. Alas, he did not complete the journey down to the land he had viewed.

On June 19, Art Sarris suffered a fatal heart attack. The disappointment was acute in each of us, because this is a day we all wanted to share with him.

But, in much more than the transient moment of success, we will miss him. He set an example and standard which we will carry through our lives. The proof of the existence of any of us is not written in certificates of birth, death, or in any other documents. It is inscribed in the hearts of those whose lives we touch. So, Art will continue to live in each of us.

Tonight, we will quietly drink a toast to him. Here's to you, Art Sarris. We won; but the victory isn't nearly as sweet without you.

MOST FAVORED NATION STATUS FOR COMMUNIST ROMANIA

HON. LARRY McDONALD

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, it was with considerable dismay and anguish that I observed the House yesterday postpone action or even vote on the resolution of disapproval of continuation of Most Favored Nation status for Romania—H. Res. 521. This to me was a cowardly action that avoided facing up to the problem of the human rights of Christians, Jews, and minorities being persecuted in Romania. In that connection, I just learned that M. Traian Dorz, a well-known Romanian Christian poet, has just been sentenced to 2 years in prison after having served 14 years on previous occasions for his beliefs. Two other Romanians, Mr. Basil Riosheanu and Mr. Nucian Rusu have both been sentenced to 2 years each in prison for distributing the poems of Mr. Dorz. We mock our Christian-Judaic heritage by our lack of action. This body should be ashamed.●

TAX EQUITY AND FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1982

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that my vote against H.R. 4961 should not be interpreted as a vote against lower deficits.

One of the greatest strengths our country has is the freedom to disagree and I believe that is the situation with the responsible men and women of this body on both sides of the issue. After studying this legislation and weighing the evidence carefully, I simply do not agree that this is the most appropriate or best way to raise needed revenues—and certainly not the best way during this time of economic recession.

I submit, however, that the House of Representatives must share a large part of the burden for the flaws in this legislation. I objected at the time to the way the bill was maneuvered through the House of Representatives and sent directly to conference without consideration by this body—without even holding hearings on whether or not this bill could in fact raise the required revenues and whether or not the economy could withstand the impact of this measure. I believe this action violated the basic tenets of the Constitution and has resulted in a serious omission of creativity, fairness and fact in developing this legislation.

There are many examples of unfairness in the legislation but among the most troublesome are proposed changes to eliminate small-issue industrial development bonds after 1986. This would pose an unfair and unnecessary hardship on areas like Loudoun and Fairfax Counties in Virginia which depend on this program to attract new business and encourage economic development.

In addition, the proposed withholding of dividends and interest represents a costly and cumbersome way to improve taxpayer compliance. While we should all work to improve collection practices, this proposal would take money from savers and give it to the large financial institutions for a 30-day "float." In turn, all the administrative costs encountered by these financial institutions in complying with this new Federal regulation would, most likely, be written off as a legitimate business expense and the U.S. Treasury will not realize any appreciable increase in revenue.

Finally, one of the most glaring examples of the unfairness inherent in this bill is the imposition of a 1.3 percent medicare tax on Federal employees. Imposition of a 1.3 percent medicare tax on these employees coupled with an expected 4 percent cost-of-living increase, and the 10 percent individual tax cut, adjusted to 1982 dollars, will not only result in most employees having their entire pay increase and tax cut wiped out, but will also translate into an additional 3 percent average real loss in net salary for these employees in 1983 compared with 1982 levels.

While I represent probably more Federal employees than any other Member, I argue that not only this measure unfair to Federal employees, it offends the sense of fairness in each of us.

The people who are dedicating their lives to Government, should not be singled out to bear an unfair burden in this effort to raise revenues. I know of no other segment of society that will have virtually its entire tax cut eroded by this legislation.

I also recognize that there are many good features of this legislation. It is intended to close certain tax loopholes and that is an honorable and desirable goal.

On balance, however, this legislation falls short of its goal and our goal of helping the country and therefore I cannot support it in this form.●

HIGH TECHNOLOGY NIGHTMARE

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, a major aspect of the tax bill, which may have escaped the attention of my colleagues in this less than responsible procedure under which the tax bill was considered today, deals with high technology. Essentially the bill will decimate future research and development in this area. Gregory Fossedal explained this clearly in an article he wrote in today's Washington Times. It is just another reason why the bill in question is so fully unacceptable. I commend this article to the attention of my colleagues.

[From the Washington Times, Thursday, Aug. 19, 1982]

REAGAN TAX HIKE A HIGH TECH DISASTER

(By Gregory Fossedal)

A little-known aspect of the President's tax hike proposal is its potential impact on high technology industry.

The firms that dominate the high risk, high tech field are small and largely invisible. Total investment in research and development accounts for only 2.5 percent of America's gross national product.

That small component, however, will generate roughly 50 percent of the country's 1990 GNP. A major story in the Aug. 9 Newsweek outlines the importance of this dynamic sector of the economy:

"The stakes are enormous. Technology will set the economic agenda in the developed countries for the remainder of this century and beyond. Unless U.S. and European firms rally to the challenge, the prosperity and the jobs that flow from this new industrial revolution will almost certainly go to (Japan)."

And the Reagan tax bill, as it now stands, would be a disaster for the high tech sector.

Here's how the tax system works now for a small entrepreneur hoping to sell his promising invention:

The inventor seeks out a broker to sell his product to investors. He submits an estimate of the product's potential revenues, based upon its application to current industries.

Using that estimate, the broker is allowed to lease out shares of the technology to interested investors, based on its projected value. It's risky stuff, but investors know they have a sizeable tax writeoff if the project fails. Since the product being sold is an idea, something intangible, the entrepreneur can claim a large value for his product—and the IRS gives brokers and inventors a lot of leeway in this gray area of U.S. tax law.

Under the Reagan tax hike, two changes would occur.

First, estimates would be limited to a strict 2-to-1 ratio of cost. If an investor discovers a chemical that changes lead into gold, he can only lease out-shares in that technology equal to twice what he actually spent on lab materials producing it.

Second, brokers become liable for obtaining a strict estimate from the inventor as to the value of the new technology.

The effect on chancy investments would be chilling.

Investors would lose most of the tax advantages they can now claim from a failed project. Where the IRS has allowed leasing provisions of up to 10-to-1 for high tech sales, the cap would be 2-to-1.

And brokers, now legally responsible for any over-estimate on the part of the inventor, would be reluctant to handle high tech projects in their portfolios.

Winfred Savory is just such a high technology pioneer. Among Savory's new products is a bacteria that doubles the yield of oil wells pumped using "water flooding" techniques. The technology, if applied to all existing water flood wells, will produce an extra 5 million barrels of oil a day in the United States—roughly what we now import from the Arab countries.

When I asked Mr. Savory what the Reagan tax bill will do to high technology investment in this country, he responded:

"There would be no research and development carried on at all by small entrepreneurs. Large corporate research would remain pretty much the same—their work is internal, and carries easily-documented costs and benefits."

What would have become of projects like Mr. Savory's, or of Apple Computer, or of Texas Instruments, which all obtained initial financing partly through the current tax benefits?

"They would never have gotten off the ground."

The American Council for Technological Growth, which recently analyzed the bill's impact on high tech industries, agrees: "At a time when American investment in research and development is falling relative to previous levels and to foreign competition, any additional hinderance of capital formation in high-tech would have disastrous long-term impact on economic growth."

Contacted for their comment on these arguments, both the White House press office and the office of Sen. Robert Dole, the bill's main sponsor, expressed surprise.

"No specific study has been performed on the question of high tech investment," the White House said. "The changes in leasing are considered a matter of tax equity and loophole closing."

"No, we haven't heard those arguments," a Dole press aide admitted.

And no wonder. The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, as it is called, was a committee compromise tossed together in an atmosphere of political panic.

If indeed it is a tax reform bill, as the president argued Monday night, it is ill-considered reform: No hearings even addressed the question of the bill's impact on high-tech and other highly sensitive, highly important areas of the economy. It hits at small risk-takers in a dynamic industry.

If the Reagan-Dole measure passes, we had all better learn to speak Japanese.●

SOVIET DAY OF SHAME

HON. MARJORIE S. HOLT

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, 14 years ago Soviet tanks and troops rolled into Czechoslovakia to crush a movement for liberalizing reform of the harsh Communist rule the people had endured. The Soviet Army continues to occupy that country to maintain totalitarian control.

A brave people oriented toward Western ideals of freedom and democracy, the Czechs and Slovaks have suffered more than 40 years of totalitarian rule, first by the Nazis and then by the Russians and their puppets. They have never lost their hope of freedom. Even today, Czech and Slovak patriots are organized within their captive nation and tell the world about the nature of totalitarian rule.

It was on August 21, 1968, that the Soviet Army moved into Czechoslovakia to destroy the liberalization movement, but it was not a new example of how the Soviet Union deals with its neighbors. In 1956, we watched a Soviet invasion of Hungary to crush a revolt against the police state. Today we have the example of Poland being oppressed by a cruel military regime taking orders from Moscow to suppress the workers' Solidarity movement for more freedom.

Mr. Speaker, the prayer and hope of all of us is that resistance to Soviet rule will someday bring freedom to the people who long for deliverance from the Kremlin's empire.

Let us never shrug our shoulders and say that their plight is not our concern. Their concern is ours, because the Soviet leaders consider our freedom as an infectious disease that threatens their dominion. The Soviet leaders regard as enemies all those parts of the world they do not control.

That is the nature of the force that the people of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary, and others have endured. This is the nature of the force that confronts us in the world.●

SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF JAMMING OF WESTERN RADIO BROADCASTS

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, Friday, marks the second, sad anniversary of the most serious violation of the Basket III provisions of the Helsinki Final Act on the free flow of information. On August 20, 1980, the Soviet Union resumed massive jamming of the broadcasts of Voice of America, jamming which had been suspended for nearly 7 years.

Ironically, this clear violation of the letter and the spirit of the final act—which calls for "the dissemination of information by radio to meet the interest of mutual understanding among people"—occurred just 3 weeks prior to the opening of the Madrid CSCE preparatory meeting.

The Voice of America has been jammed intermittently by the Soviet Union since 1948. The jamming ceased, for the first lengthy period, on September 10, 1973—1 month before the opening of the Geneva CSCE meeting, whose deliberations led to the adoption of the final act in Helsinki in 1975. That action, which was publicly welcomed by the United States, was clearly a positive factor in the negotiations which led to the adoption of the final act. Just as clearly, the resumption of jamming on August 20, 1980, was a portent of the impending stalemate at Madrid. Jamming of the BBC and Deutsche Welle—which also ceased on 1973—was resumed at the same time.

What in August 1980 led the Soviets and their allies to return to the practice of jamming? The Soviets were attempting to keep from their own citizens the facts regarding the increasing toll of casualties resulting from their armed invasion of neighboring Afghanistan. There was also great fear that the developing situation in Poland—as the Poles sought a breath of freedom through the evolution of Solidarity—would "infect" their own citizenry and that of their allies. The truth about the successful development of the first truly independent trade union in the Warsaw Pact was deemed too dangerous to spread.

The Voice of America attempts to fill a gap between the final act's goal of "freer and wider dissemination of information of all kinds" and the present situation in the U.S.S.R., Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Bulgaria, where only information approved by those governments can be published and broadcast. The purpose of the Voice and other Western broadcasts is to restore some balance to these censored and distorted versions of national and international events, normally the only information available in these countries.

I might point out, by the way that Radio Moscow broadcasting in English to the United States averages more than 87 hours per week. It has never been, and never will be, jammed.

The negotiations at the Madrid review meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe are scheduled to resume on November 9. In recent weeks, the Soviet Union has reiterated that it will approach that meeting from the premise "that to follow the Helsinki spirit means successfully concluding the Madrid meeting." There is no stronger impetus that could be given to that goal than for the Soviets to immediately cease, once again, their electronic jamming of Western radio broadcasts—in accordance with the spirit and the letter of the Helsinki Final Act.

I challenge them to do so.●

A TRIBUTE TO MR. CONRAD E. RAHME

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, it is uncommon in these times to find an individual who has found a worthy cause and dedicated much of his adult life to it.

Yet, it is my privilege to ask this House to join me in recognizing and paying tribute to Mr. Conrad E. Rahme of Haddon Heights in my district for just such a reason.

Mr. Rahme is retiring this year on October 8 after dedicating 28 years of his life toward providing, improving, and administering a unique brand of education to the schoolchildren of Mount Ephraim, N.J.

For a great many of those 28 years, Mr. Rahme was viewed by all as a responsible source of stability in the school system. One who had the rare ability to have a positive affect not just on the teachers that worked with him, but also the children and school board members of the Mount Ephraim system. This illustrates the most admirable blend in this man of the teacher and leader.

But Mr. Rahme's devotion to education went beyond his employment. He served on the Mount Ephraim ambulance squad for 10 years, he was a 25-year member of the PTA, and for 18 years he served as secretary of the tri-community scholarship committee. He has served as the president of the Mount Ephraim Rotary Club and received a Paul Harris Fellow, the highest honor in the Rotary.

Mr. Speaker, Conrad E. Rahme is a rare individual who deserves this recognition and praise for his steadfast devotion, and for the example of leadership and humanitarianism he has provided to the children and adults of Mount Ephraim. Thank you Mr. Speaker.●

LEGISLATION TO REPEAL EXTENSION OF MEDICARE TAXES TO FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, imposing the medicare tax on Federal employees is, I believe, a mistaken decision made by the House and Senate conferees on H.R. 4961, and intrudes into a broad range of issues far beyond the stated purpose of the tax bill to raise revenues and reduce the Federal deficit.

It prejudges the recommendations of the Presidential commission which is scheduled to report next year on the status of social security.

It represents a decision by the conferees to further impact millions of Federal workers who have in the 97th Congress already endured pay caps, a freeze in health benefits, furloughs, reduction-in-force, and cuts in retirement benefits.

This week alone the tax bill, H.R. 4961, combined with the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, subjects Federal employees to a 4-percent salary cap in each of the next 3 years—far below the level of comparability with the private sector—and would then reduce that down to 2.7 percent.

The medicare tax provision also puts serious pressures on the operations of many existing Federal agencies. They will have to pay the matching share contribution of each Federal employee's tax, but the bill provides no funds for that purpose. In effect, agencies will have to absorb the cost of the medicare tax in addition to the already-scheduled 49 percent absorption of the October pay raise.

I believe that the conferees did not fully realize the ramifications of their action in approving the medicare tax. A decision of this kind should be made by an informed vote of the House of Representatives, not treated as a minor appendage to a major revenue bill. If this proposal was considered as separate legislation, the House would surely spend many hours debating and amending it under the normal legislative processes. That is why I am today introducing legislation to repeal the extension of the medicare tax, to provide a vehicle to allow the Congress to debate the issue on its own merits.

My colleagues on the Federal Government Service Task Force have attempted with me on repeated occasions to gain a chance to consider the medicare tax issue on its own merits. We wrote to Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI on July 19 and July 29 outlining the reasons that the medicare tax was unwarranted, and urged its deletion from the conference report.

We attempted to have a separate vote on the issue allowed under the rule, but our request was denied.

I reluctantly supported the tax bill, because I believe it is critical to address the deficit problem we face and it was the only vehicle available. If it had failed, I fear that pressures to make further drastic and immediate reductions in domestic programs and in particular Federal employee compensation and benefits, would have been overwhelming. We could have seen a renewed call for a pay freeze and even more restrictions on cost-of-living adjustments.

I sincerely hope the Ways and Means Committee will see fit to allow the House to consider the implications of the extension of the medicare tax conducting comprehensive hearings and reporting the legislation my colleagues and I have introduced.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SERVICE TASK FORCE,
Washington, D.C., July 19, 1982.

Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI,
Chairman, House Committee on Ways and Means, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN ROSTENKOWSKI: As Members of the Federal Government Service Task Force, a group of House and Senate Members concerned about the quality of Federal service, we believe that steps taken on July 16th by your committee to levy a 1.3 percent Medicare tax on Federal employees are inappropriate and unfair for many important reasons.

1. Overlapping Coverage.—The Medicare tax is slated to increase to 1.35 percent in 1985, 1.45 percent in 1986. Federal employees will pay, under your proposal, $421, $460, $507, $571 and $667 of pay over the next five years. For this increasing burden, they will either face shrinking coverage under Medicare as deductibles increase and copayments decrease or they will prefer to remain covered under their Federal Employee Health Benefit (FEHB) plans.

Since most Federal annuitants would retain their health benefits under the FEHB Program, Medicare coverage provided under your proposal simply means double coverage at an extremely high cost to government. Typically, the FEHB coverage costs the Federal government far less than Medicare. In 1982, the government paid an average of $451.32 per Federal annuitant covered by FEHB, but $1,548 for each Medicare recipient.

2. Medicare Tax in Context.—The proposed tax reduces the maximum comparability pay increase assumed by the FY 83 budget (4 percent) to 2.7 percent. The 4 percent cap heavily contributes to the widening gap between private and Federal pay—even when expanded comparability standards proposed by the Reagan Administration are taken into account. Eroding comparability, together with reductions in force, furloughs, last year's reductions in retirement and health benefits, and the threat that similar actions will continue, impair government's ability to retain and attract the quality of talent sorely needed during a period of recession and expanding defense responsibilities. We have begun to force the wrong people out of Federal service and this exodus may well cost many times the anticipated revenue gain.

3. Stabilizing Medicare Funding.—Expanding the numbers of employees served by Medicare can create more problems for the system than a short-term savings of $600 million warrants, Increasing medical costs in future years will more than offset the fiscal year 1983 savings projected by the Committee. In our view, the Committee's cost-containment approach to the Medicare system's problems has far greater potential. Such approaches should be expanded as quickly as possible.

4. The Need to Stabilize FEHBP.—Serious after-effects from last year's turmoil in the FEHB programs (resulting from actions taken by the Office of Personnel Management) have prompted the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the House to examine the relationship of FEHBP to Medicare. Rep. Mary Rose Oakar's Compensation and Benefits Subcommittee has been hard at work for months on a comprehensive effort to reform and stabilize the FEHBP. Last week's decision to tax Federal employees and bring them under Medicare does not appear to dovetail with the Oakar initiative despite the fact that identical constituencies are impacted. We find this piecemeal approach to Federal employee compensation, as we have said, particularly unfortunate. We also believe that any effort to restructure the relationship between Medicare and FEHBP requires extensive review in order to determine the long-term impact upon both programs.

For these reasons, we urge you to initiate and support steps to delete provisions levying the 1.3 percent Medicare tax as your Committee continues its present work. If you or your staff have any questions about the information we have provided, please do not hesitate to contact the Task Force staff at ext. No. 62494.

We hope that once you have had a chance to review the ramifications of the Medicare tax fully, you will agree that it is both precipitous, poor policy, and unwarranted.

Sincerely,

Robert T. Matsui, Vic Fazio, Frank R. Wolf, James J. Howard, Norman D. Dicks, Michael D. Barnes, Steny H. Hoyer, Toby Moffett, and Fortney H. (Pete) Stark.●

SISTER FLORA MARY MacDONALD

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, Sister Flora Mary MacDonald is among that very special class of women, long lauded by history, who has spent their lives ministering, with energy, skill, and love, to the sick and infirm.

For 60 of her 80 years, she has eased the pain of those with pain; she has sustained, encouraged, and strengthened those in need of sustenance, courage, and strength. She is the paradigm of the caring, devoted nurse.

In recognition of her dedication and faith, her grace and warmth, St. Joseph Medical Center will honor her on September 17.

Sister Flora Mary has played an important role in the history of St. Joseph's. She was the hospital's first administrator from 1944 until 1950. She returned as administrator in 1962 and held that position until 1972. Today, at the age of 80, she remains a caring, active hospital administrator in Washington State.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to take part in honoring this very special woman.●

COMPETITIVE SHIPPING AND SHIPBUILDING REVITALIZATION ACT OF 1982

HON. LEO C. ZEFERETTI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ZEFERETTI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of a very important and timely piece of legislation—H.R. 6979, the Competitive Shipping and Shipbuilding Revitalization Act of 1982. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my colleague, Congresswoman LINDY BOGGS, for introducing such essential legislation and spearheading the efforts to bring it before the House.

At a time when our maritime industry is suffering great losses, both economic and manpower, we must take a very serious look at what can be done to support and maintain our merchant marine and shipbuilding mobilization base. H.R. 6979 is a sound bill, which will give this Nation's two most valuable assets the shot-in-the-arm it so desperately needs.

Essentially, the bill would decrease this country's dependence on foreign shipping for strategic materials; help rebuild the bulk component of the U.S.-flag merchant fleet engaged in international commerce; provide needed work for the commercial shipyards located throughout the Nation; and provide substantial work for support industries such as mining, steel mills, and foundries, as well as manufacturers of fabricated metals/alloys, pipes and valves, propulsions and machines, and other materials and equipment.

Today, our U.S.-flag bulk fleet numbers only a mere 48 ships. In 1970, that fleet engaged in international commerce totaled 81. That is quite a decline and a decline we, as a nation and world power, cannot afford. If provisions are not made for replacement—such as this bill would entail—we can most assuredly expect this Nation's shipping capacity and defense base to be put in serious jeopardy.

I firmly believe, as my esteemed colleague, LINDY BOGGS, so rightly stressed, that the U.S. merchant fleet and shipbuilding industry can be revitalized through this legislation to meet the national requirements for an efficient and well-equipped merchant fleet. H.R. 6979 will give this country the capacity of fulfilling national requirements during peace and war and a U.S.-flag merchant marine capable of giving the United States independence from foreign shipping. Let me also point out that H.R. 6979 does not represent any additional cost to the U.S. Treasury—and only a very low-percentage increase in costs to bulk commodity exporters and importers. This is a very small price tag for stimulating vital industrial segments of the economy, increasing employment, aiding our balance of payments, adding tax dollars to the U.S. Treasury and fostering the growth of the U.S.-flag merchant fleet.

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly urge my colleagues to stand in support of H.R. 6979 and our merchant marine and shipbuilding mobilization base.●

THE LEBANESE CRISIS

HON. CHARLES F. DOUGHERTY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, during this time of trouble in the Middle East, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a statement on Lebanon recently issued by 18 prominent Christian and Jewish leaders of the Philadelphia area. I think it brings to the forefront the major concern of many Americans in the settlement of this crisis in Lebanon.

STATEMENT ON THE CRISIS IN LEBANON

All sensitive people are troubled by the violence and bloodshed in Lebanon and Northern Israel in recent days. As Christian and Jewish Americans, we share a special concern for the Christian minorities, Muslims and Jews who have paid a great price in conflicts that originated with armed intruders to the region.

We believe the situation in Lebanon must be resolved within a framework that both restores genuine sovereignty to the people and government of Lebanon and provides permanent security for people living near the Israeli-Lebanon border.

Therefore, in order to be of lasting benefit, any Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon must be related to firm guarantees for the withdrawal of Syrian and PLO military forces.

HON. TOM CORCORAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, due to a series of meetings with the President regarding the pending tax bill, I was unavoidably detained during part of the House proceedings on Wednesday and today. Had I been present yesterday, I would have voted in favor of the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H.R. 5540, to amend the Defense Production Act of 1950.

Earlier today I was absent for the vote on agreeing to the House Journal of yesterday's proceedings. Had I been present, I would have voted for this motion. I would have voted against the motion of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) to table House consideration of House Resolution 571, which dealt with the constitutionality of the conference report on the tax bill.●

AUGUST 27—HAPPY BIRTHDAY, PRESIDENT LYNDON JOHNSON

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, a week from tomorrow the Congress will be at recess as the Nation celebrates August 27 as the 74th birthday of Lyndon Baines Johnson, our beloved 36th President. Since Congress will not be in session, we should take care to think back, collectively and individually, and remember L. B. J.

L. B. J. was one of our strongest and most effective Presidents, and the long shadow he cast can still be seen in the Halls of this great Capitol. Clearly, he was "the education President." Just as clearly, he was a brilliant tactician and an effective administrator, as evidenced by his legislative accomplishments in both the 88th and 89th Congresses.

His legend grows larger each year, and in each Congress there are more and more stories told about L. B. J.—about his uncanny knack for knowing what to do in a legislative battle, about how to do it, and when. His Presidency meant more to the poor, the oppressed, and the dispossessed in this country than any other Presidency this century, with the possible exception of F. D. R., Lyndon Johnson genuinely cared about the poor, about minority cultures, about his fellow man—and he wanted to help. He wanted the Government to help. Finally, he wanted to be a part of the Government, and to grab that unwieldly instrument and make it work for people, make it help lift people up and give them dignity.

We do not yet know how historians, with the full benefit of hindsight, will rate Lyndon Johnson and his Presidency. Those of us who worked on his staff or served in his administration, we know that he earned a niche in history never to be diminished. And those of us who served in Congress during his years in the White House, and who knew and worked with him, increasingly we talk among ourselves about how much we enjoyed that time, and we still wonder at his mastery of the office.

He knew this House backward and forward, as he knew his allies and his opponents. Though he might have done some outlandish things, he did them with style and flourish. He was an immense man, full of complexities and driving ambitions, but, at his core, always a caring and thoughtful individual. L. B. J. was the consummate President; there may never be another like him. He was a man born to greatness. And we miss him.●

TO HONOR THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY YEAR OF THE 8TH AIR FORCE

HON. JACK KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor a request from one of my constituents, Mr. Don Keohane. Mr. Keohane was a member of the 8th Air Force, which flew heavy bombing missions over Europe during World War II. The 8th Air Force consisted of the bulk of the American airmen in England during the war. At least 300,000 U.S. airmen served in the 8th Air Force by the end of the war, yielding it the nickname. "The Mighty Eighth."

American airpower was greatly responsible for our victories in Europe during the course of World War II. Some of our Nation's bravest men were the crews of the B-17 and B-24 bombers who flew on complicated raids over Germany. Losses were high and each crewmember risked his life many times for his country, and for the cause of freedom.

Mr. Keohane was attached to the 390th Bomb Group of the 8th Air Force. For his service, we owe him a great honor, as we owe all members of World War II aircrews who courageously served their country. Therefore, I would like to add this "Resolution to Honor the 8th Air Force in its 40th Anniversary Year" to the record of this Congress.

RESOLUTION TO HONOR THE 8TH AIR FORCE IN ITS 40TH ANNIVERSARY YEAR

The Eighth Air Force was activated as a part of the U.S. Army Air Force on 28 January 1942, at Hunter Field, Savannah, Ga. Col. Asa N. Duncan was named the first Commander of the 8th Air Force (it was only a paper organization at that time—soon afterward the 8th Air Force Command was given to the famous "Tooey" Spaatz).

On 20 February 1942, Brig. Gen. Ira C. Eaker (Lt. Gen. (Ret.), now living in the Washington, D.C. area—he was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal on 17 December 1979) took the 8th Air Force Bomber Command Headquarters to High Wycombe, England. On 24 April 1972, Maj. Gen. Carl Spaatz arrived in England. He established the Headquarters of the 8th Air Force at Bushy Park, 15 miles WSW of London.

On 26 June 1942, a crew of the 15th Bomb Squadron flew in RAF Boston aircraft on the first operation of the 8th Air Force. On 14 July the 15th Bomb Squadron flew the first combat mission of the 8th Air Force with six aircraft (Bostons) flying in a RAF formation to hit airfields in Holland. Two crews were lost on this night mission.

On 17 August 1942, 12 B-17's of the 97th Bomb Group flew the first 8th Air Force heavy bomber raid of the 8th Air Force. The target was Rouen, France. Col. Frank A. Armstrong commanded the mission. The lead pilot was Paul Tibbetts (of "Enola Gay" fame, he dropped the first atomic bomb). General Eaker was in the lead aircraft of the second flight.

Lt. Gen. Ira Eaker took command of the 8th Air Force on 1 December 1942 (Spaatz went to North Africa to command the air forces there under General Eisenhower). Lt. Gen. Jimmy Doolittle took command of the 8th Air Force on 6 January 1944 (General Eaker moved to command the air forces in the Mediterranian area). Maj. Gen. William E. Kepner took command on 10 May 1945 (General Doolittle moved to the United States to begin setting up the B-29 units that would become the 8th Air Force in Okinawa). On 16 July the flag of the 8th Air Force was moved to Okinawa, with Jimmy Doolittle assuming command once again. The war ended before the B-29 groups in the 8th Air Force could become operational.

The 8th Air Force has continued in active service since its inception, serving in every armed conflict the United States has engaged in ever since. It presently consists of most of the SAC units east of the Mississippi River with headquarters at Barksdale Air Force Base, Shreveport, Lt. Gen. Robert T. Herres presently commands the 8th Air Force.

In World War Two, the 8th Air Force became the greatest single air arm of any country in any war, reaching a total strength of 200,000 persons by Mid-1944 (it is estimated that more than 300,000 Americans served in the 8th Air Force in the 3 years of war in Europe). At peak strength it could put up 2,000 four-engined bombers and more than 1,000 fighters on a mission. For these reasons the 8th Air Force has become known as "The Mighty Eighth."

Half of the USAAF casualties in World War Two were suffered by the 8th Air Force (over 47,000 killed). Half of the Medals of Honor awarded to airmen in WWII went to 8th AFers. Of the 406,000 Americans reported to have died in WWII, 11.3 percent were in the 8th Air Force.

In 1975 the 8th Air Force Historical Society was born. The function of this nonprofit organization is to provide for opportunities for 8th Air Force War Veterans to get together. It also has the mission of perpetuating the history of the 8th Air Force. This historical function is carried out by the sister organization of the 8th AFHS, the Eighth Air Force Memorial Museum Foundation, Inc. New members are signing up with the 8th AFHS at the rate of 140 per month at the present time.

To commemorate the 40th Anniversary, the 8th AFHS is sponsoring the 8th Air Force Reunion at Cincinnati, 6-10 October 1982. Lt. Gen. Jimmy Doolittle and Lt. Gen. Robert T. Herres are expected to attend, along with a number of former group commanders. Highpoints will include an Air-War Symposium (on Escape & Evasion and POW topics) on 6 October and the dedication of the 8th Air Force Dayton Memorial on the grounds of the Air Force Museum, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, at 11:00 a.m. on 9 October 1982.●

DEATH OF FORMER HOUSE MEMBER JAMES J. GEELAN

HON. LAWRENCE J. DeNARDIS

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. DeNARDIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to inform the House that one of its former Members has passed away.

James J. Geelan, U.S. Representative in the Third District of Connecticut from 1944 to 1946, died Sunday, August 8, 1982, at Yale-New Haven Hospital at the age of 80.

The Geelans are an outstanding family in the district, and Jim was a popular and well-liked individual. His son, James, is a friend of mine, and his brother, Bernard, who lives in New Haven, was a friend of my recently deceased father.

A Democrat and a labor leader, he won three straight elections to the State senate starting in 1938, before winning the Third District seat.

Mr. Geelan was born in New Haven, August 11, 1901, son of the late Thomas and Mary McDonnell Geelan, and was a resident of New Haven before moving to Branford 15 years ago. He was the husband of Elizabeth Doll Geelan.

A graduate of St. Anthony's College in San Antonio, Tex., he was elected vice president of the New Haven Central Labor Council in 1942. He lived at 52 Beckett Avenue and owned and operated Jim Geelan's Package Store in New Haven for 7 years until his retirement 10 years ago. He had leased five gas stations on the Wilbur Cross and Merritt Parkways for more than 20 years.

Jim Geelan will be missed by many people. He was a very important part of the political scene in my area for many years.●

REPLACEMENT MOTOR FUELS ACT OF 1982

HON. JAMES M. JEFFORDS

OF VERMONT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I participated in a special order arranged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. EDGAR) which I believe should serve as a reminder to the Members of this House that the energy crisis is not over. We are overly dependent on expensive and unreliable supplies of liquid fuel from abroad. I am encouraged that there seems to be an interest in innovative ways of easing our dependence on foreign oil.

Today, I am approaching legislation that I believe is the type of approach that can make a significant contribution to the development of new sources of liquid fuel without high Government subsidies. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this bill, the text of which is reprinted below.

The Replacement Motor Fuels Act of 1982 would require that, by 1990, 10 percent of each gallon of motor fuel sold in the United States must be a replacement fuel. The term "replacement fuel" is defined as alcohol, or other liquid produced from coal, oil shale, tar sands or other substance for the purpose of mixing with gasoline to be used as a motor fuel. The ultimate goal, by 1995, is to replace 20 percent or more, by volume, of the nationally projected consumption of motor fuel.

Without a doubt, the United States has the technical capability to produce fossil fuels from grains, garbage, coal, oil shale, tar sands, and other sources. However, Government research in these areas has been cut back and even with massive subsidies, synthetic fuels plants have had to be closed. It is clear that the United States will fall short of the goal of producing 500,000 barrels a day of synthetic fuel by 1987, and 2 million barrels a day by 1992, as spelled out in the Energy Security Act that Congress passed just 2 years ago.

My approach is to mandate a market for these products in order to create a certainty for the private sector in its efforts to develop these new sources of domestic liquid fuel. It is a concept built on the model of successful program of mandating fuel efficiency in motor cars. In spite of the sorry condition of the U.S. auto industry today, I believe we can safely say that it would be in worse shape if it were not for mandated fuel efficiency.

Best of all, this approach can make a contribution to energy security without increasing Federal spending or adding to the Federal bureaucracy. It puts the choice of process, product, and price in the marketplace where the working of competitive forces will give the public the most suitable products at the lowest price. In addition, it can be implemented quickly without elaborate contracts and complicated administration.

In the last Congress, the Replacement Motor Fuels Act had over 135 consponsors. Testimony on the bill was overwhelmingly favorable, indicating that this program could save about 700,000 barrels of imported oil each day by 1990.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to study this bill and join me in support of the approach of guaranteed market.

H.R. 7037

A bill to establish a program for replacing, by 1990, 10 percent or more of the gasoline consumed in the United States with alcohol and other replacement fuels derived from coal and renewable resources.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Replacement Motor Fuels Act of 1982".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is currently importing significant quantities of the crude oil needs of the United States;

(2) a substantial portion of such crude oil is needed for the production of gasoline sold in commerce; and

(3) renewable resources, coal, and other substances can provide a sufficient source of replacement fuels suitable for blending with gasoline to decrease the need for imported crude oil.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "alcohol" means methanol, ethanol, or any other alcohol which is produced from renewable resources or coal and which is suitable for use by itself or in combination with other fuels as a motor fuel;

(2) the term "replacement fuel" means alcohol or other liquid produced from coal, oil, shale, or other substance as may be determined by the Secretary, for the purpose of mixing with gasoline to be used as a motor fuel;

(3) the term "replacement motor fuel" means any fuel described in paragraph (2) mixed with gasoline for use as a motor fuel;

(4) the term "commerce" means any trade, traffic, transportation, exchange, or other commerce—

(A) between any State and any place outside of such State; or

(B) which affects any trade, traffic, transportation, exchange, or other commerce described in subparagraph (A);

(5) the term "motor fuel" means any substance suitable as a fuel for self-propelled vehicles designed primarily for use on public streets, road, and highways;

(6) the term "refiner" means any person engaged in the refining of crude oil to produce motor fuel, including any affiliate of such person, or any importer of gasoline for use as a motor fuel;

(7) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy;

(8) the term "United States" means each State of the several States and the District of Columbia; and

(9) the term "renewable" means any source of energy which is available in an inexhaustible supply in the foreseeable future.

REPLACEMENT FUEL PROGRAM

SEC. 4. The Secretary shall establish, pursuant to this Act, a program to promote the development and use of replacement fuels in the United States. Such program shall be designed to promote the replacement of gasoline to be used as a motor fuel with replacement motor fuel containing the maximum percentage of replacement fuel as is economically and technically feasible for use as a motor fuel.

DEVELOPMENT PLAN AND PRODUCTION GOALS

SEC. 5. (a) Under the program established under section 4, the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the heads of other appropriate agencies, shall review appropriate information and determine—

(1) the most suitable raw materials, other than petroleum or natural gas, for the production of replacement fuels;

(2) the nature of the replacement motor fuel distribution systems, and the various production processes which use feedstock other than petroleum and natural gas, necessary for the rapid development of a replacement motor fuel industry, including a proposed timetable for the development of such systems and processes;

(3) the technical and economic feasibility of including liquids extracted from oil shale and coal as part of the replacement fuels program; and

(4) the technical and economic feasibility of producing sufficient replacement fuels, by the calendar year 1995, in order to replace 20 percent or more, by volume, of the projected consumption of gasoline used as a motor fuel in the United States for that year.

The Secretary shall prescribe by rule, a substitute percentage goal for purposes of paragraph (4) if he determines that 20 percent is inappropriate.

(b) The Secretary shall, by rule, establish production goals for the optimal production of replacement fuel in the United States in each of calendar years 1984 through 1990. In establishing such goals, the Secretary shall—

(1) take into account the availability of reliable sources of replacement fuel produced from renewable resources, coal, and substances other than petroleum and natural gas; and

(2) provide that the production goal for replacement fuel for calendar year 1990 and thereafter shall be not less than 10 percent by volume of the projected consumption of gasoline used as a motor fuel in the United stated for each year.

(c) In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

(1) identify ways to encourage the development of a reliable replacement fuel industry, and the technical, economic, and institutional barriers to such development, and

(2) include an estimation of the production capacity of replacement fuel needed to implement the provisions of this Act.

(d) Not later than one hundred and eighty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall complete his review and determinations under this section and prepare and transmit a report thereon to each House of the Congress.

REPLACEMENT FUEL REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 6. (a) Of the total quantity of gasoline and replacement fuel sold in commerce during any of the following years by any refiner (including sales to the Federal Government), replacement fuel shall constitute the minimum percentage determined in accordance with the following table:

In the calendar year:	The minimum percentage of that volume which replacement fuel constitutes, shall be—
1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989.	Determined by the Secretary under subsection (b) of this subsection.
1990, 1991, and 1992.....	10 percent.
1993, and each year thereafter.	The percentage determined feasible under section 5(a)(4).

(b) Not later than July 1, 1983, the Secretary shall prescribe, by rule, the minimum percentage replacement fuel, by volume, required to be contained in the total quantity of gasoline sold each year in commerce in the United States in calendar years 1984 through 1989 by any refiner for use as a motor fuel. Such percentage shall apply to each refiner, and shall be set for each such calendar year at a level which the Secretary determines—

(1) is technically and economically feasible, and

(2) will result in steady progress toward meeting the requirements under this section for calendar year 1990.

(c) Each refiner shall report annually to the Secretary the percentage replacement fuel by volume contained on the average in the total quantity of gasoline for use as a motor fuel that refiner sold during the preceding calendar year.

(d) The requirements under subsection (a) on any refiner may be satisfied directly with replacement fuel and gasoline refined and blended by the refiner or indirectly pursuant to any contract or other arrangement with replacement fuel and gasoline refined or blended by others.

(e) The Secretary may, on the application of any person, make adjustments to reduce the minimum percentage requirement as it applies to that person, but only if and to the extent that such adjustments are consistent with the purposes of this Act.

ENFORCEMENT BY THE SECRETARY

SEC. 7. (a) Any person who violates any requirement of section 6(a) is subject to a civil penalty of not more than $1 per gallon for each gallon of fuel sold that is not in compliance with section 6(a). Such penalties shall be assessed by the Secretary.

(b)(1) Before issuing an order assessing a civil penalty against any person under this section, the Secretary shall provide to such person notice of the proposed penalty. Such notice shall inform such person of his opportunity to elect within thirty days after the date of such notice to have the procedures of paragraph (3) (in lieu of those of paragraph (2)) apply with respect to such assessment.

(2)(A) Unless an election is made within thirty calendar days after receipt of notice under paragraph (1) to have paragraph (3) apply with respect to such penalty, the Secretary shall assess the penalty, by order, after a determination of violation has been made on the record after an opportunity for an agency hearing pursuant to section 554 of title 5, United States Code, before an administrative law judge appointed under section 3105 of such title 5. Such assessment order shall include the administrative law judge's findings and the basis for such assessment.

(B) Any person against whom a penalty is assessed under this paragraph may, within sixty calendar days after the date of the order of the Secretary assessing such penalty, institute an action in the United States court of appeals for the appropriate judicial circuit for judicial review of such order in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part, the order of the Secretary, or the court may remand the proceeding to the Secretary for such further action as the court may direct.

(3)(A) In the case of any civil penalty with respect to which the procedures of this paragraph have been elected, the Secretary shall promptly assess such penalty.

(B) If the civil penalty has not been paid within sixty calendar days after the assessment order has been made under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall institute an action in the appropriate district court of the United States for an order affirming the assessment of the civil penalty. The court shall have authority to review de novo the law and the facts involved, and shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part such assessment.

(C) Any election to have this paragraph apply may not be revoked except with the consent of the Secretary.

(4) If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order under paragraph (2) or after the appropriate district court has entered final judgment in favor of the Secretary under paragraph (3) the Secretary shall recover the amount of such penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. In such action, the validity and appropriateness of such final assessment order or final judgment shall not be subject to review.

PROCEDURES FOR RULEMAKING

SEC. 8. Section 501 of the Department of Energy Organization Act of 1977 shall apply to any rule, regulation, or order having the applicability and effect of a rule (as defined in section 551(4) of title 5, United States Code) prescribed or issued under this Act.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 9. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out section 5 not to exceed $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983.●

GEORGE WASHINGTON SILVER COIN NOW AVAILABLE OVER THE COUNTER

HON. FRANK ANNUNZIO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the George Washington 90-percent silver commemorative half dollar is now available for over-the-counter purchase at the U.S. mints in Philadelphia, Denver, and San Francisco and at the Main Treasury Building in Washington, D.C.

In addition, the coins are also available at all branches of the Wright Patman Congressional Federal Credit Union. The House credit union is the first credit union in the Nation to have the coins available, and your visiting constituents may want to take advantage of the opportunity to buy a coin while they are at the Nation's Capital.

Up to this week, the coins were only available by mail from the Bureau of the Mint. The Mint had sold 3.8 million of the popular coins by mail in less than 7 weeks, and Mint Director Donna Pope has wisely decided to make the coins available over the counter as well.

The coin is one of the most beautiful coins ever produced in America. It features Washington in uniform mounted on a horse on the front and a view of Mount Vernon on the reverse.

It is available in two versions. The proof version is struck twice on highly polished dies, and is $10.50 each. The uncirculated version is $8.50 each. Cash and personal checks are accepted. Check purchases over $250 require a cashier's or certified check.

There is no limit on the number of uncirculated coins that can be purchased over the counter, but there is a limit of five proof coins per purchaser. The limitation on proof purchases is dictated by the time-consuming and intricate process of proof coin production. There is no limit on the number of coins that can be ordered by mail.

The coins can be purchased by mail. They can be ordered by check or money order from the Bureau of the Mint, 55 Mint Street, San Francisco, Calif. 94175.

Mr. Speaker, these coins are beautiful mementos of our Nation's first President. In addition, 20 percent of the proceeds are to be used solely to reduce the national debt. I urge my colleagues to inform their constituents who visit our Nation's Capitol or mints that these coins are available to them in person.●

JERRY SCHAFFER HONORED

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the many outstanding contributions to the community by Mr. Jerry Schaffer, dean of community services at Merced College in Merced, Calif.

On September 11, Jerry Schaffer will be honored by the North San Joaquin Valley Health Systems Agency as their Volunteer of the Year, and a better choice for this award could not have been found. Jerry's commitment to the improvement of community health services is most obvious in his willingness to give of his time and energy in the pursuit of the goals of the agency. He has served as chairperson of the agency's governing body and has been an active participant in all aspects of its affairs.

I am pleased that Jerry's colleagues have seen fit to honor him in this way. His concern for our community and for his fellow man should serve as an example to us all, and I join with his many friends in saying thanks to Jerry Schaffer for a job well done.●

SANTO LOGUASTO: AN "AMERICAN"

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, too often we do not recognize that a giant walks among us until that giant disappears from the scene.

Such is the case in the Lehigh Valley that I represent. On August 12, 1982 Santo (Sandy) Loguasto of Easton, Pa., died after many years of enduring constant pain of a terminal illness. He was a loving father, a successful salesman, a veteran who knew the horror of combat. Yet he preferred to describe himself simply only as "an American."

We can all learn a lesson from this "American."

Sandy came from a big family and persevered the hardships of growing up and working in the anthracite coal mines in northeastern Pennsylvania.

He knew what he wanted out of life and set about achieving it, shifting from the mines to a career as a hair stylist. World War II, however, interrupted his life as it did millions of other young men.

Sandy entered the Army in 1942 and saw service in Africa and Sicily before volunteering for the Rangers to make the Normandy invasion. As a soldier, he suffered along with his fellow GI's. He knew the hell he underwent in being pinned down in a foxhole for a week, unable even to raise his head because of murderous enemy fire. He knew the hell of being cut off and isolated in the Battle of the Bulge. He did not complain. He had a job to do.

During the latter stages of the war, he was attached to a European civil affairs division, helping in the seizure of some Nazi war criminals and helping to set up civil governments in captured towns.

He did not boast of his ribbons and medals. He insisted he was an "American" and just did his job to help bring peace to the world.

Returning to civilian life, he embarked on a new career as a salesman-manager of stainless steel cookware. Twice he led the Nation in sales for his company and paved the way to open up new markets in Europe and Canada.

Fate dealt him another blow in the mid-1970's when he fell victim to a terminal illness. Constant pain became a way of life. Enormous doses of medication became a way of life.

Forced into retirement by the illness, he reassessed what he would do with the time left for him. He thought of the 11 men out of 180 still surviving from his wartime Ranger outfit. As a symbol to them, he decided to fly 11 flags on his lawn every day in their honor.

He also realized that many veterans, for one reason or another, were not receiving benefits they were entitled to. He busily engaged, his health permitting, in filling out their reports for compensation or admission to veterans hospitals. He listened to all, helping in whatever measure he could.

The community took note of his unselfish efforts. He was honored by Easton VFW Post 1290 on memorial Day in 1976 for community service, in 1979 by Easton AmVets Post 17 with a National Service Award for patriotism, and in 1980 he was named the community's "Veteran of the Year."

His wife Evelyn never faltered in helping him to help others. His three sons remember him as a loving father.

Sandy's final wish was a simple military funeral. He was accorded that honor. The veterans and closest friends at the graveside service will never forget Sandy's youngest son. Led to the car after the service, he halted, turned around and saluted his father's casket.

Ironic as it may seem, an American flagpole stands at the foot of Sandy's grave—a silent tribute to a great American.

I feel honored for having been able to know him as a personal friend. I will never forget this "American."●

SENATOR THRUSTON BALLARD MORTON

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, allow me first to express my gratitude to Congressman CARL PERKINS for taking out this special order today so that we who revere the late Senator Thruston Ballard Morton may honor him.

We all know Senator Morton's singular achievements. He was educated at Yale University and was an officer of the Navy in World War II. Elected to the House of Representatives in 1947, he remained there for 6 years, served as Assistant Secretary of State under President Eisenhower for 3 years, and then went on to the Senate where he remained for 12 years. During his two terms there, he also served as the national chairman of the G.O.P. and as head of the Senate Campaign Committee.

But what makes Thruston Morton special is not what he has done, but the courage with which he did it. A leader of moderate Republicans and a strong supporter of civil rights, he sometimes disagreed with popular conservative views. Known as an internationalist in foreign policy, Senator Morton advocated negotiating with the Soviet Union in the midst of the cold war scare. He dissented openly with popular sentiment by calling for our withdrawal from the Vietnam war in 1968. But these stands only inspired respect among his colleagues who referred to him as a "Kentucky Republican." His retirement from the Senate in 1969 was met with great dismay by all who knew him.

I am honored to represent the State that Thruston Morton served so faithfully and hope to continue the fine traditions he established throughout his entire career.●

ELLIS BULLOCK—FRIEND OF "CLOSE UP"

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the work of an outstanding Minnesotan for a program that many of us consider most important—the Close Up program.

Since the inception of the program in Minnesota in 1972, the Close Up program has benefited from the active interest and support of the Twin Cities business community. Area companies have not only been generous in their financial support but they have also given time and personal energy to the program.

The embodiment of this spirit of cooperation has been the evolution and work of the Minnesota Close Up Committee which has served as the backbone of the Minnesota Close Up program—lending its expertise and support to the program. The chairman of this effort has been Ellis F. Bullock, Jr., director of the Jostens Foundation. For the past several years, Ellis has given generously of his time and his enthusiasm to help raise the necessary corporate funds to make the program possible for the young people of my State. His efforts have not only been appreciated by the thousands of young people who have been reached but have also been welcomed by the Minnesota delegation who have worked with him on this worthwhile effort.

He is to be commended on his public spirit and his excellent work.●

BURNING FLESH

HON. PAUL FINDLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, war is never pretty, but the conflict in Lebanon reached great ugliness inflicting new measures of misery upon civilians as well as guerrillas.

Reports to the Christian Science Monitor and the Washington Post state that phosphorous bombs have been used by Israeli forces, causing terrible injury to civilians as well as military units.

These bombs burn flesh for as long as 24 hours, and according to the Monitor article, medical resources in Lebanon were so limited that the only way to stop the burning was for physicians to cut away the burning flesh or amputate.

I call this information to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because these dreadful weapons were supplied to the Israeli forces by the U.S. Government. Where are the shouts of moral outrage, of protest? Are we indifferent to this engulfing human tragedy? We cannot escape responsibility.

The articles follow:

PHOSPHOROUS BOMBS HAVE BECOME THE NAPALM OF THE WAR IN LEBANON

U.S.-SUPPLIED BOMBS THAT BURN FOR UP TO 24 HOURS ARE SAID TO HAVE HIT MANY CIVILIANS

(By T. Elaine Carey)

BEIRUT.—What napalm was to the Vietnam war phosphorus is to the war in Lebanon, particularly in Beirut.

And the use of phosphorous bombs against human targets—civilians as well as soldiers—has begun to raise new questions about the United States arms trade to the Middle East. It does so, ironically, even as the siege of Beirut seems near an end.

Earlier in the war a muted crisis arose between President Reagan and Israeli Prime Minister Begin over Israeli use of US-supplied cluster bombs. That dispute ended in a temporary cutoff of shipments of the bombs to Israel.

Diplomats and hospital personnel here are beginning to go public with evidence of the widespread human damage caused by the phosphorous explosives. The result is likely to be renewed questioning as to why Washington fails to enforce the defensive-only restriction it places on use of such exported weapons.

"Phosphorous is a more sophisticated kind of napalm. It is designed to strike military installations like fuel depots. . . . It is antipersonnel," said Dr. Amir Salam, a urologist working at the American University Hospital.

In west Beirut, phosphorous shells and bombs have crashed onto the main street, Hamra, hitting banks, local newspapers, and foreign news offices. They have plowed into two hospitals, a Red Cross building, and hundreds of apartments.

The Palestinians do not have phosphorous weapons. Those used in the city have crashed into areas where Palestinian civilians had taken refuge, such as Hamra.

There are no precise, reliable figures for any aspect of the war yet, including the number of burn cases. But doctors said they have treated hundreds—at the very least.

Dr. Salam said neither he nor any of his colleagues here are burn specialists.

"Unfortunately we are guessing on the treatment. We don't have time to research it. We rarely have time to do much more than amputate.," Dr. Troy Rusli said. Dr. Rusli, who worked in Cambodia but lives in Norway, said he treated about 50 cases in five weeks. His "hospital" is the basement garage of the Near East School of Theology.

The use of phosphorous bombs by the Israeli Army has been condemned by relief workers in Lebanon who have seen its effects. They say that without the proper supplies, the only way to stop the burning is either to cut the burning tissue away or amputate. No one here has the supplies.

Relief workers are reporting an unusually high incidence of amputations in west Beirut, particularly, they say, among civilians. Phosphorous reportedly continues to burn for up to 24 hours unless treated.

The American University Hospital, Beiruts' best, said it had received hundreds of burn cases. Staff in the emergency room estimated 80 percent were civilians and 20 percent guerrillas. One Palestinian Red Crescent Society field hospital said its phosphorous cases were split 50-50 between guerrillas and civilians. Several other hospitals said their breakdown was about 70 percent civilian and 30 percent guerrilla.

Ahmad Abdisaleh, an elderly Palestinian porter who lived in Borj el Barajneh, was eating breakfast when a phosphorous shell smashed through his house.

Phosphorus, a yellowish powder, sprays out of the shell casing, igniting instantly when it hits air. Mr. Abdisaleh's body and clothing went up in flames.

At first glance, Mohammed Halil, another patient who is a PLO guerrilla, looked Sudanese or Ethiopian. His face was black. But when a doctor pulled back the sheet, his chest skin was white. His face had been charred black.

"Industrialized countries don't have burn centers to care for these people, but they have the weapons to use in the third world," Dr. Rusli lamented.

One of the last groups he cared for was a family of seven. The hair on their heads had been singed off and the features on each of their faces were no longer discernible.

"I never experienced anything like this in Cambodia," Dr. Rusli said.

"The difference here is the weapons and their velocity. In Cambodia we didn't have the small fragmentation of shrapnel."

The shrapnel has phosphorous on it, so it begins burning the minute it imbeds in the body, he explained.

"When we took a big piece of shrapnel out of one man's ankle, we opened the bandages on the operating table and smoke came out. The man was wounded 10 hours before. The leg had burned for 10 hours."

"Usually war is on the battlefield," Dr. Rusli said. "Seventy percent of my patients are civilians. Women and children aren't in the army."

VICTIMS BURNED BY PHOSPHOROUS IN WEST BEIRUT

(By Loren Jenkins)

BEIRUT, August 19—Her lips are swollen and blackened, her thin frame swathed in ointment-soaked gauze. From her bed in a makeshift hospital at International College here, she recalls when the shell hit the underground garage where she and her family were hiding a week ago.

"Everything suddenly went dark," says 17-year-old Fatmeh Aytawi, "and then I remember a brilliant white flame, and I felt I was suddenly on fire."

Hours later, when rescue workers finally dug the Aytawi family out of the rubble and rushed them to the hospital, doctors recall that their bodies were still smoldering. Fatmeh's mother died last Monday, while her father remains in serious condition. Four sisters and a brother also are hospitalized.

Doctors here and at hospitals throughout West Beirut say they are seeing an increasing number of burn patients like Aytawi and her seven family members, who they say are victims of Israeli phosphorous shells that were part of the intense bombardment that rained down on the Lebanese capital in recent weeks.

The wounds are distinctive and much harder to treat than ordinary burns, the doctors say, in part because phosphorus sticks to the skin and can burn for hours. It cannot be extinguished by water, which causes a chemical reaction that makes the wound burn more. Like the Aytawi family, victims often arrive at the hospital with smoke still pouring out of their bodies from internal burns as well as skin injuries.

Israeli authorities say they only use the shells as "markers" to guide artillery because the smoke the shells give off helps gunners zero in on their targets. The Israelis say phosphorous shells traditionally have been used in this fashion since World War II and blame civilian injuries on Palestinian guerrillas who chose to make their stand in civilian-occupied parts of the city.

With the chaos that the two-month Israeli siege and bombardment has produced here, it is impossible to determine exactly how many civilians have been killed, maimed or, like Aytawi, disfigured by Israeli phosphorous shells. Still, many doctors say the number of burn cases they have seen has increased markedly this month, which corresponds with the first physical evidence of heavy use of phosphorous shells.

"Most of the serious injuries we were getting [during] the early part of the war were from bullets and shrapnel," said Sameer Shehadi, chief of surgery at the American University of Beirut's teaching hospital here. "In the last two or three weeks, though, we have been getting a number of serious burn patients."

Dr. Amal Shamma, the U.S.-trained, Lebanese director of the now-closed and shell-battered Barbir Hospital, recalled when one couple brought in three small children—two dead, 5-day-old baby girls and a badly burned 3-year-old boy, all of whose bodies were still smoldering. The boy died the next day.

Troy Rusli, a Cambodian-born, Norwegian doctor who is a volunteer surgeon at the makeshift Lahout Hospital at West Beirut's Near East Theological Center, described a man, about 60, who was brought in with a piece of phosphorous-coated shrapnel lodged in his chest.

"Smoke from the burning phosphorus inside him was coming out his nose and mouth with every painful breath," recalled Rusli. "We had to cut the shrapnel out of him before we could finally stop the burning by cutting away the scorched tissues."

"No weapon is a good weapon," said John Barton, an Illinois University professor of medicine who is working as a volunteer at the same hospital. "But this one, the phosphorous bomb, is one of the worst."

Shamma said most hospitals lacked both the supplies and the expertise to treat phosphorous victims properly. She said doctors were relying mostly on printed information compiled by U.S. military doctors in Vietnam and on a handbook of war surgery published by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

There is no way to determine accurately how many phosphorous shells have been dropped on this city. But dozens of 155-mm artillery shells dug from the rubble of the main Palestinian neighborhoods on Beirut's southern fringes have hollowed interiors coated with yellowish-orange oxide, and the pungent odor of phosphorous is unmistakable.

Other phosphorous shells have hit the city's center in the vicinity of the Hamra Street business district. One gutted the offices of Newsweek and the Los Angeles Times in the An Nahar newspaper building minutes after the correspondents had left to seek refuge in the building's basement. At least two of the city's 19 hospitals also have reported being hit with the shells.

Some doctors, especially those who have not treated phosphorous-burn patients firsthand, are reluctant to estimate their number, saying pressure on hospital laboratories have made chemical analyses impossible. All burn victims generally are treated alike here after surgery, and medical records often do not distinguish phosphorous victims from other burn patients.

Joseph Ayyad, a Palestinian of Spanish citizenship who is Aytawi's doctor, said he is treating 17 phosphorous-burn patients, 11 of them civilians.

[It was unclear Thursday whether the shells are Israeli- or American-made. Benjamin Abileh, an Israeli Embassy spokesman in Washington, said he would not provide an answer, but noted that the shells "have been made all over the world for many years and used in all the armies of the world for many, many years."

[Abileh acknowledged that the phosphorous shells could cause severe injuries but said they were less deadly than regular artillery shells. "People can get burned, but with another kind of shell they would die, so in this sense it's a less dangerous weapon," he said.

[A Department of Defense spokesman said the Pentagon was checking to determine whether U.S.-made phosphorous shells had been sold to Israel. He said that unlike the special, classified restrictions on Israeli use of U.S. cluster bombs, the only restriction on phosphorous-shell use would be the provisions of the Arms Export Control Act that require that American-made weapons by used only for defensive purposes. Israel has argued that its invasion of Lebanon was undertaken in self-defense.] ●

TAX REFORM DECISION DIFFICULT, BUT NECESSARY

HON. BILL McCOLLUM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I made the toughest vote I have had to make since coming to Congress. I voted for the conference report to H.R. 4961—the 1982 Tax Reform Act—endorsed by President Reagan.

It is absolutely essential to the economic recovery of our Nation that we lower interest rates substantially below where they are at the present and that we keep them there while also keeping inflation under control. To accomplish this, we must dramatically reduce the runaway deficits created by the reckless spending policies of past Congresses. Ideally, this should be done totally by spending cuts, but it is clear there are not enough Members in this Congress who feel as I do to make the necessary cuts. However, we did manage to pass a budget resolution earlier this year reducing the deficit $380 billion over the next 3 years, of which $280 billion is in spending cuts. The price we had to pay to the liberal leadership which still controls the House was $99 billion in added revenues over the same period of time. The Tax Reform Act fulfills the revenue commitment of this budget resolution, and now our job is to see to it that the spending cuts are actually produced.

Like President Reagan, I had to "swallow hard" to support any revenue increases, and there are specific provisions in this tax bill, such as interest and dividend withholding, which I do not like. But, on the whole, for a revenue-raising measure, this is far better for the average American than one might expect. Under this measure, three-fourths of these additional revenues will come from closing loopholes and collecting taxes which are not now being collected. Less than one-fourth of the $98.3 billion in revenues covered by this bill are in the form of actual tax increases.

For most individual taxpayers, the bill will have little impact, and because of the indexing of tax rates and the rate reductions passed last summer, even with this new bill's increased revenues, the tax burden on Americans will be $334 billion less over the next 3 years than if the tax cuts of last year had never been enacted or had been repealed, as some suggested. The typical family will pay almost $400 less in taxes this year than if prior rates still applied. Next year, even with the passage of this bill, that family will pay $788 less.

Contrary to some common rumors, there are no new taxes on interest and dividend income. This type of income becomes subject to withholding of estimated taxes due under present law just as in the case of wages. The purpose is to collect from those not now paying what they owe, and most senior citizens and the poor are exempted from the provisions. Nearly 80 percent of people over 65—those who make less than $14,450, or $24,214 for a joint return—and low-income people of any age who owed $600 or less in taxes the prior year—$1,000 on a joint return—are exempt from the dividend and interest withholding. All interest payments of less than $150 are totally exempt from the withholding requirement. Even so I strongly opposed this part of the bill and will continue to work hard for passage of the Senior Citizens Savings Protection Act which I introduced last year to eliminate all taxes on interest and dividends for persons age 62 and older.

It is vital that we give our economic recovery program the chance to succeed. The goals our Nation endorsed last year promise to bring to an end 40 years of uncontrolled tax and spend policies and to bring us a future of growth, employment, and stability. To achieve this end, this tax bill is necessary and for that reason alone it is a step well worth taking.●

THRUSTON B. MORTON

HON. BALTASAR CORRADA

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 19, 1982

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a great public servant, the late Hon. Thruston B. Morton, whose presence will be sorely missed both here in Washington and in his home State of Kentucky. Although I did not have the privilege of serving with him in the House of Representatives, I know well of his reputation as an outstanding leader and hard-working lawmaker.

Senator Morton lived a life dedicated to improving the public good—not only did he serve in the House and the Senate for 12 years, but he held the post of Assistant Secretary of State under Dwight D. Eisenhower for over 3 years. As a Representative for the people of Kentucky, he provided a moderate voice in the public policy and a strong supporter of the Republican Party. After leaving Washington in 1969, Senator Morton continued to influence national politics by actively campaigning for Presidential candidates, despite the fact that he was falling into progressively poorer health.

Senator Morton will be remembered not only as a dedicated public servant, but also for his performance in the Navy, as commander in the Pacific during World War II. In addition, his many accomplishments as chairman of Churchill Downs and president of the American Horse Council will never be forgotten by the people of Louisville, Ky.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I remark the passing of this great man, remembering his contribution to our Nation.●

PROTECTING THE RIGHTS OF THE HANDICAPPED

HON. STEWART B. McKINNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, the regulations promulgated under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act are the cornerstone of the Federal Government's effort to encourage the integration of the handicapped into the mainstream of American society. After decades of second-class status, institutionalization, and prejudice, the disabled won a guarantee from Congress that their rights as citizens would be protected.

In the 5 years since the first of these regulations went into effect, the handicapped have greatly benefited from the vastly expanded opportunities available to them. Yet despite the unqualified success of these regulations in insuring the civil rights of the disabled, a number of changes have recently been proposed. Today I want to applaud the efforts of those in Connecticut and around the Nation who have rallied to preserve these rights, and to once again add my voice to theirs.

In the worthy interest of trimming the Federal budget and simplifying regulatory procedure, several discussion drafts proposing modifications in section 504 have been circulated. Unfortunately these drafts have included changes which would reduce the protections afforded the civil rights of the handicapped under the existing language. Changes which would serve as a step back in the fight to insure that the disabled have access to the same wide range of services available to every other citizen cannot be accepted. Civil rights cannot tolerate cost/benefit analysis. Recently discussed changes could limit the programs covered by section 504 from those benefiting from Federal funding to those directly receiving funding. This would have a significant impact on the educational opportunities open to the disabled.

Proposed modifications could shift the burden of proof in demonstrating discrimination on to the handicapped person. An additional change expands the undue hardship waiver to cover many areas not currently affected. I feel that these changes are not in the best interest of those the regulations were designed to protect, nor are they in the best interest of the Nation. In limiting the self-improvement opportunities open to the disabled we pave the road for Federal assistance to undereducated, untrained, unemployable individuals. Section 504 represents an investment in the future, not only for the handicapped but for the Nation as a whole.

Like the proposed changes in section 504, alterations have been suggested for Public Law 94-142, the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, which would weaken these fundamental protections. I stand by the current Public Law 94-142 language as a commitment to all handicapped children to an appropriate, free public education. The proposed modifications would weaken the rights of parents to involve themselves in their child's educational program as active advocates. The proposal would limit the evaluation process which is designed to seek out children in need of special education and would give over to the States the power to set certain deadlines and requirements. I believe that these changes would take an unacceptable toll in limiting the educational opportunities open to this Nation's disabled children.

While I am committed to guaranteeing the rights of the disabled in the most cost-effective way, I cannot support short-sighted, near-term savings which will ultimately cost both the handicapped and the country more than will be saved. I stand firmly opposed to any weakening of the protections contained in section 504 and Public Law 94-142.●

TRIBUTE TO RICH DEVOS

HON. HAROLD S. SAWYER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 20, 1982

● Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to express my praise for the great contribution that Mr. Rich DeVos, cofounder of Amway Corp. in Ada, Mich., made as finance chairman of the Republican Party. During his term as chairman, Mr. DeVos spent many long hours traveling throughout the country encouraging more party members to donate than ever before. He coordinated grassroots support among young Republicans and the numbers have grown to a total of 1.6 million people involved with the party. Contributions have increased 50 percent over those pledged in 1980, and by midyear 1982, contributions are up 11.6 percent ahead of 1981 totals. All of this can be attributed to the hard work and dedication of Mr. Rich DeVos. He has encouraged participation by all members of the party and has given innumerable talks extolling the virtues of the Republican principle. I would like to thank Mr. DeVos for bringing greater prosperity to the Republican Party and for a job well done. I am personally proud to know him.●

SENATE—Wednesday, September 8, 1982

The Senate met at 12 noon, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, LL.D., D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people.

For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord.—Psalm 117.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive honor and glory and adoration and worship and praise. Thou dost not need our worship, but we need to worship Thee. Our humanness depends on it and we diminish our humanness when we refuse. It is to the benefit of our Nation to worship Thee. "Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord."

May we be a worshipful people in deed as well as in word. May our lives honor and exhalt Thee. We love Thee, Lord. Grant that the work done here—the decisions made, the laws passed, and the conduct of our private lives individually and as families will manifest our devotion to Thee. In the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe the reading of the Journal of the proceedings has been dispensed with under the previous order. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is correct.

ORDER THAT NO RESOLUTIONS COME OVER UNDER THE RULE AND THE CALL OF THE CALENDAR BE DISPENSED WITH

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no resolutions come over under the rule and the call of the calendar be dispensed with on this legislative day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEATH OF CONGRESSMAN ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, yesterday, it was learned that Congressman ADAM BENJAMIN died over the Labor Day weekend at the age of 47 from natural causes. Representative BENJAMIN was serving in his third term, and was chairman of the Congressional Steel Caucus, and a member of the House Appropriation and Budget Committees.

All of us, in both Chambers, and in both parties, send our deepest sympathies to the Benjamin family. ADAM BENJAMIN'S death is a tragic loss, not only to the members of his district, but to the whole of Congress.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I rise to extend my deep sympathies to the family of ADAM BENJAMIN, and to the people of Indiana he served so well.

His early and tragic death takes from us a quiet leader, a man with an absolute commitment to public service. His was a style that never sought the limelight, never sought personal gain; that focused on the hard, substantive, behind the scenes work so fundamentally necessary to the functioning of our democracy. His honesty and integrity were known to all. When ADAM BENJAMIN gave you his word, or his commitment to assist you in any way, you could put the matter out of your mind.

For his honesty, his commitment to hard work, and for his ideals he will be greatly missed. Again, I extend my deepest sympathies to his wife and children.

BRUSH UP YOUR SHAKESPEARE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is a miserable thing to return to work without poetry, and I ask unanimous consent that this week's poem, "Brush Up Your Shakespeare," by Cole Porter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the poem was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRUSH UP YOUR SHAKESPEARE

The girls today in society
Go for classical poetry
So to win their hearts one must quote with ease
Aeschylus and Euripides.
One must know Homer and, b'lieve me, bo,
Sophocles, also Sappho-ho.
Unless you know Shelley and Keats and Pope,
Dainty debbies will call you a dope.
But the poet of them all
Who will start 'em simply ravin'
Is the poet people call
"The bard of Stratford-on-Avon."

Brush up your Shakespeare,
Start quoting him now,
Brush up your Shakespeare
And the women you will wow.
Just declaim a few lines from "Othella"
And they'll think you're a helluva fella,
If your blonde won't respond when you flatter'er
Tell her what Tony told Cleopaterer,
If she fights when her clothes you are mussing,
What are clothes? "Much Ado About Nussing."
Brush up your Shakespeare
And they'll all kowtow.

Brush up your shakespeare,
Start quoting him now,
Brush up your Shakespeare
And the women you will wow.
With the wife of the British embessida
Try a crack out of "Troilus and Cressida,"
If she says she won't buy it or tike it
Make her tike it, what's more, "As You Like It."
If she says your behavior is heinous
Kick her right in the "Coriolanus,"
Brush up your Shakespeare
And they'll all kowtow.

Brush up your Shakespeare,
Start quoting him now,
Brush up your Shakespeare
And the women you will wow.
If you can't be a ham and do "Hamlet"
They will not give a damn or a damnlet,
Just recite an occasional sonnet
And your lap'll have "Honey" upon it,
When you baby is pleading for pleasure
Let her sample your "Measure for Measure,"
Brush up your Shakespeare
And they'll all kowtow.

Brush up your Shakespeare,
Start quoting him now,
Brush up your Shakespeare
And the women you will wow.
Better mention "The Merchant of Venice"
When her sweet pound o'flesh you would menace,
If her virtue, at first, she defends—well,
Just remind her that "All's Well That Ends Well,"
And if still she won't give you a bonus
You know what Venus got from Adonis!
Brush up your Shakespeare
And they'll all kowtow.

Brush up your Shakespeare
Start quoting him now,
Brush up your Shakespeare
And the women you will wow.
If your goil is a Washington Heights dream
Treat the kid to "A Midsummer Night's Dream,"
If she then wants an all-by-herself night
Let her rest ev'ry 'leventh or "Twelfth Night,"
If because of your heat she gets huffy
Simply play on and "Lay on, Macduffy!"
Brush up your Shakespeare
And they'll all kowtow.

Brush up your Shakespeare,
Start quoting him now,

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Brush up your Shakespeare
And the women you will wow.
So tonight just recite to your matey
"Kiss me, Kate, Kiss me, Kate, Kiss me, Katey,"
Brush up your Shakespeare
And they'll all kowtow.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to exceed 1 hour in length, in which Senators may speak for not more than 5 minutes each, under the order entered prior to our adjournment for the August break.

After the expiration of the period for the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, House Joint Resolution 520, the debt limit measure.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to ask the Senate today to deviate from the regular course of procedure. As was indicated in the press this morning, there is the possibility that we might temporarily lay aside the Helms amendment to take up the Hatch amendment. May I say that I am working on the possibility of a unanimous-consent agreement to limit the time for debate on the Hatch amendment. For the time being it is not my intention to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Hatch amendment to the Constitution. I do intend to do that at some point.

Mr. President, I anticipate that debate on the Helms amendment will continue through this day. I do not anticipate that it will be a late day.

Debate will continue on that measure tomorrow when at the hour of 2 p.m., under the order previously entered, the Senate will vote under the provisions of rule XXII on the cloture motion filed against further debate on the Helms second-degree amendment.

Mr. President, I call the attention of Members to the fact that the House of Representatives will focus its attention, I assume, on the veto message from the President related to the supplemental appropriations bill, and I am advised that that will occur some time tomorrow. Members should be on notice of the fact that if that veto is sustained, it will become necessary to promptly act on a new supplemental bill which must originate in the House of Representatives.

If the veto is overridden, it is my intention to bring it up in the Senate as soon as it is received here, within a reasonably short period of time.

So Senators should not assume that this week will be an idle week. Indeed, I have encouraged Senators who are out of town to return to deal with the matter at hand, that is, the debt limit and the debate on the Helms amendment, but also to be prepared to deal with the veto message if the Senate is faced with that message or with the supplemental appropriations bill in the alternative.

So Senators in making their plans should not assume that they will have a light week this week. We may indeed have very important measures that must be dealt with before this week is out.

Mr. President, I am happy to be back, I say in more ritual than in sincerity, but in any event I wish to extend my greetings to all my colleagues and particularly to my friend and colleague, the distinguished minority leader, who looks hale and hearty, appears to thrive on what I am sure must have been an extensive tour of his home State of West Virginia.

Mr. President, I have no further need for my time under the standing order, and I am prepared now to yield it to any Senator who requires time now or to yield it to the minority leader if he wishes additional time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for his kind remarks. He is always courteous, gracious, affable, congenial, amicable, and all the pleasant adjectives that are in Webster's dictionary.

Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin need any time yielded to him?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I wish to have 2 minutes yielded to me.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

LEARNING ABOUT THE BOMB

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on August 25, the Milwaukee Journal carried a compelling article by Victoria Bissell Brown—a historian at the University of California in San Diego. The subject was what does a mother tell her daughter about the bomb?

No one argues that raising a child is easy. There are so many difficult problems to explain. There are complexities to life that defy easy description. The reasons "why" and the justification for life's seemingly unfair occurrences make answers to a child's questions far from an easy task.

But what do you say to a son or daughter when explaining the stark possibility that mankind one day may simply just blow itself up? How do you tell the innocent that countries spend enormous sums on armaments for the purpose of more efficiently destroying millions of people?

Victoria Bissell Brown describes it this way:

Maybe if I tell her about the bomb I can soften the blow. Maybe I can talk about nationalism and politics and defense capabilities. Maybe I can tell her that it's just something that we have to scare people with, that no one would ever use it. I know her, thought. She'll ask: "But what if somebody does use it? Will we all die? Will everything on Earth die forever?"

Maybe. Maybe we will blow ourselves up. Maybe someone else will do it for us.

Or maybe the world will come to its senses and find some way to achieve arms limitations and reductions. Our children are waiting for the anwser.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Milwaukee Journal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOMMY, WILL YOU TELL ME ABOUT THE BOMB?

(By Victoria Bissell Brown)

My daughter is 6, and knows the facts of life. She knows how babies are made and why women menstruate and why mommies and daddies like to sleep alone together. She knows, from her grandmother's death, that all living things will die.

We talk about these things; they are part of the image of this world and this life that she is constructing for herself.

But there is something that she doesn't know about yet, and I don't know how to tell her: She doesn't know about The Bomb. She doesn't know that some members of life's community have taken a detour—some would say a shortcut—off the slow path of evolution. She doesn't know that the "highest" form of life has evolved to the point where it can now destroy all its yesterdays and all its tomorrows.

How can I explain this to her? Should I? Of course I should. I must. The bomb is, for us, what sex was to parents in the 19th century. If I don't tell her, she'll hear it from some kid on the corner who'll tell it all wrong. He'll tell her about our eyes melting out of their sockets and our skin burning off the melting bones, about whole cities destroyed in seconds and neighboring cities where millions will run in panic from the inevitable. He'll tell her that the survivors will envy the dead and that radiation-caused mutations will make evolution (a concept that she has struggled so hard to grasp) go haywire.

Maybe if I tell her about the bomb I can soften the blow. Maybe I can talk about nationalism and politics and defense capabilities. Maybe I can tell her that it's just something that we have to scare people with, that no one would ever use it. I know her, though. She'll ask: "But what if somebody does use it? Will we all die? Will everything on Earth die forever?"

The world is a slippery place for children. They hold onto two precious certainties: that adults know what they're doing; and that life follows a certain predictable course. Whether the child is raised to be a creationist or an evolutionist, those basic certainties are what rock our children to sleep at night. The mere existence of the bomb blows those certainties to kingdomcome. If we never, ever use it on another country, we will, by countenancing its existence, have used it every day on our children.

We attended a peace rally not long ago—an anti-nuke rally, of course. As far as my daughter was concerned it was just a rally against war. She played in the rows of empty seats and up into the grassy hillside with the other children for most of the evening. But at one point, when a speaker was being particularly graphic about the dangers of nuclear war, I noticed that she had stopped playing and was leaning, chin in hands, against a rail, listening. Was this it, I wondered. Would she ask me about this man's words later? In a moment, she'd been tagged by a playmate and was off, up into the trees. She never asked me about the speech.

My days are numbered, though. I'll have to tell her soon. And I know that I'll have to tell her the truth: that, if this bomb explodes, the continuous stream of life that I've worked so hard to make real to her will be destroyed. There's only one thing in the world that can soften the blow: that the two adults she trusts most in the world are doing something to stop it. If she knows that we're working on it, she may rest easier.

That's why I'm writing this. I must tell my daughter the truth soon, and when I do I want to be able to say that I'm doing something. This is my first effort; I don't yet know what I'll do next.

WHO REMEMBERS THE ARMENIANS?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I have recently received a letter from an Armenian American who is distressed over the world's amnesia regarding the first genocide of the 20th century, that against the Armenians of the Ottoman Empire. This terrible episode has become the "forgotten genocide" of modern times. History records that it began in April 1915, when the Empire uprooted the Armenian inhabitants and forced them to migrate on foot. The letter recounts what happend:

> The Armenian people . . . were . . . deported from every city, town, and village of Asia Minor and Turkish Armenia. In most instances during the death marches, the men were quickly separated and executed soon after leaving town. The women and children were marched for weeks into the Syrian desert; thousands were seized along the way, forcibly converted to Islam, and raised in Turkish homes and harems. The majority of the deportees died of starvation and disease during the forced marches. Many others were murdered brutally. During the years 1915–1922, 1,500,000 Armenians were killed and more than 500,000 exiled from the Ottoman (Turkish) Empire. Thus, the Armenian Community of the Ottoman Empire was virtually eliminated as a result of a carefully executed government plan of genocide.

Eyewitness accounts alerted a horrified world to these massacres immediately. On May 24, 1915, the Triple Entante nations of Britain, France, and Russia declared that they would hold all the members of the Ottoman government personally responsible for the fate of the Armenian people.

Yet only two decades later, the slaughter of the Armenians had faded from the memory of the world. Adolf Hitler scoffed at the notion that he would go down in infamy for perpetrating the Holocaust. He would ask: "Who remembers the Armenians?" Just as popular wisdom had it, history forgotten is history repeated. How many times must men vow, "never again?" We can never stop learning the lessons from the "final solutions" of the past. We should never let anyone ask of the Armenians, or of the Jews, or of any others, "Who remembers?" Nor should anyone ask "Who cares?" or "Who would bring me to justice?" If only the U.S. Senate would ratify the Genocide Convention, we could announce with conviction that we will remember, we will care, and we will bring the guilty to justice. Let us insure that the horror of genocide stays alive in our collective conscience, that those who may consider such a crime will be shamed and deterred, and that no future Hitler shall shrug off the prospect of a judgment day.

I thank the distinguished Democratic leader and I yield the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYAKAWA). There will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

LEBANON'S PRESIDENT-ELECT

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, during the recess, I briefly visited Lebanon at the invitation of Ambassador Dillon and Ambassador Habib. Although I had been there only 7 months earlier, the differences I saw were remarkable. I was particularly pleased that the Lebanese now appear to look toward the future with expectation of major changes for the better in their country.

The man upon whom the future of Lebanon rests is President-elect Bashir Gemayel. During the past 8 years of conflict, Bashir Gemayel, as commander of the Phalange militia and the Lebanese forces, has been viewed as the savior of the nation in the eyes of a substantial portion of the population, but others consider him a right-wing militarist. Now the task falls upon him to bind the national wounds. In my conversation with him, the young, 34-year-old President-elect displayed considerable sensitivity to the problems he faces, including the need to reach out to all segments of Lebanese society. I was impressed by his determination to act as President of all Lebanese and to put aside the differences of the past.

He indicated he intended to go down and actually spend several days in southern Lebanon and be a part of the country down there, a part of the people, and to better understand its problems.

In an op-ed article published in the Washington Post on August 23, the day of his election to the Presidency, Bashir Gemayel discussed in general terms the course necessary to bind the wounds of his troubled land. I believe he showed a commendable approach, and I urged him to press forward along the path of reconciliation and moderation that he presented. I recommend to my colleagues this thoughtful article and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 23, 1982]

REBUILDING LEBANON: WHAT WE MUST DO NOW—AND WHY IT MATTERS

(By Bashir Gemayel)

Lebanon, a country that has occupied much space in the international and American press recently, holds its presidential election today. Few people seem to have paid much attention to the future of our small country, concerning themselves solely with its present. As a candidate for the presidency, however, I have devoted substantial consideration to my country's future, and I should like to share these ideas with the American people.

Much of the press seems to see Lebanon in terms of its parts, like a permanently divided political entity. It is certainly true that the Lebanese people is formed of diverse social and cultural stocks. But it is not true that we are internally divided. Indeed, despite divisions imposed by the occupation of Lebanon by three foreign forces, in some ways, in many ways really, the people of Lebanon are united as never before—united in our determination to recover and safeguard our sovereignty, united in our opposition to the use of violence in our country to resolve others' problems, united in our demand to return to our own historic traditions of democracy, pluralism, and moderation.

What many outside Lebanon do not appreciate is how much the Lebanese—all Lebanese in all religious, ethnic, social and economic groups—have learned from more than seven tragic years of violence. What we learned first and foremost, frankly, was that we had taken Lebanon and its way of life for granted. All of us know today—and what a price we paid for this knowledge—that we can no longer allow others to drag us into their quarrels. And we know, too, that we ourselves must take conscious, tangible and effective steps to restore the unique experience that is Lebanon's historic way of life.

Lebanon is a country of minorities. No single group can claim majority status for itself. Yet, the next president of Lebanon will not be a minority president, because all the many groups that make up our small but culturally rich country and have contributed to its unique traditions treasure the Lebanese way of life and Lebanon. This nation of minorities has, as few other countries in the developing world have, a majority political culture.

Should I be elected president, my program will recognize that highest priority must be given to the healing of wounds caused by the painful years of conflict. At the same time, one of the most effective ways of healing wounds over the long term is to revitalize the institutions of Lebanese democracy. We must ensure the continued security and liberty for the diverse cultural communities of Lebanon, defining equitably the rights and the obligations of citizens based on the unique characteristics of our country, our values and our customs. The people of Lebanon have always known, and the history of our country has been founded on the belief, that a thriving democracy is the best way for each community and, in fact, each individual to realize his potential and pursue his dreams.

At the same time, any Lebanese president must recognize that much of our national territory is still occupied by Israel, Syria and the PLO. Certainly, it is imperative that this tripartite occupation, the legacy of earlier attempts to partition Lebanon, must be terminated. If Syria considers the Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon a Syrian security zone, then of course Israel will treat the south as an Israeli security zone. The Bekaa is at once on the frontiers of both countries. Should this valley be included in the security strategy of either, it will in fact become less secure for both. Re-Lebanization of the north, the east and the south of Lebanon is the best guarantee for all parties and is certainly the only principle congruent with the unity and sovereignty of Lebanon. As long as Lebanon is not stabilized, its land not completely liberated from foreign occupiers, its territory still used by some to threaten others, a regional settlement will remain impossible to achieve. We assert that a strong, independent and prosperous Lebanon is undoubtedly the best security guarantee for all.

As our internal society must return to its traditional pluralism, so our regional relations must also assume a character befitting relations between sovereign countries. For too long have the neighbors of Lebanon and the other regional powers treated our country as a playground for their games of intrigue and violence. Too long have we permitted seditious behavior directly funded by other governments who send men, weapons, and money in our midst. We look forward to a new era now in which we will treat with other countries in the region as our friends and neighbors—but on the firm basis of sovereign equality.

Lebanon's international role must certainly be reasserted. We have always seen ourselves as a cultural and commercial crossroads of East and West. We value the Western traditions of democracy and free enterprise, we reject totalitarian ideologies wherever promulgated. At the same time we also value the cultural traditions and holism of the East, and try not to lose sight of the interrelationship between values and actions.

The West in general, and the United States (as the leader of the free world) in particular, have significant interests in the Middle East. At the same time, the Middle East has a great interest in a regional American presence, and in the maintenance of cooperative and interdependent relations with the United States. Lebanon used to maintain an active role as a friend and interlocutor of both Arab moderates, on the one hand, and the West, on the other. Following its total liberation, Lebanon should be prepared to resume that role which has been sorely missed in recent years.

Therefore, the new Labanon, given another chance to pursue its destiny by the admirable and tireless efforts of Ambassador Philip Habib and the United States as a whole, must follow several fundamental principles in the days ahead:

First, any solution to the Lebanese crisis must be based on recovery of Lebanese sovereignty over the entirety of the national territory and the restoration to the Lebanese state of its full powers.

Second, Israeli and Syrian forces must return to their own countries. Within the framework of Lebanese sovereignty there must be a Lebanese army strong enough to preserve the territorial integrity of our nation and thereby reassure and undergird the security of Israel and Syria.

Third, the hundreds of thousands of Palestinians remaining in Lebanon must submit to and respect the authority of the Lebanese government in Lebanon. There must be a transformation of Lebanese-Palestinian relations that reflects both the historic relationship of the two peoples and the transitory character of the Palestinian presence in Lebanon.

Fourth, most important, and most widely recognized, the people of Lebanon must agree that force has no place in the inevitable disagreements that arise within any country. Lebanese pluralism, which has tended in its self-assuredness to overlook occasional resort to violence, must evolve to place a new emphasis on the peaceful settlement of disputes. At the same time, the character of that pluralism must remain based upon the unity of Lebanon; the uniqueness of the Lebanese experience; and liberty, security, and justice for all Lebanese within a democratic government that guarantees all citizens' basic freedom.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the comments I made on the departure from Beirut be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CHARLES H. PERCY—AUGUST 27, 1982

I have just received my copy of the President's report to the Senate on the 800-man U.S. contingent that arrived in Beirut two days ago under the war power authority granted to the President. In consultations with the President before leaving the United States I fully supported this action and wish to commend not only U.S. Marines with whom I have met today but also the French and Italian military members of the Multi-National Force with whom I have also consulted. I assured the President of my support for this effort as an essential part of the peace-making process in Lebanon and the Middle East and have assured myself that every precaution is being taken to see that such Multi-National Forces do not become engaged in hostilities. Without their presence, however, the evacuation of military forces from West Beirut could not have taken place.

I have witnessed today and discussed with United States Marine Col. Meade, Col. Sehulster, his Italian counterpart, Senior Col. Gueli, and French Col. Coullon details of today's largest and most successful evacuation to date involving 1,351 personnel and 200 vehicles transported by motor vehicles on the Damascus Road to Syria plus more than 600 by sea making a total successful evacuation from Beirut in excess of 2,000 people.

I am confident that the evacuation will be completed more rapidly and with fewer difficulties than was anticipated.

I have met again today as I did last January with President Elias Sarkis. We discussed today his own future role in the private sector helping to restore Beirut as a business, commercial and banking center in the Middle East and I assured him of my full cooperation and support in this regard. He is to be commended for his distinguished service to his country under the most difficult circumstances.

It was a pleasure to meet once again Sheikh Bashir Gemayel. This time he has assumed his role as President-elect. We discussed the three challenging tasks that he faces: one, develop a strong central government; two, reconciliating all political factions within his country; and three, freeing Lebanon at the earliest possible time from foreign forces.

I commend him on the forward looking moderate and creative statements that he made to me and publicly as to his intentions as President; statements that he reiterated with conviction and deep feeling. We discussed in particular the way he will reach out to Lebanese Muslims in addressing their concerns and to the Palestinians, particularly the families of those that have left Lebanon. I intend to indicate to my colleagues in the Senate and to the leadership of the Executive Branch of Government my confidence in his political and humanitarian intentions and his desire to bring order, peace and stability to Lebanon for the first time in many years.

I have sent messages of appreciation to leaders of the Lebanese Muslim community, for without their assistance in the search for peace no agreement on Palestinian withdrawal could have been reached. As an individual Senator having met and talked with Muslim Lebanese leaders in the past, I can appreciate their concerns about the Presidential election just completed. I would urge, as President-elect Bashir Gemayel reaches out, that they themselves reach out to achieve a moderate forward-looking course for a united Lebanon. If Lebanon is to be successfully reunited, as we all hope and pray, all factions will be called upon to make difficult compromises and practice moderation. All should agree that the earliest possible withdrawal of foreign forces is a common goal.

I return now to my study of the problems of Cyprus and highly commend the contribution made by the Cypriots to the Lebanese peace-making effort.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMENDING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF U.S. SPECIAL NEGOTIATOR PHILIP C. HABIB

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) proposes a concurrent resolution which I am pleased to cosponsor, along with the distinguished minority leader and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. PERCY, and the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. PELL.

It deals with a commendation for Ambassador Philip C. Habib, recently the recipient of the Medal of Freedom.

Mr. President, I send the concurrent resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 118) expressing the sense of the Congress commending the achievements of U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I would like to introduce a resolution commending U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib for his outstanding achievements during the recent crisis in Lebanon.

In an area that has been torn by conflict for many years, the Lebanese conflict seemed to many of us one more long and discouraging step away from the peace settlement we have sought for so long. The suspicions and resentments that were aroused in the course of the crisis caused concern, as well, that the United States might risk losing a significant part of its ability to influence events throughout the entire region of the Middle East.

But, despite these exceedingly difficult circumstances, Mr. Habib undertook the task of serving as a special negotiator in the crisis with the full commitment of his talent and his energies. Throughout the long weeks of painstaking negotiation on arrangements for evacuation of the Palestinian forces from Beirut, he carried on with a clear-eyed appreciation of the obstacles in his path but, at the same time, with a courageous determination to overcome them.

In winning agreement to terms for an orderly departure of Palestinian forces from Beirut, Mr. Habib also helped to renew the opportunity for progress toward a settlement of the wider differences that still afflict the region of the Middle East—an opportunity that President Reagan has seized with the presentation of his new peace initiative, for which we all hold great hopes and offer our support.

Yesterday, in recognition of Mr. Habib's dedication to his task and his high accomplishments, the President awarded him the Medal of Freedom. All of us here, in the name of the American people, wish to join with the President in expressing our highest praise and our most heartfelt gratitude for the noble contribution he has made toward peace in the Middle East and throughout the world.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague from Kansas (Senator DOLE) and with the cosponsorship of Senators ROBERT C. BYRD, PERCY, and PELL, I have sent to the desk a resolution commending Ambassador Philip C. Habib for his efforts in negotiating an end to the crisis in Lebanon. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution remain open for additional cosponsors throughout the balance of the session of the Senate today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the problems of Lebanon are not over, but through the efforts of Ambassador Habib there exists the opportunity for the central government to restore its authority and territorial integrity for the first time in a number of years. We can be hopeful, perhaps even optimistic, that the promise of that opportunity will be realized, that all foreign troops will be soon removed and that the process of rebuilding a once-prosperous Lebanon can begin. This opportunity has not come without tragic costs, but the costs make it even more imperative that the opportunity, created by the efforts of Ambassador Habib, not be lost.

As the Ambassador observed yesterday in receiving from the President the Nation's highest civilian award, the Medal of Freedom, the resolution of the crisis in Lebanon is an essential step toward resolution of the larger Arab-Israeli conflict in the region. The President's initiative to that end would not have been possible without the efforts of Ambassador Habib and for that too, we are grateful.

Mr. President, I would be remiss if I failed in this context to mention Morris Draper who accompanied Ambassador Habib on each step of the long, arduous and frequently hazardous mission. Mr. Draper, Ambassador Dillon and his staff in the Embassy in Beirut, exemplify the very finest of the diplomatic service of the United States and we are well-served by their efforts.

I commend the distinguished Senator from Kansas for taking this initiative and believe it a most fitting tribute to a man in whose debt we will long remain.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, it is a privilege to join with the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), the distinguished majority leader (Mr. BAKER), the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations (Mr. PERCY), and the distinguished ranking member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations (Mr. PELL) in sponsoring this resolution commending the achievements of U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib.

Just yesterday, President Reagan presented Philip Habib with the President's Medal of Freedom Award for his efforts in achieving a resolution of the Lebanon crisis. The President's Medal of Freedom Award is the highest civilian award that can be accorded an individual who has rendered extraordinary service to our Nation. In the case of Ambassador Habib it is well-deserved recognition of his tenacity, creativity, and undiminished faith that a greater tragedy needed to be averted in Lebanon. I am sure few people felt he could achieve a successful evacuation of the Palestinian forces from Beirut. However, with the President's full backing, Ambassador Habib persevered in the end.

I also think credit should be given to Ambassador Habib's special assistant during this task—Mr. Morris Draper, a career Foreign Service officer who is presently Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs. The accolades given Mr. Draper by Ambassador Habib during yesterday's ceremonies at the White House were well deserved.

The withdrawal of Palestinian and Syrian forces from Beirut is an impressive achievement and one which I think we in the Congress should pay tribute. The road ahead will be difficult as we pursue a broader peace in the Middle East. Nevertheless, I think the Ambassador Habib's efforts, and those of all the parties concerned which led to the evacuation of foreign forces from Beirut, should serve as an example of what men of good will can achieve.

I am proud to be a sponsor of this sense of the Congress resolution expressing our appreciation to an exceptional public servant—U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 118) together with the preamble is as follows:

S. CON. RES. 118

Whereas it is in the national security interest of the United States to achieve an enduring settlement of the conflict that has afflicted the region of the Middle East for many years; and

Whereas the attainment of such a settlement depends on continuing efforts on the part of the United States to persuade all parties to the conflict to resolve their differences in a peaceful manner; and

Whereas the recent crisis in Lebanon made even more clear than before the critical need for a peace settlement in the region; and

Whereas the resolution of that crisis and the successful evacuation of the Palestinian forces from Beirut were brought about, in large measure, as a result of the activities of U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), that (1) It is the sense of the Congress that Mr. Habib warrants the highest commendation for his extraordinary achievement in negotiating the terms under which Palestinian forces were peacefully evacuated from the city of Beirut; for his success in a difficult and delicate task that constituted an essential step toward resolution of the continuing political conflict in the Middle East; and for the model he has provided of the skill, commitment, and endurance that we must sustain in our continuing effort to reach that goal; and that

(2) the Congress extends not only its praise but also its thanks, on behalf of the American people, to Mr. Habib for his accomplishments and his dedicated service in the interests of the United States and of a lasting peace in the Middle East for all its peoples.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

GOV. WALTER MENGDEN

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this past Monday was Labor Day, but in Texas it was also "Walter Mengden Day"—a day set aside to honor one of Texas' most distinguished citizens—Walter Mengden.

Walter Mengden has been a member of the Texas Senate since first elected in 1972. He is now president pro tempore of that body. So, in keeping with a fine Texas tradition, Walter Mengden was made Governor for a day on September 6 with a formal ceremony beginning with his inauguration at the capitol on Monday morning and concluding with a luncheon at which 1,000 people paid their respects to this fine man and his lovely wife, June.

I had the privilege of attending this tribute to Senator Mengden. I used the occasion to tell him, in the presence of so many of his friends, that although he did not seek reelection to the Texas Senate this year I sincerely hope that the future will find him returning to government, either in Texas or in Washington. He is a great American.

Mr. President, Walter Mengden is a direct descendent of one of the pioneer families in Texas. His family settled near Caney Bayou in Matagorda County in 1842.

Governor Mengden is a native Houstonian, born in 1926, and is a graduate of the Kinkaid School. He received his law and doctor of jurisprudence degree from the University of Texas law school and also holds a BBA from the University of Texas. Walter Mengden is a veteran of both the U.S. Navy in World War II and the U.S. Army in the Korean war. He received three battle stars and a Presidential unit citation.

Governor Mengden first ran for the Texas House of Representatives in 1964 and 1968 before finally winning in 1970. He was then elected to the Texas Senate in 1972. He was reelected in 1976, receiving more votes for State senator than anyone else in the history of Texas. In 1980, he was reelected again—this time without opposition.

During his service in the senate, Governor Mengden has been able to play an extremely significant role in working for conservative solutions to the problems facing our State. Through his efforts in continually speaking out on the issues, and through his personal persuasion, he has succeeded in passing 91 conservative bills and resolutions into law.

Governor Mengden has been especially active in sponsoring anticrime legislation. He was designated as "law enforcement's strongest supporter in the senate" by the Texas District and County Attorneys' Association. He was also twice named as "the most outstanding member of the legislature" by the Sheriffs' Association of Texas. In addition, Governor Mengden has been given a leadership award from Ross Perot's war on drugs committee for his efforts in fighting drug abuse.

Among the many significant laws that he has sponsored. Governor Mengden is especially proud of the measure that established a State "crime stopper" program to provide rewards to citizens who furnish information leading to the arrest and indictment of criminals who commit serious felonies, with emphasis on drug traffic and organized crime, and to provide State assistance in the creation of local "crime stopper" operations throughout Texas.

Other honors that have been presented to Governor Mengden include leadership awards from the Dallas County Sheriffs' Association, the Houston Police Department, Texas Young Americans for Freedom, Texas Right-to-Life, San Antonio Right-to-Life, Dallas Right-to-Life, Congress of Houston Teachers, Accelerated Christian Education, Texas Public Community-Junior College Association, Texas Independent Colleges and Universities of Texas, Associated Builders and Contractors, Coalition for Peace Through Strength, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

In addition to his successful efforts in behalf of law-and-order legislation, Governor Mengden has been a leader in working for profamily legislation. He has passed the only antiabortion bills that have been enacted into law in Texas since the infamous 1973 U.S. Supreme Court ruling. And he sponsored the law giving all cities and counties the ordinance-making power to restrict the location of "massage parlors" and other sexually oriented commercial activities,

Other important laws that Governor Mengden has put on the statute books include numerous proposals to improve the operations of our State government and to make it more responsive to the people; to protect our senior citizens from abuse and neglect; and to conserve our natural resources.

These many accomplishments have helped to significantly move Texas government in a more conservative direction. Long after Governor Mengden has left office, his legacy of conservatism will remain as a tribute to all that he has done for our State.

It is fitting that his career in public service be concluded as president pro tempore of the senate and Governor of Texas.

Mr. President, following his inauguration, Governor Mengden issued several proclamations, three of which I particularly wish to share with my colleagues and with others who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the three resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROCLAMATION: GOVERNOR WALTER MENGDEN, SEPTEMBER 6, 1982

Whereas, the foundation of all human liberty is a forthright adherence to the principles of Divine Authority as taught in the Bible and as recognized by the Founding Fathers of the American Republic who wrote:

"The God who gave us life, gave us liberty at the same time . . ."

"We hold these truths to be self evident; that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights . . . life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness; " and

Whereas, all political, civil, religious and human rights, no matter how well guaranteed by a benevolent state, become mere pious fraud if innocent life may be arbitrarily taken by despotic action of the state; and

Whereas, society at large in this decade has exhibited a growing willingness to flout both God's laws and the historical laws of political liberty concerning the sanctity with which we many concerned Texans hold life—both preborn and born; and

Whereas, the right to life is the first and most basic right of all humankind;

Now, therefore, I, Walter Mengden, Governor of Texas, do hereby proclaim this day a day of memorial to those unborn millions of human beings whose right to live unhindered by tyrannical interference on the part of those no longer helpless within the womb has been irretrievably and tragically lost; and do hereby call upon the citizens of Texas to restore that lost right to life, that all may enjoy the blessings of God spread abroad in a land of responsibly self-governed men and women subject only to the righteous and just laws of both the civil state and the Kingdom of God.

PROCLAMATION: GOV. WALTER MENGDEN, SEPTEMBER 6, 1982

Whereas, America's religious tradition is inseparable from it's heritage of liberty under the sovereignty of God; and

Whereas, prayer is that one efficacious means of both addressing and hearing the one, almighty God, Lord of both civil governments and individuals; and

Whereas, for some twenty years, the right of schoolchildren to pray publicly has been in question to the point of severely hindering the prayers of all religious sects desiring such voluntary, public prayer; and

Whereas, the people of Texas have repeatedly expressed a strong desire to reaffirm this basic right given to all by God and guaranteed by the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America;

Now, therefore, I, Walter Mengden, Governor of Texas, do hereby offer felicitations, congratulations and God-speed to all who endeavor to restore voluntary prayer to public schools and all public institutions within the State of Texas.

PROCLAMATION: GOV. WALTER MENGDEN, SEPTEMBER 6, 1982

Whereas, the fundamental concepts of individual justice, liberty, stewardship and independence beneath the authority and protection of Almighty God are inseparable from the concept of civil rule of the people, by the people and for the people; and

Whereas, stable and lasting government is historically seen to be a beneficient gift of God, given in just recompense to nations which reflect righteousness:

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."—Psalms 32: 12.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people."—Proverbs 14: 34.

"When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."—Proverbs 29: 2.

Whereas, a growing concern for the direction and fate of the nation has evidenced itself by a renewed participation in both electing and assisting the stewards of God-ordained civil government by men of all Christian faiths desiring to hold fast the revered moral principles and tenets of the faith exposed by our forefathers;

Now, therefore, I, Walter Mengden, Governor of Texas, do hereby congratulate the individuals, churches and organizations working to restore a Biblical moral foundation for government and all of national life.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF THE SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, as we all know, the President has vetoed the supplemental appropriations bill. I think that somehow in the country we have missed the significance of that veto. I think it was a very ill-advised action by the President of the United States, because that supplemental appropriation bill was $1.4 billion below—underneath, less than—President Reagan had requested. President Reagan asked for $15.6 billion. We passed a supplemental appropriation bill that provided for $14.2 billion.

When I was in second grade and we learned subtraction, we learned that 14 is less than 15 and certainly 14.2 is less than 15.6. And yet the President is saying that the bill we passed is a budget buster. If this is a budget buster, what was it the President proposed to us?

The difference, Mr. President, is not that our bill is more than the President's. It is less. People who believe in economy should vote for an override because they are voting for less than the President requested. We come in under the budget. The difference, Mr. President, is in priorities.

The fact is that the President asked for $2.1 billion more for military spending than the Congress provided. The President asked for $110 million more for foreign aid than the Congress provided. He asked for about $109 million more for a pay raise than the Congress provided.

The Congress cut every one of those. It cut military, it cut the pay raise, and it cut the foreign aid.

Now, it is true that the Congress added back $919 million—less than a billion dollars; far less than it cut. It added that money back for programs like grants for college students. What it added back for college students is interesting because the President made a cut of about 17 percent and we reduced that cut below 1981 to about 10 percent. So we still cut the funds available for students to go to college in absolute terms. And, of course, if you allow for inflation, the cut was probably closer to 15 or 20 percent. That was in the bill we passed.

We also provided somewhat more money for community service, a couple hundred million dollars more money that will provide for 55,000 jobs for the elderly—the elderly in this country, who, Mr. President, would otherwise go on welfare.

The argument that this is additional spending, I think, can be disputed. But, certainly, Mr. President, no one—no one—should miss the fact that the Congress passed a bill below what the President requested.

Now I remember, because I was managing that bill on the minority side for the Democrats, that at the time the Senate voted on this bill we put a hotline out and asked if any Member of our party opposed it. And there was no Member of our party who told us he opposed that bill as we passed it. We assured Democratic Senators that the bill was under the President's request, substantially under. I understand Senator MARK HATFIELD, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, also consulted with Republicans on his side and there was no expressed Republican opposition.

So while you cannot say that any voice vote is unanimous, nevertheless, it was obviously one that had no significant opposition and had very strong support.

In the Appropriations Committee, we went over this bill carefully. And there was no opposition to that bill when it came out of the Appropriations Committee. As you know, about a third of the Senators serve on the Appropriations Committee.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the people in this country would realize that that bill, was vetoed by the President of the United States and may or may not override the President in the House. So we may or may not have a chance in the Senate to act on it. But the bottom line is that that was an economy bill. And those who voted for that bill, either by voice vote or in the House by rollcall vote, voted for economy, and they voted for less spending. Oh, yes indeed, they voted for different priorities than the President.

Of course, the President has every right to veto a bill if it does not agree with his priorities. He should veto it if he thinks that the priorities are that much out of line.

But it is not a budget buster when we subtract far more money from the military than we put into community service and education and all other domestic programs. The answer on the effect of every spending bill that comes before us lies in the net effect: The final total amount.

The President, as I say, has every right to say we are spending too much on the domestic programs and to little on the military. I respect that. But I do not respect the argument that this supplemental appropriation bill is a budget buster or that it is excessive or that as compared with the President's bill it is anything other than an economy measure.

I hope that message—the true message—gets out as much as possible to Members in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate on August 24, August 25, August 31, September 1, and September 2, 1982, received messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received on August 24, August 25, August 31, September 1, and September 2, 1982, are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

RESCISSION AND DEFERRAL OF CERTAIN BUDGET AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 165

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate, on August 23, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which, pursuant to the order of January 30, 1975, was referred jointly to the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on the Budget, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, I herewith report a new proposal to rescind a total of $2.3 million, a new deferral of $2.7 million, and revisions to two deferrals previously reported increasing the amounts deferred by $4.8 million.

The rescission proposal affects the Board for International Broadcasting. The deferrals affect the Veterans' Administration, Interstate Commerce Commission and the President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research.

The details of the rescission proposal and the deferrals are contained in the attached reports.

ANNUAL REPORT ON PROGRESS IN SPACE AND AERONAUTICS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 166

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate on August 24, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to transmit this report of the nation's progress in space and aeronautics during 1981. The report is provided in accordance with Section 206 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2476).

In 1981, U.S. commercial and government-owned spacecraft brought important rewards from space. Particularly notable were Voyager 2, which sent closeup photographs of the Saturn planetary system, and new Explorer satellites that studied the sun's interactions with Earth's environment. Communications and weather satellites, both civil and military, furnished improved, ever-expanding daily service.

The reusable Space Shuttle Columbia made its maiden space-flight in 1981, opening a new era that will enable the nation to take full advantage of the ultimate frontier of space. With the fourth and final orbital test flight now completed, the next flights of Columbia and its sister ships will provide routine operational access to space for scientific exploration, commercial use for economic benefits, national security tasks, and the welfare of mankind.

We can all take pride in these and other accomplishments reported for 1981.

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 167

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate on August 24, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Seventh Annual Report of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission as required by Section 307(c) of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5877).

The report covers fiscal year 1981, with occasional treatment of events occurring after that period.

ANNUAL REPORT ON EAST-WEST TRADE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 168

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate on August 24, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to section 411(c) of the Trade Act of 1974, I hereby transmit the East-West Trade Report for 1981, covering trade relations between the United States and the nonmarket economy countries.

I have reviewed the sanctions on the export of oil and gas equipment to the Soviet Union imposed on December 30, 1981 and decided on June 18, 1982 to extend those sanctions through adoption of new regulations to include equipment produced by subsidiaries of U.S. companies abroad as well as equipment produced abroad under licenses issued by U.S. companies.

The objective of the United States in imposing the sanctions has been and continues to be to advance reconciliation in Poland. Since December 30, 1981, little has changed concerning the situation in Poland; there has been no movement that would enable us to undertake positive reciprocal measures.

The decision taken to extend the sanctions will, I believe, advance our objectives of reconciliation in Poland.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the following reports of committees were filed on September 3, 1982, during the adjournment of the Senate:

By Mr. GARN, from the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, without amendment:

S. 2879. An original bill to provide flexibility to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and the Federal Supervisory Agencies to deal with financially distressed depository institutions, to enhance the competitiveness of depository institutions, to expand the range of services provided by such institutions, to protect depositors and creditors of such institutions, and for other purposes (with additional views) (Rept. No. 97-536).

ADJUSTMENT OF FEDERAL WHITE COLLAR PAY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 170

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate on August 26, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Under the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970, an adjustment in Federal white collar pay will be required in October, 1982.

The Act requires that calculations be made annually of the adjustments that would be required in Federal statutory pay systems to achieve comparability with private sector pay for the same levels of work. Using the calculation methods developed in the past, my pay advisers have indicated that an average 18.47 percent increase would be required to achieve comparability as that concept is presently defined.

The Comparability Act gives me authority to propose an alternative adjustment in lieu of comparability, if such action is appropriate because of economic conditions. Under that authority, in accordance with our economic recovery program, I am submitting to the Congress an Alternative Plan for a 4-percent increase in Federal white collar pay this October in lieu of the 18.47 percent increase indicated under current comparability calculation methods.

Current law governing military pay increases provides that the annual increase in military pay be the same as the average Federal white collar increase. However Congress is currently considering legislation dealing with military pay increases. If legislation is enacted, it will supersede the increase that military personnel would otherwise receive under this Alternative Plan.

EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN PAY UNDER THE MERIT PAY SYSTEM—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 171

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate, on September 1, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Supervisors and management officials in GS-13, 14, and 15 positions throughout the Federal Government are covered by the Merit Pay System as required by Chapter 54, Title 5, U.S. Code, unless otherwise excluded by law.

Upon proper application from the heads of affected agencies and upon the recommendation of the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, I have, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 5401(b)(2)(B), excluded 9 agencies and units of agencies from coverage under the Merit Pay System.

Attached is my report describing the agency or unit to be excluded and the reasons therefor.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE REHABILITATION SERVICES ADMINISTRATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 172

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 20, 1982, the Secretary of the Senate, on September 1, 1982, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 12 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, I am pleased to transmit the enclosed report to Congress. The report, prepared by the Department of Education, covers activities supported under the Act in fiscal year 1981.

As we strive for control over the rising costs of government and sort out appropriate roles for the Federal, State and local governments, it is useful to document the gains already achieved by handicapped citizens and the role of these primarily State-administered programs in contributing to those gains.

Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. BAKER, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. PERCY, and Mr. PELL) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 118

Whereas it is in the national security interest of the United States to achieve an enduring settlement of the conflict that has afflicted the region of the Middle East for many years; and

Whereas the attainment of such a settlement depends on continuing efforts on the part of the United States to persuade all parties to the conflict to resolve their differences in a peaceful manner; and

Whereas the recent crisis in Lebanon made even more clear than before the critical need for a peace settlement in the region; and

Whereas the resolution of that crisis and the successful evacuation of the Palestinian forces from Beirut were brought about, in large measure, as a result of the activities of U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That:

(1) It is the sense of the Congress that Mr. Habib warrants the highest commendation for his extraordinary achievement in negotiating the terms under which Palestinian forces were peacefully evacuated from the city of Beirut; for his success in a difficult and delicate task that constituted an essential step toward resolution of the continuing political conflict in the Middle East; and for the model he has provided of the skill, commitment, and endurance that we must sustain in our continuing effort to reach that goal; and that

(2) the Congress extends not only its praise but also its thanks, on behalf of the American people, to Mr. Habib for his accomplishments and his dedicated service in the interests of the United States and of a lasting peace in the Middle East for all its peoples.

SENATE RESOLUTION 457—RESOLUTION RELATIVE TO THE DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

Mr. BAKER (for Mr. LUGAR, for himself and Mr. QUAYLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 457

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Honorable Adam Benjamin, Jr., late a Representative from the State of Indiana.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses today, it recess as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representatives.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED FOR PRINTING

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT

AMENDMENT NOS. 2044 THROUGH 2059

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. BAUCUS submitted 16 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520) to provide for a temporary increase in the public debt limit.

AMENDMENT NOS. 2060 THROUGH 2062

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. DANFORTH submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520), supra.

AMENDMENT NOS. 2063 THROUGH 2111

Mr. WEICKER submitted 49 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520), supra.

AMENDMENT NOS. 2112 THROUGH 2739

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. PACKWOOD submitted 628 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520), supra.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Senate Small Business Committee will hold a joint hearing with the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on State, Justice, Commerce, the Judiciary and Related Agencies on the Justice Department merger guidelines and its enforcement of antitrust laws, on Thursday, September 9, 1982, at 10 a.m., in room 424 of the Russell Senate Office Building. Senator RUDMAN will chair the hearing. For additional information, contact Brian Hartman at 224-8490 or Claudia Ingram at 224-7244.

Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Senate Small Business Committee will hold a hearing on Thursday, September 16, 1982, room 424 of the Russell Senate Office Building, at 10 a.m., to consider S. 2446, the Small Business Procurement Reform Act of 1982, and other small business procurement reforms. Senator S. I. HAYAKAWA will chair the hearing. For further information please contact Kimberly Elliott of the Small Business Committee staff at 224-3840.

COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the Budget will hold hearings next week on Budget Act reform. All hearings will be held in 6202 Dirksen Senate Office Building starting at 9:30 a.m.

The hearings are as follows:

Tuesday, September 14, 9:30-11:30 a.m.—The Honorable Henry Bellmon, cochairman, Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget; The Honorable Robert N. Giaimo, cochairman, Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget.

Thursday, September 16, 9:30-11 a.m.—Mr. George Gross, National League of Cities; Messrs. John McEvoy, Kutak, Rock, and Huie.

Thursday, September 16, 11-12:30 p.m.—Dr. Rudy Penner, American Enterprise Institute; Dr. Norman Ornstein, American Enterprise Institute.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in the next few weeks the Senate will be asked to continue funding the Legal Services Corporation. President Reagan has wanted to kill the LSC and its predecessor, the Office of Legal Services in OEO since he was the Governor of California. He has consistently tried to kill it since becoming President. I have fought against the President on this issue because I believe that the LSC is too important to eliminate. Contrary to the claims of the opponents of LSC, there is no one to take its place.

I recently received a letter from Dean Richard Huber of the Boston College Law School on the subject of the LSC and its funding. Dean Huber eloquently explains the importance and continuing need for funding the LSC I would submit the letter for the RECORD.

The letter follows:

BOSTON COLLEGE,
Newton, Mass., July 20, 1982.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: I write to ask your support for full appropriation for the Legal Services Corporation, as requested at the $265 million level for this coming fiscal year. This amount represents at best level funding of the Corporation at a time when need is slowly increasing.

The provisions for legal services to the poor in our society has been one of the great efforts of the federal government over the past fifteen years or so, and particularly so since the LSC reached an adequate level of funding. In a society such as ours, in which law is so decisive in determining rights and obligations, it is necessary that each person have some meaningful access to whatever legal services are required to gain entitlements. Otherwise the concept that all are equal before the law loses effective meaning.

Of course, in any organization as large and diverse as the LSC, abuses do occur. But the level and extent of abuse seems to me to be remarkably limited. In fact what has sometimes been labeled abuse has been merely the forceful advocacy of rights that are set out in legislation but which before this time have not been enforced. We do, as a society, tend to legislate solutions fairly readily but are weaker in enforcing this legislation. The LSC has, no doubt, by seeking enforcement of rights that have been earlier established, seemed to some to be overly aggressive. But, as we know, a right without remedy is no right at all, and the LSC has done much to assure that legislation is enforced.

On another matter, the private bar cannot assume the entire level of legal services for poor people. Only so much time can be devoted to this service since office and other costs continue even if there is no fee. And it is not unfair to note that many lawyers do not practice in areas to which the LSC necessarily devotes its services to the poor. A good lawyer can probably handle most cases competently but he or she will handle them very slowly if they cover an area of law or a type of practice dissimilar to that in which the lawyer ordinarily practices. Law schools can and do bear some of the burden but, since our purpose must be primarily educational, we can do less for the same level of expenditure than the LSC, whose purpose is solely service. And our resources are very limited.

I appreciate your attention to this rather lengthy letter. The cause is, frankly, very important to me and I hope this will excuse the length. Thank you for any assistance you can give toward full funding of the Legal Service Corporation.

Sincerely,

RICHARD G. HUBER,
Dean.

AMERICAN CONSERVATION CORPS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Public Lands and Reserved Water Subcommittee has scheduled a hearing on September 22 to consider S. 2061, legislation that Senator MATHIAS and I have introduced to create an American Conservation Corps modeled after the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930's. Our bill enjoys the bipartisan cosponsorship of 17 Members of this Chamber and a companion bill, H.R. 4861, passed the House on June 9 by a vote of 291 to 102. I am confident that the Senate will act expeditiously on this important legislation and will put thousands of unemployed young people to work conserving and rehabilitating our Nation's natural and cultural resources.

Mr. President, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention a timely essay by Mr. Harry Goldsmith that appeared in the September 5 New York Times, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The essay follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 5, 1982]

CONSTRUCTED BY DAVIDS, OCCUPIED BY GOLIATHS

(By Harry Goldsmith)

UPPER MONTCLAIR, N.J.—Camp David, the Presidential retreat, has been very much in the news. We've see Ronald Reagan strolling through the woods with the Secretary of State, and Congressmen were invited there when the President wanted to persuade them of the soundness of his tax increase.

I wonder whether the President, as he walks in the cool mountain wilderness of Camp David or relaxes in one of its rustic log cabins, is aware that he is enjoying a facility that was built by unemployed youth of two generations ago—members of the Civilian Conservation Corps. One of the earliest New Deal programs, the C.C.C. was established by Congress in 1933 to combat unemployment during the Depression.

Until the C.C.C. was terminated in 1942, it provided useful work and vocational guidance for a total of three million unemployed single young men through conserving and developing our country's natural resources.

Even as President Reagan relaxes at Camp David, he cannot help but have on his mind the hundreds of thousands of youth who are unemployed today. Perhaps it may occur to him that an answer to this blight on our society is to revive the C.C.C. program.

Camp David was not always a Presidential retreat. In the summer of 1940, my family and I spent a glorious week's vacation in this wilderness wonderland. It was then called Camp Hi-Catoctin and operated as a low-cost vacation camp for Federal employees and their families. The cost was $14 per week per adult, $7 for children; meals, lodgings and all recreational facilities were included.

There was room for only 72 guests in the camp's 18 long cabins, nestled unobtrusively among the pines, so it did not take long for us to turn into one big family.

Life at Camp Hi-Catoctin began at 7 A.M. with the bong of a gong. Breakfast was served family-style at 8 in a large dining and recreation hall. Most campers were on time for meals because life in the woods developed quite an appetite. Those few who straggled in late were greeted with a hiss.

After breakfast, campers swam in a pool of crystal-clear continuously filtered spring water, hiked, rode horses or used the craft shop or dark room. Others played badminton, Ping-Pong or softball—or settled down to some serious loafing. In the evenings, campers gathered for dancing, movies, singing or lectures on nature and the stars that filled the night sky.

Camp David is a shining example of what unemployed youth can create when given the opportunity. Through forest and wildlife protection, flood control, soil conservation, development of new state parks and recreational areas, and similar activities, the C.C.C. added to the nation's material wealth and well-being, the benefits of which are being enjoyed to this very day, even by the President.

The C.C.C. not only conserved and enhanced our natural resources but also conserved and enhanced our youth at a time of severe unemployment.

There are hundreds of thousands of jobless youth today who would also benefit if Congress revived the C.C.C.●

BUSINESS AND ENVIRONMENTAL- ISTS: A PEACE PROPOSAL

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I have seldom, if ever, read a more sensible article than Christopher Palmer's interesting essay in the August 8, Washington Post. Mr. Palmer calls for more tolerance and understanding between business and environmentalists. As one who cares about both, I think he has made a very significant and worthy statement. I commend it to my colleagues.

The essay follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 8, 1982]

BUSINESS AND ENVIRONMENTALISTS: A PEACE PROPOSAL

(By Christopher Palmer)

Environmental groups are not perfect. We have flaws, as does business. By candidly examining the flaws on both sides we may be able to defuse the destructive animosity and mutual misunderstanding, and even find areas where we can make common cause. Let me first focus on the weaknesses, both real and perceived, of environmentalists.

One of our problems is that we tend to assume a tone of arrogance when talking to business. When we environmentalists act as though we talk to God and as though we have all the answers, then industry, even those business people who are inclined to be sympathetic, will be irritated. We call ourselves "public interest" groups—the implication being that we look after the "public interest" while everyone else is pursuing his own selfish goals.

This tendency is matched by a tendency to be rigid, unwilling to compromise or negotiate. Environmentalists sometimes are afraid to bend and be flexible. We think the arguments made by industry are totally self-interested and exaggerated.

Too often environmentalists think of profits as dirty. We don't always appreciate the effectiveness of the free market. Too few of us have ever worked as entrepreneurs and, consequently, lack an appreciation of just how hard it is to succeed in business. We are much more expert at grantsmanship.

Some environmentalists are—like business people—probably not concerned enough about the harsh impact of high prices on poor people. Few of us know anything about the degradation and pain of poverty. While the image of us—in Michael Kinsley's words—as a "clique of rich people attempting to protect their backyard" is an exaggeration, nevertheless we are probably oversensitive to the desires of the upper and middle class and insufficiently sensitive to the desires of those less well off.

Environmental goals should not be pursued without regard to their consequences elsewhere. Preserving wilderness is important, but it is only one of a number of important national goals. For example, energy policy should not be based on environmental values alone. A clean environment is just one of many results we want in a energy policy, not the central driving force. Environmentalists have to accept the fact that occasionally—ideally, rarely—they may have to compromise some environmental goals for more important ones, such as jobs.

This brings me to economic growth and productivity. Too often environmentalists give the impression of wishing economic growth would somehow go away. But economic growth and increased productivity are needed to create new jobs, to increase our investments in energy efficient housing and our investments in new less-polluting industrial processes.

And finally, environmentalists, like other human beings, can suffer from parochialism. A recent issue of a major environmental magazine contained a long and detailed editorial on how domestic cats are not a threat to birds. We voraciously consume each other's newsletters but tend to neglect Business Week, Forbes and Fortune.

Let me now turn to steps that business could take to gain a better understanding of us and to help win our confidence and trust.

There should be a greater realization on the part of business of the extent to which future growth and profits depend on efforts to preserve land, air and water. Erosion control aims at maintaining the productivity of soils, essential to sustaining U.S. agricultural output. Forest conservation and reforestation are essential to the protection of soils and watersheds. Reduced pollution means fewer work days lost to environment-related illnesses. Thus, conservation and environmental protection make direct contributions to economic productivity.

Another step that business could take would be to show greater appreciation of the tremendous market opportunities in energy conservation, solar energy and pollution control. Business Week reported in its April 6, 1981, issue that the market for energy conservation investments was growing phenomanally fast and could reach $30 billion by 1985. An article in the November/December 1980 Harvard Business Review concluded that alert companies can turn pollution prevention into profit and make economic growth and environmental protection go hand in hand. There are now over 600 companies in the business of manufacturing air- and water-pollution-control equipment, including cooling towers, scrubbers, precipitators and catalytic converters. These firms constitute a multi-billion-dollar industry employing hundreds of thousand of people around the country.

There are three broad areas where we could form alliances with business. First is the area of lobbying. Recently, United Technologies and the Audubon Society formed a lobbying team to promote increased federal funding for fuel cells. Why can't we do this on other issues, such as adoption of user fees, establishment of unnecessary government bureaucracies like the Synthetic Fuels Corporation?

The second area is in defining public policy. The National Coal Policy Project, led by Larry Moss, a well-known environmentalist and former chairman of the Sierra Club, and Jerry Decker, of the Dow Chemical Company, is a good example of an attempt by both environmentalists and industry to explore common ground in their conflict over coal policy.

The third way environmentalists could form alliances with business is to enter into business partnerships. Is there any reason why environmental groups have to be limited to testifying, writing and lobbying? Why shouldn't they help to market pro-environmental products? Audubon has recently established an arrangement with an energy management company to promote energy efficiency in commercial buildings. We have just helped to sell a $100,000 system.

The opportunities for business partnerships are immense. Why shouldn't we, for example, work with manufacturers of water-heating heat pumps to develop a packet of information that would help our half million members—especially those in the South, who heat their homes with electricity—to become more familiar with this technology? Why shouldn't we produce an investment newsletter that contains information about profitable companies in solar, conservation and pollution-control equipment, which Audubon members could use in purchases and sales in their own portfolios? If we were to sit down with business and industry, we could probably come up with many more projects that could help both of us.

There is much on which we can make common cause, and business people should seek out those in the environmental movement with whom they can work. Environmentalists, in turn, should not treat industry as a monolith.

We should all be seeking the right kind of growth, growth that does not degrade the environment that others must share. Environmentalists are not opposed to business enterprises, nor to those who seek to return on invested capital. We are only opposed to mindless growth that demands a narrow advantage regardless of social costs.●

INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE FOR MIGRATION

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, our newspaper headlines remind us daily of one of the most persistent and critical international problems—the plight of refugees and migrants around the world.

Over the years, one of the international community's most important tools for dealing with the problems of migration has been the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration—which the United States was instrumental in launching following World War II.

In the 30 years since, ICM has become a lifeline of hope for millions of refugees and migrants seeking new lives in new lands. Recently, the European and Asian editions of the Reader's Digest contained an excellent article describing ICM's humanitarian work, which I would like to share with my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask that the Reader's Digest article on the ICM be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Reader's Digest, September 1982]

LIFELINE TO HOPE FOR THE WORLD'S REFUGEES

(By Rudolph Chelminski)

In the ominous months preceding last December's military crackdown in Poland, an estimated 100,000 Poles fled to the West. Most are still scattered around Europe, lodged with friends or in refugee quarters in Austria and Germany, and the sad truth is that Europe, with its weakened economy and high unemployment, can do little to help.

For these Poles, the only solution is emigration to lands like the United States, Canada, Australia or perhaps South Africa. And their only hope for getting there is embodied in three letters: ICM.

ICM stands for the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration. It is one of the least known but most important—and most quietly efficient—of the world's many international organizations. ICM's primary job is moving people in distress—finding destinations for those who have nowhere to go, and then taking them there. "Extrication" was the way one ICM worker put it.

It was ICM that resettled the 300,000 Displaced Persons remaining in Western camps after the United Nations' postwar refugee operation ended in 1951; ICM that moved the 200,000 Hungarians who fled from Soviet tanks in 1956, the 20,000 Czechs who shared the same experience in 1968, the 250,000 Soviet Jews who have chosen voluntary exile over the last decade. In all, since its birth in 1951, ICM has "extricated" more than three million refugees and exiles.

Headquartered in Geneva, ICM is a curiosity amidst the jumble of United Nations agencies that fill the Swiss city: with 131 employees (and 186 more stationed around the world), it is the smallest intergovernmental organization in town. In fact, it is not even part of the UN, and for a good reason. ICM's 30 member states and 16 associates (including Britain) have agreed on a single precondition to membership: the principle of free circulation of peoples. As a result, ICM is composed essentially of the United States, Western Europe and most of Central and South America, whose nations share its present £77-million yearly budget.

"Of the 157 UN members," observes Karel Norsky, a former British journalist based in Geneva, "less than one-third can be called true democracies. So who's going to help those who flee totalitarianism? ICM can, because it is one of the few organizations where the countries of the free world have a decisive influence."

QUIET APPROACH

ICM is often compared to a fire brigade of humanitarianism but, notes Alain Modoux of the International Committee of the Red Cross, "their humanitarianism remains discreet." ICM keeps its mouth shut and leaves value judgements to others.

"The result is that we can get things done when others can't," says a highranking ICM officer in Geneva. Thanks to ICM, 30,000 supporters of Chile's late President Salvador Allende were able to leave after Pinochet came to power in 1973—but also thanks to ICM, several hundred opponents who had fled Allende's regime were able to return home.

To understand how ICM gets things done, I spent a day with Bill Anderson, who is in charge of ICM's South-East Asian operation in San Francisco. With 700,000 Indo-Chinese refugees moved so far—more than half through San Francisco—and 250,000 more to go, it is by far ICM's biggest operation ever. The Asian refugee problem began in 1975, with the fall of Saigon, when the first "boat people" began appearing in the West in large numbers. It swelled to catastrophic proportions in 1979 when the US and other Western countries vastly increased their Asian refugee allocations.

July 1979 found Anderson ridiculously understaffed and ill-equipped as wave after wave of jumbo jets descended upon him, spewing forth hundreds of confused and exhausted refugees. "Sometimes they were stuck for hours at the San Francisco airport with no facilities, waiting for re-routing to their sponsors," Anderson recalled. "At one time we had a thousand of them sleeping on the floor."

Faced with the threat of a caretakers' strike, rumours of disease and a hostile local press, Anderson told US State Department officials that he was taking the problem into his own hands. As a stopgap, he lodged the pregnant and sick in a motel near the airport, and sent out an emergency call for volunteers.

The crowding and chaos eased the following January when the ever-resourceful Anderson found three good barrack blocks at the sprawling, unused Hamilton Air Force Base, 25 miles north of San Francisco. He cleaned them up and borrowed a thousand cots and bedding from an army camp, while his volunteers scrounged playground equipment for the children. By February 10, 1980, his Hamilton transit camp was ready for customers, and it has been filled ever since.

WELCOME GIFTS

With Anderson, I watched as the first busloads arrived from that morning's flight and were checked in. Each person was issued a hooded parka as protection against the chilly November air, and a new set of warm clothing from a considerable stock donated by local charitable and church groups.

As important to ICM as donated clothing is donated time. Volunteers and part-time help are the main reasons ICM gets so much done with so little staff; its 317 full-time employees cost £6·3 million, just over eight percent of the total budget. The regulars are outnumbered by 444 temporary staff, who range from doctors on contract to students and retired people working for free. At Anderson's transit camp, one Cambodian family named Ken was so moved by the kindness of the volunteer staff that they named their first American-born son Hamilton. It was the finest compliment they could have paid ICM.

Anderson is the first to admit that little would be possible without team effort. "We've made it work with the help of a lot of dedicated people. ICM work is a calling, like the ministry—you get addicted to it."

Addicts of Anderson's ilk abound among full-time ICM officers. Margaret Steele of the refugee assistance division, one of the few Britons at the Geneva headquarters, has been with ICM for 25 years. So has 62-year-old Dane Soren Christensen, ICM's chief of operations and transport, whose quarter-century of service has included more than one act of heroism.

In 1970 he brought planeloads of Biafran children back to Nigeria from the Ivory Coast and Gabon where they had been sent during the civil war; two years later, he snatched 5,000 terrorized Ugandan Asians out of Kampala. In 1976, in the thick of battle in Beirut, he used every ruse in the book, from bribing sentries with whisky to pretending to be a corpse in a casualty pickup truck, in order to get through the lines and bring families to safety.

ON HER TOES

Improvisation is an ICM byword, as one steward of an American airline discovered in Los Angeles. Applying to the letter an airline rule that all passengers must wear foot covers, he refused to allow a bare-foot Vietnamese refugee boy on board his plane. The ICM agent on the spot immediately wriggled out of her tights, plonked the boy into them and sent him up the ramp, daring the steward to let out a squeak. He didn't.

Another master improviser is Joe Dvorak, a canny 62-year-old Viennese, whose near-miraculous solutions to apparently insoluble problems have made him something of a living legend among ICM professionals. Dovrak sums up his approach with a personal axiom that could well be the organization's motto: "Jump into the lake and swim."

With Dvorak and his boss, Henri van Werveke, a Luxenburger who runs the ICM office for Austria, I visited the refugee camp of Traiskirchen, some 15 miles south of Vienna, where nearly 3,000 Poles were awaiting resettlement. In addition, some 23,000—mostly young families—were housed in different camps, hotels, and boarding houses throughout the country, while another 20,000 were paying their own way:

Austria is the first-asylum country, but it can't absorb these people itself," said van Werveke. "We're the only ones who can get them out for settlement elsewhere."

The situation in Austria illustrates why ICM is not a part of the UN and never will be. The UN is bound by a 1951 convention, which defines a refugee as a person who has fled his country, and no longer has the protection of a government, for reasons of racial, religious or political persecution. This did not apply to Poles fleeing to Western Europe before martial law was established last December because no tangible persecution could be proved in most cases. For the UN they were only Polish tourists in the West.

Likewise, the 1951 convention does not permit refugee status for nationals within their own country, such as the 30,000 anti-Pinochet Chileans ICM moved out in 1973, or the luckless Asians in Idi Amin's Uganda. The United Nations High Commission for Refugees does praiseworthy work, but only ICM can negotiate the fate of "unofficial refugees." Said Karl Radek, director of the Traiskirchen camp, "Over the years we have found that when you can't reach anyone else, you can always reach ICM."

EXPANDING ROLE

This kind of humanitarianism, however, is not the whole picture. Over the years, ICM has branched out into the development business with three specific programmes.

The oldest is known as Selective Migration. In 1964, after receiving a joint request from Latin-American governments, ICM began recruiting in Europe and America the specialized talent they needed to help exploit natural resources and to develop new trades and businesses. Since then, ICM has settled nearly 30,000 technicians, farmers, architects and other professionals all over Central and South America.

In 1974, ICM inaugurated two corollary programmes: Integrated Experts and Return of Talent. The first is a kind of technical shopping service for developing nations. At Ecuador's request, for example, the ICM Mission in Bonn recruited a German mechanical engineer. As a supervisor at Quito University, he has organized training programmes and instructed graduate engineers in the design, manufacture and maintenance of machine tools.

The Return of Talent programme attacks one of the most vexing problems of the Third World: the brain drain. The goal of the programme is to convince and assist those who have been trained abroad to return home or to another country in the region, where their skills are desperately needed. Since 1974 some 2,000 of them—doctors, engineers, economists among others—have been repatriated through the good offices of ICM.

The future, then, will certainly witness an increased role for ICM as a tool and a channel for developing nations. But the original humanitarian mission will remain as long as there are refugees. And the world has never had so many—more than ten million, by most estimates. As US Senator Edward Kennedy put it, looking into a troubled future, "Through this century and into the next, migration is going to be a serious international issue. If we didn't already have an ICM to deal with it, we'd have to invent one."●

TRIBUTE TO NATHAN M. CARTER, JR.

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, Baltimore and the State of Maryland are very proud of the extraordinary musical talents of the Morgan State University Choir and its outstanding director, Nathan M. Carter, Jr. This unique musical group has achieved international recognition and received numerous awards for its artistry.

This singular achievement has been accomplished through Mr. Carter's outstanding tutelage and leadership. He has inspired scores of young people to pursue active participation in the performing arts, and their contributions to the enhancement of our cultural life has been felt in Maryland and throughout the Nation.

A great musician and scholar, Mr. Carter has elevated the caliber of the choir to an enviable level of serious musicianship. The development of natural talent for artistic expression has been central to Mr. Carter's energetic and innovative direction, and the results have greatly benefited Morgan State University, the greater Baltimore community, and indeed the entire State of Maryland.

Mr. President, the friends and colleagues of Nathan Carter have reserved September 9 to recognize his outstanding record of accomplishments. I am proud to join my fellow Marylanders and ask my colleagues to join me in saluting this great Maryland citizen, whose musical achievements are deservedly recognized the world over.●

RECESS UNTIL 1 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it does not appear that there will be any further morning business at the moment. Morning business does not expire by the terms of the agreement entered into earlier until 1:11 p.m.

In view of that, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 1 p.m., at which time the Senate will resume session and there will be not more than 11 minutes of further morning business, after which the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 12:34 p.m., recessed until 1 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. PACKWOOD).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of Oregon, suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Chair now state the pending business?

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

TEMPORARY INCREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the unfinished business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520) to provide for a temporary increase in the public debt limit.

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS).

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, it is my hope that at some time today or tomorrow we will be able to negotiate an agreement for an arrangement to temporarily lay aside the pending measure and proceed to the consideration of the Hatch amendment to the Constitution under a time agreement.

I think the parties are negotiating in good faith. I think it is not possible to get that agreement today.

I will examine that situation again tomorrow to see what the prospects are.

For the remainder of this day I anticipate that we will be on the debt limit bill and the pending question of the Baucus amendment as and until that matter is disposed of.

I remind Members of the Senate that under the order previously entered there will be a vote on cloture against further debate on the Helms second degree amendment to occur at 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, if I may ask the majority leader a quick question, what time would the majority leader envision he wishes to go out tonight?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is, of course, up to the managers of the bill and the manager of the pending question, but it would not be my expectation that we would be in very late today. There is a cloture vote tomorrow, and I do not see any particular reason to keep the Senate in late. I would anticipate something in the range of 5 p.m.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the majoriy leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS) for the purpose of debate only without losing my right to the floor and without this being considered the end of one speech for the purpose of the two-speech rule; and I further ask unanimous consent to be allowed to be seated during the period of time to be required by the Senator from Montana, Senator BAUCUS, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Montana.

AMENDMENT NO. 2040

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I also thank the Senator from Oregon for his industrious and persevering efforts with regard to the pending question as well as the pending business.

Mr. President, at an earlier stage I outlined some of the reasons why I am very much opposed to these court-stripping amendments that are introduced in the Congress in various forms. There are some 34 court-stripping amendments introduced in various bills, and certainly the amendments offered by the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) are court-stripping amendments, one to a greater degree than the other.

The amendment which would limit Supreme Court review of school prayer certainly is court-stripping in its purest form. The provisions of the other amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina are of a court-stripping nature but not of the same pure form as the amendment offered with respect to the school prayer bill.

In an earlier time I outlined some of the reasons why I think it would be a tragedy for this body, for the Congress, to adopt these kinds of amendments, and at this point, Mr. President, I would like to summarize and conclude some remarks to those earlier statements I made.

Mr. President, the Helms amendment I think presents the Senate with—I said tragedy, and I think that is the word—also an overwhelming constitutional concern. The impact of this amendment on our judicial system and on Congress I think has been grossly underestimated, certainly by those who are proponents of the amendment. Although this body voted favorably on this language 3 years ago, I now ask that each and every Member reconsider his vote because it is my firm view when this body voted earlier it did not focus on the court-stripping aspects of the amendment, and had this body done so the result would have been much different.

In the time that has elapsed since the vote on the Helms amendment, public awareness and interest in these matters, I think, have very much increased. In August of 1981 the house of delegates of the American Bar Association, for example, overwhelmingly approved a resolution opposing the "legislative curtailment of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States or the inferior Federal courts for the purpose of effecting changes in constitutional law." Let me repeat. That was in August of 1981. The house of delegates of the American Bar Association overwhelmingly approved a resolution opposing the "legislative curtailment of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States or the inferior Federal courts for the purpose of effecting changes in constitutional law."

I think that is significant that the lawyers of America, men and women who understand our constitutional process, our legal process, are overwhelmingly against this kind of approach to attempt to change Federal constitutional law.

Since then the leadership of the organized bar has repeatedly spoken out and testified against the jurisdiction-removal proposals. The president of the ADA has described the court-stripping bills as posing "a possible constitutional crisis that could prove the most serious since the Civil War." Let me repeat that, this is the president of the ABA, American Bar Association, speaking. He said these court-stripping bills posed "a possible constitutional crisis that could prove the most serious since the Civil War."

The American College of Trial Lawyers has gone on record in opposition to the jurisdiction bills. They state:

> The doors of the Federal courts must remain open to litigants whose claims arise out of the Federal Constitution. This issue should not divide conservatives and liberals or Democrats and Republicans, nor should it divide those who support or disagree with one or another constitutional decision of the Supreme Court.

Those are the trial lawyers in addition to the American Bar Association. In fact, opposition to the court-stripping bills has been bipartisan and has crossed ideological lines. The Senator from Arizona, the senior Senator from Arizona, has recently spoken out eloquently against the jurisdiction-removal bills. Senator GOLDWATER has observed:

> I am strongly opposed to the breakup of neighborhood schools. I think the unborn baby is entitled to some protection. And I believe school children should be allowed a few moments of voluntary prayer. In my view, the Supreme Court has erred. But we should not meet judicial excesses with legislative excesses.

This is still the senior Senator from Arizona speaking:

> What particularly troubles me about trying to override constitutional decisions of the Supreme Court by a simple bill is that I see no limit to the practice.
> There is no clear and coherent standard to define why we shall control the Court in one area but not another. The only criteria seem to be that whenever a momentary majority can be brought together in disagreement with a judicial action it is fitting to control the Federal courts. Whether or not Congress possesses the power of curbing judicial authority, we should not invoke it. As sure as the sun will rise over the Arizona desert the precedent will return to oppress those who would weaken the courts. If there is no independent tribunal to check legislative or executive action, all of the written guarantees of rights in the world would amount to nothing.

As I mentioned, this issue should not divide Republicans and Democrats and should not divide liberals and conservatives. We should be unanimous and, as pointed out by the Senator from Arizona, if there is no independent tribunal to check legislative or executive action, all the written guarantees of rights in the world will amount to absolutely nothing.

Unfortunately, the momentary majorities that Senator GOLDWATER speaks of are proceeding to exert enormous pressure on Congress. Certain constituencies are continuing to pursue the legislative end runs of the Constitution.

While the proponents of this amendment may represent a formidable political force, the Nation has previously faced and withstood challenges to the independence of the Federal judiciary. One such challenge occurred in 1937 when President Roosevelt proposed to increase the size of the Supreme Court. He felt that a series of Supreme Court decisions threatened the success of his national recovery program, and by proposing to alter the Court's composition he hoped to force the Court to uphold the constitutionality of his economic plan.

The people in Congress resoundingly defeated the Roosevelt plan. The court-packing plan was seen for what it was, a significant threat to the independence of the judicial branch.

As we now consider this amendment, we should keep in mind the wise words of those who successfully defended the Supreme Court in 1938. One such Senator was Senator Burton K. Wheeler from my own State of Montana, who delivered this warning which applies with equal force today. I quote Senator Wheeler:

So I say it is morally wrong to do by indirection what cannot be done by direction. It is morally wrong to change the Constitution by coercive interpretation. Of course, Mr. President, there have been abuses in the court. I have been one who disagreed with them and I expect to disagree with them again. But I am unwilling on the basis of some specious argument or some subterfuge that denies the spirit of the Constitution to participate in setting one of the most dangerous precedents that has ever been conceived by this Congress or by any other.

I urge my colleagues to consider those wise words because I think they applied with tremendous force then in 1937 and they apply with equal force today. I urge my colleagues to oppose these court-stripping amendments that are pending before us today.

Mr. President, let me go through now a set of questions that are often asked concerning the court-stripping amendments offered in the main by the Senator from North Carolina, go through some of the questions and then attempt to answer them as best I possibly can.

The first question that is often asked is this: How does the Helms court-stripping amendment alter existing law?

Under current law, the U.S. district courts have jurisdiction to determine whether State or Federal courts violate any rights secured by the U.S. Constitution. In addition, the U.S. Supreme Court has jurisdiction to review any decision of a State or Federal court construing the U.S. Constitution.

The Helms amendment would alter existing law by precluding the U.S. district courts and the U.S. Supreme Court from considering whether State enforcement of any State law "which relates to voluntary prayers in public schools and public buildings" violates any provision of the U.S. Constitution or other Federal law. It would preclude the courts from considering any of those actions.

Question: Does the Helms amendment change the law regarding prayer in schools and other public buildings?

Answer: No. The bill only restricts the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. It does not alter the constitutional law governing the permissibility of prayer in public buildings.

Question: What is the legislative objective in support of eliminating Federal jurisdiction over cases pertaining to school prayer?

Answer: Some legislators disagree with decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court interpreting the first amendment to limit prayer in public schools. The sponsors of this amendment view the bill as one means of undermining those Supreme Court rulings by providing the State courts an opportunity to circumvent the Supreme Court and to permit prayer in the schools under circumstances where the U.S. Supreme Court has found it to be prohibited by the Constitution.

Let me emphasize one key point in that last question and answer. The question again: What is the legislative objective in support of eliminating Federal jurisdiction over cases pertaining to school prayer?

As I explained in the answer, essentially it is because some legislators disagree with decisions of the Supreme Court and they are attempting to, by legislation, undermine Supreme Court rulings. But in so doing, if we pass these court-stripping bills, we provide the State courts an opportunity to circumvent the Supreme Court and circumvent the Constitution.

What does that mean? That means we could have 50 separate decisions by 50 separate Supreme Courts interpreting the Federal Constitution and with no review by the U.S. Supreme Court or other Federal courts. Think of that. Fifty separate decisions interpreting Federal constitutional provisions. Where does it lead? Not only to school prayer, but free speech, freedom of press, freedom of religion, the right against self incrimination, the right to bear arms—you name it.

In my view, Mr. President, if that were to happen, we would not have a Confederacy. We would have 50 separate nations. We would have 50 separate jurisdictions fairly soon, very quickly at war with each other. And our national motto of e pluribus unum would be without the unum. It would be all pluribus. And I think that is not the direction we want to go in.

Another question that is asked: Would the Helms amendment accomplish that objective? The objective being overturning the Supreme Court decisions particularly with respect to school prayer.

The answer is, probably not. First, that objective could only be accomplished if State court judges are willing to violate their oath of office by refusing to enforce the U.S. Constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court in cases already decided. A critical point. The Helms objective would only be accomplished, if the statute passes, if State supreme courts violate their oath of office to uphold the U.S. Constitution by interpreting the Constitution in a way contrary to the last decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court on that issue. That is the only way that the Helms objective, ultimate objective, could be accomplished.

Second, there is no assurance that all States, for all time, would use this immunity from Federal judicial review to expand, reather than to restrict, the opportunity for prayer in public places.

Think of that. State supreme courts could restrict, they will not necessarily expand upon the latest decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court, which would not, by the statute, have authority to review those State supreme court decisions.

The Helms amendment would, for example, preclude Federal courts from invalidating a State law prohibiting individuals from participating in prayer in a public building under circumstances where the U.S. Supreme Court would have held that the law represented an unconstitutional infringement of the individual's first amendment rights to engage in the free exercise of religion.

Another question often asked: Does Congress have the power to enact the Helms amendment?

The answer is, No. Although Congress does have some power to regulate the jurisdiction of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Supreme Court has held that Congress cannot constitutionally use this power for the purpose of undermining the finality of Supreme Court decisions with which the Congress disagrees. There are various precedents, various opportunities, various times when the Court has spoken on this issue. One is the United States against Klein in 1872. And in the United States against O'Grady in 1875, the Court found that there is only one Supreme Court and "it is quite clear that Congress cannot subject the judgments of the Supreme Court to reexamination and revision of any other tribunal or any other department of the Government." Yet the only objective of the Helms amendment is to subject the judgments of the U.S. Supreme Court to review under a provision by other State tribunals.

As Justice Rehnquist recently stated: "It is not the province of Congress to judge the persuasiveness of the opinions of Federal courts—that is the judiciary's province alone." That was in United States against Sioux Nation, a 1980 case.

The American Bar Association have also adopted a resolution asserting its position that the Congress does not have constitutional authority to enact the Helms amendment.

The Constitution does provide Congress with the means to initiate a change in the constitutional school prayer doctrine—it very much does—not by the usurpation of judicial power, but by the amendment process established in article V of the Constitution. That is the only power which this Congress can constitutionally exercise to achieve the legislative objective advanced by the pending amendment.

To repeat, the only power that our forefathers and the framers provided to amend the Constitution or to overturn the Supreme Court decisions is through the constitutional amendment process.

Mr. President, we are not here today to debate whether to amend the Constitution. We are debating today only with respect to the court-stripping amendments that are now pending whether, by statute, to prohibit the Supreme Court from reviewing certain Federal constitutional questions.

Another question asked is: Is there any congressional precedent for removal of jurisdiction to review the constitutionality of State action?

The answer, again, is no. In the past, when Congress has disagreed with the wisdom of Supreme Court interpretations of the Constitution, Congress has initiated a change in the law by proposing a constitutional amendment. When legislators have attempted to short circuit the constitutionally established amendment process by proposing the removal of Federal jurisdiction, the Congress has adhered to its long and respected tradition of separation of powers and rejected these measures.

Another question is this: Are the issues removed from Federal court review by the Helms amendment limited to those concerning the scope of allowable prayer in public places?

Again, the answer is, no. The bill—and this is important—precludes review of any State action enforcing a law which "relates to voluntary prayer in public schools and public buildings." Thus the Federal courts would be precluded from a whole range of due process, equal protection, and other constitutional issues. For example, if a State enacted a statute allowing a school to fine and dismiss, without notice or any opportunity for a hearing, any teacher who allegedly failed to allow voluntary prayer in a classroom, the Federal courts would be precluded from determining not only whether the statute satisfied the first amendment, but also whether it satisfied due process. Nor could the Federal courts determine whether a black teacher allegedly fired on the basis of such a statute was in fact fired on the basis of race, in violation of the 14th amendment or the civil rights laws. A statute allowing Christians but not Jews to recite prayers in class would also not be subject to challenge in Federal court.

Another question sometimes asked with respect to the pending measure:

Would the removal of jurisdiction over school prayer cases under the Helms amendment impair the uniform administration of law in the State and Federal courts?

The obvious answer is yes. By removing Supreme Court jurisdiction, 51 different courts will have the final authority to interpret the Federal Constitution as it applies to prayer in public buildings. Thus despite a Federal Constitution granting rights equally to all the people of the United States, residents of Texas may not enjoy the same Federal constitutional rights as residents of New York, or vice versa. Just as the State courts should have final authority to interpret the State constitution, the Federal courts should have final authority to construe the Federal Constitution.

As a result of the Helms amendment the first amendment would also be applied differentially to State and Federal action. The constitutionality of prayer in Federal buildings and enclaves would be measured by the standards established by the Federal courts. The constitutionality of State laws would be measured by the standards established by that State.

The removal of Federal court jurisdiction is also a direct challenge to the independence of the judiciary's constitutional authority to render interpretations of the Supreme Court binding on the other branches of Government. Passage of the Helms amendment would represent an assertion by Congress that it does not feel bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court—an assertion which threatens our system of governance.

Mr. President, I think it would be appropriate now to enter into the RECORD a comment on a letter written by former officials of the Department of Justice in opposition to the Helms court-stripping proposal. I might note that while S. 481 is not exactly word for word identifical it is virtually identical to the amendment before us.

This letter is addressed to Hon. GEORGE BUSH, President of the U.S. Senate, Vice President of the United States. It is also addressed to Hon. HOWARD BAKER, the majority leader of the U.S. Senate, as well as to Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD, minority leader, U.S. Senate; Hon. STROM THURMOND, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and Hon. JOSEPH BIDEN, the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

SIRS: As former officials of the United States Department of Justice, we are deeply concerned that the judicial system in the United States would be improperly and needlessly impaired by passage of S. 481, which would eliminate all federal court jurisdiction to determine the constitutionality of state laws relating to voluntary prayer in public schools and buildings. Before voting on S. 481, we urge you to consider the reasons why Congress has never before pursued such a legislative course.

As I said, S. 481 is virtually identical to the pending amendment by the Senator from North Carolina as it applies to school prayer.

Continuing on with the letter:

The Supreme Court of the United States was vested with the authority to render constitutional interpretations binding on the Congress, the Executive Branch and the fifty states. If the Members of Congress disagree with the wisdom of the Supreme Court's construction of any constitutional provision, such as the terms of the First Amendment governing the establishment and free exercise of religion, Article V of the Constitution provides Congress with the means to initiate a change in the law by amendment. To circumvent Article V by withdrawing all federal court jurisdiction would undermine the separate roles of Congress and the judiciary and destroy the uniform interpretation of federal constitutional rights in the fifty states.

We may differ among ourselves as the correctness of the Supreme Court's decisions concerning school prayer, but we are unanimous in our judgment that S. 481 is unconstitutional. We therefore urge you to oppose S. 481.

Very truly yours,

BENJAMIN R. CIVILETTI.
ERWIN N. GRISWOLD.

HAROLD R. TYLER, JR.

I would now like to read a letter from Prof. Jesse Choper, now dean of Boalt Law School, University of California at Berkeley, concerning the constitutionality and wisdom of the Helms school prayer amendment. This letter is addressed to me, dated August 11, 1981.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: I have your letter of July 27 concerning S. 481. Let me respond, albeit briefly, to the questions you put:

1. I profess no expertise as to whether, as a matter of original intent, the Fourteeth Amendment was meant to apply the Bill of Rights to the States.

2. Even if the Fourteenth Amendment was not intended to "incorporate" the Bill of Rights, the school prayer decisions are not "unconstitutional" because even those Justices like John M. Harlan—who argued vigorously that the Fourteenth Amendment did not apply the Bill of Rights to the States—believed that prayer and bible reading in the public schools violated the "fundamental fairness" guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. (Indeed, although Justice Frankfurter did not participate in the school prayer decisions, I am confident from his other relevant opinions that he agreed with the school prayer decisions despite his strongly stated opposition to the "incorporation" theory.)

3. Even if the school prayer decisions are "unconstitutional", I do not believe that Congress' proper course of action is to remove the Court's jurisdiction. In my view, if Congress disagrees with the Court's decisions, the honored remedy is a constitutional amendment.

4. The Supreme Court's decisions on the question of removing Supreme Court jurisdiction over an issue like school prayer are few and opaque. Therefore, there is no authoritative answer to your question. My personal view is that S. 481 would itself violate the First Amendment guarantees of religious freedom.

5. As I have indicated in my responses to questions 3 and 4 above, I think that it is not advisable, as a matter of public policy, for Congress to remove Supreme Court jurisdiction over constitutional issues generally or over the school prayer issue specifically.

One final point. S. 481 talks about "voluntary prayers in pubic schools." As I have argued at length elsewhere—in Volume 47 of the Minnesota Law Review—I do not believe that prayer and bible reading in public schools can be voluntary.

Please let me know if I can be of any service.

Sincerely,

JESSE CHOPER,
Professor of Law.

Mr. President, I would now like to read a letter from law professor Louis Henkin, of Columbia University Law School, again on the constitutionality and wisdom of the Helms school prayer amendment. It is dated September 3, 1981.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: I respond to the several questions in your letter of July 27 about S. 481.

1. It is intrinsic to our constitutional system that the Supreme Court is the final arbiter of what the Constitution means. The Supreme Court's decisions in the "school prayer cases" are not and cannot be unconstitutional.

2. Congressional disagreement with a constitutional interpretation by the Supreme Court on a particular issue is not in my view a sufficient cause for removing the Court's jurisdiction of cases involving that issue.

3. Whether Congress has the constitutional authority to remove the Supreme Court's jurisdiction of cases involving issues like school prayer has been sharply debated. Only the Supreme Court can decide that question authoritatively. But whatever the authority of Congress in theory, I am firmly convinced that for Congress to attempt it would not achieve the purposes of the authors and would do grave damage to our constitutional system. I am unalterably opposed to S. 481 and similar bills.

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS HENKIN.

Now, Mr. President, I would like to read an excerpt from another letter I have received. This is a letter from Prof. Thomas Emerson, of Yale University Law School, again concerning the constitutionality and the wisdom of the Helms' court-stripping amendment.

Quoting from Professor Emerson's letter dated August 28, 1981:

1. There is a long-standing dispute as to whether the 14th Amendment was, as an original matter, intended to apply the Bill of Rights to the States. The issue is now, however, a purely academic one. For many years it has been settled through Supreme Court decisions that, with one minor exception, the Bill of Rights does apply to the States. The obligation of the States to observe the protections embodied in the First Amendment, including the prohibition against government establishment of religion, has been accepted law for over 50 years. Any reversal or modification of this basic constitutional doctrine would require an amendment to the Constitution and would amount to a revolutionary departure from our traditional structure of government.

2. Even if the 14th Amendment was not intended "to incorporate the Bill of Rights" the Supreme Court would probably have reached the same result by holding that freedom from government establishment of religion was a "privilege or immunity" of citizens of the United States and not subject to "abridgment" by the States under the 14th Amendment. Or possibly it would have come to the same conclusion under the due process clause of the 14th Amendment. The right to freedom of religion was a major factor in the settlement of the American colonies and remained a fundamental tenet of American constitutional faith.

3. The fact that Congress, the President, or others believe that the Supreme Court decisions in the school prayer cases are "unconstitutional", or wrongly decided, is not cause for Congress to remove the jurisdiction of the courts from that area. The appropriate remedy is a constitutional amendment. Any attempt to achieve a constitutional amendment by manipulating the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court or the lower courts, amounts to an overruling of the principle, established since Marbury v. Madison in 1803, that the ultimate decision on matters of constitutional law is entrusted to the courts, not to the legislature. In other words any such action by Congress would destroy the entire structure of judicial review upon which maintenance of our constitutional rights so largely depends.

Mr. President, I think that is an important point. Let me repeat it because I think Professor Emerson states it as well and succinctly as anyone can. I am quoting now from the letter dated August 28 from Professor Emerson of the Yale Law School to me.

3. The fact that Congress, the President, or others believe that the Supreme Court decisions in the school prayer cases are "unconstitutional", or wrongly decided, is not cause for Congress to remove the jurisdiction of the courts from that area, The appropriate remedy is a constitutional amendment. Any attempt to achieve a constitutional amendment by manipulating the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court or the lower courts, amounts to an overruling of the principle, established since Marbury v. Madison in 1803, that the ultimate decision on matters of constitutional law is entrusted to the courts, not to the legislature. In other words any such action by Congress would destroy the entire structure of judicial review upon which maintenance of our constitutional rights so largely depends.

To continue with the letter:

4. Congress does not have the authority to remove the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over an issue like school prayer. The power of Congress under Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution to make "exceptions" to, or issue "regulations" regarding, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was intended to apply to minor, mostly house-keeping or procedural, matters. It was not designed to allow Congress to emasculate the function of the Supreme Court by withdrawing jurisdiction in any area where a majority of Congress disagreed with a Supreme Court decision. There is nothing in the Supreme Court cases, including Ex Parte McCardle, which suggests the contrary.

Let me repeat that point, Mr. President, because it addresses a point which is often being raised, that Congress, under the exceptions clause, does have the authority to remove Court jurisdiction.

4. Congress does not have the authority to remove the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over an issue like school prayer. The power of Congress under Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution to make "exceptions" to, or issue "regulations" regarding, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was intended to apply to minor, mostly house-keeping or procedural, matters. It was not designed to allow Congress to emasculate the function of the Supreme Court by withdrawing jurisdiction in any area where a majority of Congress disagreed with a Supreme Court decision. There is nothing in the Supreme Court cases, including Ex Parte McCardle, which suggests the contrary.

Mr. President, that is an important point. It is an apparent point, an obvious point. If the framers intended Congress to have the right, through the exceptions clause, to remove, willy-nilly, by a bare civil majority vote, Supreme Court jurisdiction on any Federal constitutional issue, then the framers would necessarily want Congress to have the power to eliminate the Supreme Court and, at the same time, eliminate the Constitution. If the framers wanted Congress, through the exceptions clause, to have the power by a simple civil majority to prohibit Supreme Court review of any constitutional right—remember, now, we are talking about Federal constitutional rights, the Bill of Rights, for example—then the framers intended necessarily for Congress to have the constitutional authority to limit Supreme Court review over any constitutional issue and therefore eliminate the Constitution and eliminate one branch of our three branches of Government. In effect, what we would be doing is going back to the lack of rule of law that our Founding Fathers tried to get away from when they came to our country.

That is, they came to our country to avoid religious persecution, to avoid the tyranny of the monarchies of various European countries. That is why our Founding Fathers wrote a Constitution of Federal rights, so the whims of Government could not override basic Federal guarantees. If the framers, by the exceptions clause, did not intend regular procedural or housekeeping matters, those matters given to the authorities of the Congress, but rather, the Founding Fathers wanted Congress willy-nilly, through the exceptions clause, to eliminate Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction, then, necessarily, the Founding Fathers intended Congress as a matter of constitutional right to pass legislation removing limitations over any right and therefore eliminate the Supreme Court jurisdiction over procedural questions. I do not think that is what the Founding Fathers had in mind.

Continuing the letter from Professor Emerson:

5. Even if Congress had the authority to deprive the Supreme Court and other Federal courts of power to decide constitutional questions it would be reckless and irresponsible for Congress to do so. Our constitutional system has long operated under the principle that the maintenance of our system of individual rights rests in crucial part upon the power of the courts—institutions somewhat removed from the clashes of partisan politics—to guarantee adherence to the Bill of Rights, including the right to freedom of religion. Abandonment of this structure would be a constitutional catastrophe.

The concluding paragraph of Professor Emerson states as follows:

I have not attempted to buttress the foregoing statements by reference to court decisions, legal treatises, or similar materials because the propositions set forth are so elementary. I am sure they represent the views of the overwhelming majority of constitutional scholars. And I hope they will not be lost sight of or obscured in a maze of legal technicalities.

Again, Mr. President, the view of one man and one man only, Professor Emerson of Yale. He says that he has not buttressed his aforegoing statements by references to court decisions, legal treatises or similar materials because the propositions set forth are so elementary.

I might add, Mr. President, that sometimes in this body, because we are caught up too often in such detail, overwhelmed in many cases with trivia, it is easy for us to not see the forest for the trees. Too often we see only the trees and not the elementary provisions that are so obvious to all of us if we stand back a few steps and ask what we are doing, particularly if we adopt the pending amendments.

(Mr. GORTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I should now like to read excerpts of a letter from another law professor—this is Prof. Eugene Gressman of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Law—concerning the constitutionality and wisdom of the court-stripping bills before us. Professor Gressman of the University of North Carolina is a noted expert on the Supreme Court.

This is a letter dated January 26 of this year to me:

DEAR SENATOR: I regret that my involvement in preparing for the imminent Supreme Court argument in the Chadha "one-House veto" case, wherein I represent the House of Representatives, has prevented an earlier response to your August 12 letter. In that letter, you put forth five questions that your subcommittee will be examining in forthcoming hearings on S. 481, which would strip the Supreme Court and the lower Federal courts of jurisdiction over any case which relates to voluntary prayers in public schools and public buildings.

I preface my answers to these questions with the remark that in recent weeks I have had occasion to review the entire problem of congressional power to revise and remove certain aspects of article III judicial power from the jurisdictional ambits of the Supreme Court and the lower Federal courts. The occasion has been thorough discussions of these matters in my courses in Constitutional Law and Federal Jurisdiction. And I am sure you are aware of the recent analysis of these jurisdictional problems by Professor Sager in last November's issue of the Harvard Law Review, "Foreword: Constitutional Limitations on Congress' Authority to Regulate the Jurisdiction of the Federal Courts," 95 Harv. L. Rev. 17 (1981). I would say that I am in thorough agreement with Professor Sager's analysis, and with his conclusion (p. 89).

Professor Gressman now quotes Professor Sager, and I read that excerpt:

Adoption of any of the bills that are part of the proposed assault on the federal judiciary would set a dangerous and tawdry precedent by sabotaging the integrity of the judicial process. The Constitution neither empowers Congress to enact legislation of this sort, nor prevents the Supreme Court from acting to restore the balance of governmental authority. But one must hope that constraints of conscience will make those of the Constitution unnecessary. . . . But these bills propose a gross breach of the institutional premises by which we have chosen to govern ourselves, and no legislator should succumb to their temptation.

I am now reading from the letter from Professor Gressman. The last quotation was from Professor Sager by Professor Gressman. This is now Professor Gressman in a letter to me dated January 26 of this year:

If the school prayer decisions are unconstitutional, isn't that sufficient cause for the Congress to remove the Supreme Court's jurisdiction from that area?

Mr. President, that is the question that I posed to Mr. Gressman. The question is again, "If the school prayer decisions are unconstitutional, is that not sufficient cause for the Congress to remove the Court's jurisdiction from that area?" Logical question. This is Professor Gressman's response:

No. As I have explained above, no decision of the Supreme Court can be considered unconstitutional, unless the Court is somehow acting beyond the scope of its vested judicial power. Whether outsiders agree or disagree with the Court's interpretation of the Constitution, the decision itself must be deemed constitutional. Under the basic theory of the Court's role in the interpretation and application of the Constitution, the Constitution has to mean what the Supreme Court declares it to mean. Thus a decision interpreting the Constitution as applied to public school prayers cannot be considered unconstitutional. Nor can it serve as "sufficient cause" to remove the Court's jurisdiction from that area.

This is the fourth question that I posed to various law professors around the country. The question is, Does the Congress have the constitutional authority to remove Supreme Court jurisdiction over an issue like school prayer? Professor Gressman's response:

No, absolutely not. This question and answer, I know, are very controversial, and to explore all aspects of the problem would fill a fat volume. I content myself in this letter to a reference to the one Supreme Court decision that I believe makes a definitive negative answer to the question put. That decision is United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. (80 U.S.) 128 (1871).

In the Klein case, Congress sought to remove the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over a certain kind of case arising out of the Court of Claims. It did so in purported reliance on the power of Congress in Section 2 of Article III to make "such Exceptions" to the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction "as the Congress shall make." The Court invalidated this attempt to strip the Court of the designated appellate jurisdiction. The reason why the Court invalidated this purported "Exception" is what is now critically important.

The kind of case that Congress sought to exclude from from the appellate jurisdiction involved suits to recover property confiscated by the Government "in insurrectionary districts" wherein the claimant introduced into evidence a Presidential pardon as to any rebellious actions; upon such proof of a pardon or amnesty, the claimant was entitled to recover his seized property. The Supreme Court had earlier held that proof of such a pardon would entitled the claimant to relief—a decision with which the Congress apparently disagreed. Thereafter, Congress expressed its displeasure with the earlier decision by providing that:

"• • • in all cases where judgment shall have been heretofore rendered in the Court of Claims in favor of any claimant [wherein proof of loyalty was shown in the form of a Presidential pardon], the Supreme Court shall, on appeal, have no further jurisdiction of the cause, and shall dismiss the same for want of jurisdiction." 16 Stat. 235.

That was the attempted legislative action in response to the Court's action.

The Court was unanimous in its determination that such an appellate jurisdiction "Exception" was impermissible. It did so after acknowledging that if the statute had "simply denied the right of appeal in a particular class of cases," it would be "our duty to give it effect" for there "could be no doubt that it must be regarded as an exercise of the power of Congress to make 'such exceptions from the appellate jurisdiction' as should seem to it expedient." 13 Wall. at 145.

But, said the Court, this statute did something more than create an "Exception" to its appellate jurisdiction. The statutory language, said the Court, "shows plainly that it does not intend to withhold appellate jurisdiction except as a means to an end." 13 Wall. at 145 (emphasis added). The impermissible end, the "great and controlling purpose is to deny to pardons granted by the President the effect which this court has adjudged them to have." id. The Court having earlier determined that pardons were to be taken as "equivalent to proof of loyalty," it follow that:

"• • • the denial of jurisdiction to this court, as well as to the Court of Claims, is founded solely on the application of a rule of decision, in causes pending, prescribed by Congress. The court has jurisdiction of the cause to a given point; but when it ascertains that a certain state of things exists, its jurisdiction is to cease and it is required to dimiss the cause for want of jurisdiction.

"It seems to us that is not an exercise of the acknowledged power of Congress to make exceptions and prescribe regulations to the appellate power.

"We must think that Congress has inadvertently passed the limit which separates the legislative from the judicial power . . . Congress has already provided that the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction of the judgments of the Court of Claims on appeal. Can it prescribe a rule in conformity with which the court must deny to itself the jurisdiction thus conferred, because and only because its decision, in accordance with settled law, must be adverse to the government and favorable to the suitor? This question seems to us to answer itself." 13 Wall. at 146-147 (emphasis added).

In other words, Congress was found to have had two unconstitutional objectives in mind in passing this "Exception" statute: (1) an interference with the judicial function of deciding a particular kind of case or controversy in a particular way; and (2) an impairment of the constitutional power of the Executive to grant pardons and to have them respected by the judiciary. Such impermissible purposes drained the statute of its claim to be a mere "Exception" to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court. Congress, in short, cannot seek unconstitutional ends under the guise of creating an exception to the Court's appellate jurisdiction.

It seems to me that the Klein decision and rationale constitute a complete negative answer to your Question 4.

I repeat Question 4:

Does the Congress have the constitutional authority to remove Supreme Court jurisdiction over an issue like school prayer?

Again, Professor Gressman says:

It seems to me that the Klein decision and rationale constitute a complete negative answer to your Question 4.

The effort in S. 481 to make an exception to the Court's appellate jurisdiction stems from disagreement with the Court's earlier decisions in Engel V. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962), and Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963), invalidating state requirements respecting prayers and Bible readings in public schools. In like fashion, the jurisdictional legislation in the Klein case stemmed from Congressional disagreement with an earlier Supreme Court decision declaring that a Presidential pardon was the equivalent of proof of loyalty.

When Congress expresses its disagreement with some Supreme Court decision by attempting to withdraw the Court's appellate jurisdiction over the subject matter of the disputed decision, the attempt seems to spawn a host of constitutional roadblocks. In Klein, once the effort was stripped of its "Exception" veneer, the Court found that the legislation was really aimed at invading the judicial decision-making function, as well as the Executive's vested pardoning power. In the case of S. 481, I suggest that the proposed "Exception" would run afoul of (1) the essential Supreme Court function of enforcing constitutional rights found to adhere to the school prayer situation; (2) the essential Supreme Court function of enforcing such rights on a nationally uniform basis, achieved through appellate review of the various state court decisions that deal with school prayers; and (3) the established constitutional rights of parents and children who wish not to participate in state sanctioned school prayers.

In sum, I suggest that an effort to withhold appellate jurisdiction "as a means to an end," 13 Wall at 145, an end beyond that of controlling that jurisdiction in traditional ways, inevitably loses its status as an exercise of Congressional power to make exceptions to this jurisdiction. Put differently, legislation designed to make such an "Exception" is just as much subject to other provisions and limitations embedded in the Constitution as is any other kind of legislation. And with the Klein precedent in hand, the Supreme Court can be expected to peer through the patent "Exception" facade of S. 481 and to assess its constitutionality on the basis of the real ends sought to be achieved.

If the Supreme Court were to attempt to answer your Question 4, I suspect it would answer as it did in Klein: "This question seems to us to answer itself." 13 Wall. at 147.

The fifth question posed to various law professors around the country is as follows:

Even if the Congress has such authority, as a matter of public policy is it advisable for the Congress to remove Supreme Court jurisdiction over constitutional issues generally or over the school prayer issue specifically?

This is Professor Gressman's response to that question:

It is certainly not advisable as a matter of public policy. I would assume that it is a matter of public policy to continue to have a constitutional form of government, with the Supreme Court performing the essential role of ultimate arbiter of the meaning and application of the Constitution. That at least was the policy laid down by the Framers and articulated by John Marshall. I see no reason to tear apart the very fabric of this great document by withdrawing the Court's appellate power to make the Constitution workable, uniform and sensitive to ever-changing public issues and concerns.

If one starts tinkering with the Court's appellate jurisdiction merely to express disagreement with a particular kind of decision, the way is open, the precedent is established, for a wholesale disestablishment of constitutional rights and privileges. Freedom would then become a synonym for what current statehouse majorities are disposed to recognize.

I would be happy to expand on these notions before your subcommittee, should you deem that appropriate.

Sincerely,

EUGENE GRESSMAN,
WILLIAM RAND KENAN,
Professor of Law, Chapel Hill, N.C.

Mr. President, at this point I should like to read into the RECORD a portion of a letter from Harvard law professor Archibald Cox, concerning the constitutionality and wisdom of the Helms court-stripping amendment. This is a letter from Professor Cox to me, dated August of last year, and I will read portions of that letter which are applicable. I begin with the third question I posed to Professor Cox:

3. If the school prayer decisions are unconstitutional, isn't that sufficient cause for the Congress to remove the Court's jurisdiction from that area?

This is the response of Professor Cox:

The assumption we are asked to make in this question is either unqualifiedly false or ambiguous. The Supreme Court of the United States has final authority to interpret the Constitution; therefore, its interpretations cannot be "unconstitutional" in any legal sense.

If we are being asked to assume that we think the school prayer decisions are inconsistent with what we think to be a "correct" interpretation of the Constitution—or with what the Congress thinks to be a "correct" interpretation—then the answer is that those suppositions are not sufficient cause for Congress to remove the Court's jurisdiction. The very purpose of the Constitution was to put its provisions and interpretation beyond the control of congressional majorities.

Mr. President, I think that states it very simply. To repeat:

The very purpose of the Constitution was to put its provisions and interpretations beyond the control of congressional majorities.

Question No. 4 that I asked Professor Cox, as well as all the other law professors to whom we wrote, is this:

4. Does the Congress have the constitutional authority to remove Supreme Court jurisdiction over an issue like school prayer?

The answer of Professor Cox is as follows:

It is impossible to give a categorical answer to this question, except as a statement of professional opinion. No precedents provide an authoritative answer one way or the other. It is my considered opinion that the so-called "exceptions clause" does not permit Congress to remove all federal court jurisdiction over a class of cases defined in terms of the constitutional right asserted, such as freedom of speech or the establishment of religion.

To repeat:

It is my considered opinion that the so-called "exceptions clause" does not permit Congress to remove all Federal court jurisdiction over a class of cases defined in terms of the constitutional right asserted, such as freedom of speech or the establishment of religion.

Question No. 5:

Even if the Congress has such authority, as a matter of public policy is it advisable for the Congress to remove Supreme Court jurisdiction over constitutional issues generally or over the school prayer issue specifically?

The answer of Professor Cox:

I believe that the removal of jurisdiction would be a radical and unprincipled change in our form of government. Reasons are stated in testimony given last spring.

To repeat:

I believe that the removal of jurisdiction would be a radical and unprincipled change in our form of government.

I conclude reading from Professor Cox's letter:

I shall be glad to have you call upon me in the future if more hearings are scheduled.

With personal regards,

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD COX.

Mr. President, at this point I have another letter, and we have lots of letters because, as has been stated, in the opinion of the legal scholars in our country, it was overwhelming. It was not a bare majority. It is, I might say, a constitutional majority. It is clear that over two-thirds of the law professors in our country very definitely, very firmly believe that these efforts to remove the Supreme Court from jurisdiction are not only unconstitutional but are unwise.

The next letter which I have, from which I will read only a portion, is a letter from Harvard Law Professor Emeritus Paul Freund concerning the constitutionality and wisdom of these court stripping bills.

I will begin with question No. 4 again, the same question I asked the previous correspondents. The question relates to whether Congress may deprive the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to review decisions. This is Professor Freund's answer with respect to question four:

Whether Congress may deprive the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to review decisions, including those of state courts, that turn on Federal constitutional issues, has been the subject of considerable scholarly discussion, centering on the scope of the "regulations and exceptions" clause in Article III. An argument for a broad reading of that clause is advanced by Professor Wechsler in The Courts and the Constitution, 65 Colum. L. Rev. 1001 (1965), but with the warning that the "practical objections" to withdrawal of jurisdiction in constitutional cases "are often overlooked." Id. at 1006. A restrictive view of Congressional power is taken by Professor Hart in Exercise in Dialectic, 66 Harv. L. Rev. 1364–65, on the ground that withdrawal would "destroy the essential role of the Supreme Court in the constitutional plan." Id. at 1364–1365.

In support of a broad Congressional power, reliance is placed chiefly on Exparte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506 (1869), sustaining the Act of 1868 which removed Supreme Court jurisdiction over appeals (including the pending one) under a habeas corpus statute of 1867—a removal designed to save Reconstruction from an anticipated adverse decision of the Court. But several special features of that case caution against a broad reading of the decision. (1) The habeas corpus claim had been adjudicated in the Federal circuit court, and hence the case does not confront the problem of withdrawal of access to the Federal judiciary at any and all levels in specified classes of constitutional claims. (2) The withdrawal of Supreme Court jurisdiction was confined to cases arising under a particular jurisdictional statute; the withdrawal was not defined in terms of particular constitutional claims or the finding of particular facts. (3) Supreme Court review remained available by another route, apart from an appeal under the 1867 Act, and attention was pointedly directed at this fact at the close of the Court's opinion. Id. at See also Exparte Yerger, 8 Wall. 85 (1869). The scholarly debate can be considerably narrowed, indeed avoided, in the context of S. 481. Of central importance is the principle that the power under Article III to regulate the appellate jurisdiction must not be used as a device to regulate the substantive issues, the "merits", where Congress would otherwise have no legislative power over the subject.

This is virtually the same as one of the pending amendments offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

In this light, S. 481 is not a genuine exercise of Article III power. Its divestiture affects only prayers that are "voluntary" and are not officially composed. It thus draws lines ostensibly of jurisdiction but actually of constitutional protection. It would presumably be unacceptable politically, morally and constitutionally to withdraw Federal judicial protection against certain kinds of prayer exercises in the public schools, accordingly a "jurisdictional" line is drawn between permissible and impermissible school prayers. But this is a determination of what may and may not qualify for protection under section 1 of the 14th Amendment.

Consider how S. 481 would operate in a concrete case group of parents sue to enjoin the school board from carrying out a plan to require all pupils to recite an officially composed prayer. In this posture, the authority of the Federal courts is untouched by S.481.

As it is by the pending Helms amendment.

The 14th Amendment is available to protect the plaintiffs. Suppose now that the school board offers to stipulate that an officially composed prayer will not be used, and that objectors will be excused. At this point, may the Federal court proceed to decide whether such an arrangement is or is not an unconstitutional abridgment of the plaintiffs' free exercise of religion in light of the intrinsically coercive atmosphere of the classroom? Not at all. S. 481 would direct the district court or the Supreme Court to dismiss the case. If this is not a Congressional determination, a prescription, of the merits of the controversy it is hard to imagine what would be.

An exact parallel was presented in U.S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128 (1872). A Federal statute allowed recovery of abandoned property by owners who had never given aid or comfort to the enemy. The Supreme Court held that a presidential pardon entitled an owner to recover. Thereafter Congress enacted a proviso that evidence of a pardon should be conclusive evidence of ineligibility in a suit in the Court of Claims, and that the Supreme Court should have no jurisdiction to review a determination by the Court of Claims. Holding that the statute could not be sustained under Article III, the Supreme Court observed that the proviso "shows plainly that it does not intend to withhold appellate jurisdiction except as a means to an end. Its great controlling purpose is to deny to pardons granted by the President that effect which that court had adjudged them to have. . . . The court has jurisdiction of the cause to a given point, but when it ascertains that a certain state of things exists, its jurisdiction is to cease and it is required to dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction. It seems to us that this is not an exercise of the acknowledged power of Congress to make exceptions and prescribe regulations to the appellate power."

This is Professor Freund in his letter.

In Klein, the statutory proviso was invalid under Article III because it prescribed a substantive rule of decision, and regarded in the latter light it was invalid because it conflicted with the President's pardoning power. Likewise, S. 481 cannot be sustained under Article III because it regulates prayers, not jurisdiction, and Congress, by hypothesis, possesses no substantive power over school prayers. S. 481 is governed not by McCardle, but by Klein.

Suppose, however, that a way out of the dilemma were sought by basing the legislation frankly on the enforcement provision, section 5, of the Fourteenth Amendment. This, of course, would mean an abandonment of the moral foundation advanced for S. 481 that the courts have made a fundamental error in regarding the 14th Amendment as having application to school prayers. More significantly, it would raise problems of transcendent importance regarding the balance of constitutional power in the safeguarding of basic rights.

Congress does have power under section 5 to identify specific liberties or entitlements to equality and to provide mechanisms for their vindication by appropriate legislation. See Katzenback v. Morgan, 348 U.S. 641 (1966); but cf. Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 122 (1970). But does that power to "enforce" the Amendment extend to the power to supersede by simple legislation rights that have been adjudicated by Supreme Court decisions? So radical a realignment of power, so great an increase in the vulnerability of rights, has scarcely been proposed, much less adopted. Frequently dissatisfaction with decisions of the Court has led to proposals for giving Congress power to overcome decisions by subsequent legislation that is passed with an extraordinary majority. But even this very restricted plan of legislative overruling has always been thought to require a constitutional amendment. From every point of view, so fundamental a shift in the balance of forces that sustain our constitutional order would demand at least a submission to the American people for their fullest consideration.

It seems unnecessary to pursue further the question of reach of section 5 of the 14th Amendment, since S. 481 is not premised on that ground.

Question 5. The practical consequences of withdrawing Federal court jurisdiction over classes of constitutional issues are sufficiently serious to caution against such a move, even apart from its dubious constitutional validity.

It would invite fifty interpretations of our national Constitution, and leave them unresolvable.

A key point: To remove Supreme Court jurisdiction and exclude, preclude, prohibit the U.S. Supreme Court from reviewing Federal constitutional issues would invite 50, that is, separate State supreme courts, 50 interpretations of our national Constitution and leave them unresolvable, probably 50 separate Supreme Court decisions, State supreme court decisions, interpreting our Federal Constitution, and leave those 50 separate, distinct, contradictory opinions unresolvable.

It would prevent review of those state decisions that are too restrictive of local authority—e.g. if a state court were to strike down an enforced period of silent meditation in the schools.

It would leave state judges in a quandary about the binding effect of Supreme Court precedents in the field, presenting the judges with an intolerable moral dilemma.

On the one hand, State judges are sworn to uphold the Federal Constitution. They know what the latest Supreme Court decision has been on the issue before them, but if Congress prohibits Supreme Court review, that places those State court judges, as Professor Freund stated, in an intolerable dilemma of interpreting the Constitution as they see it or as the latest Supreme Court decision interpreted it, even though by definition we are hypothesizing that the Supreme Court would not have the power of review over those State court decisions.

It would deprive the Supreme Court of its normal opportunity to reconsider constitutional doctrine and alter it.

It would stimulate piecemeal erosion of Federal judicial safeguards in whatever fields a dominant majority might at any time be displeased by Supreme Court decisions. It was considerations of this kind that led Congress to reject resoundingly President Roosevelt's Court plan in 1937, despite the landslide election of 1936, the clear constitutional validity of the plan, and the weight of professional and popular criticism of crucial Court decisions.

What recourse then is available to overcome judicial decisions that prove to be insupportable?

That is really the bottom line question, what recourse is there when the public, the people, when Congress, believe that Supreme Court decisions are unsupportable, are wrong, incorrectly decided? Professor Freund's response to that question is as follows:

There is, of course, the resort to a constitutional amendment, as in the case of the Eleventh and Sixteenth Amendments. There is resort to the Court itself for reconsideration or modification of doctrine. And there is the possibility of altering the program in question to avoid the thrust of a decision. Thus a program of school prayers recited in union might be replaced by a period of silent meditation, in which each pupil might recite inaudibly whatever sacred or secular text was dictated by his or her upbringing and faith.

Mr. President, I would now like to refer to a letter and a paper of Prof. Paul Mishkin, of the Boalt School of Law at the University of California at Berkeley, concerning the constitutionality and wisdom of the Helms court-stripping proposal, a letter dated August 7 of last year to me:

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY,
Berkeley, Calif, August 7, 1981

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: This is in response to your letter of July 27th requesting my opinion regarding the proposals to limit lower federal court and Supreme Court jurisdiction over school prayer and other constitutional issues.

I have prepared a short paper on the subject of such efforts to limit federal court jurisdiction, which sets forth the key reasons why I believe such legislation would be inconsistent with the Rule of Law. I enclose a copy of that paper for whatever value it may be to you. I hope you will find it helpful.

Sincerely,

PAUL J. MISHKIN,
Heller Professor of Law.

Mr. President, let me read that paper, it is very brief, it is only four pages. It is entitled "On Efforts to Limit Federal Jurisdiction in Particular Constitutional Matters, Paul J. Mishkin:"

ON EFFORTS TO LIMIT FEDERAL JURISDICTION IN PARTICULAR CONSTITUTIONAL MATTERS

(By Paul J. Mishkin)

Bills being pressed in Congress would cut off the federal courts from cases having anything to do with school prayer, abortion laws, and school busing. Some of these proposals would abrogate all federal judicial power in the specified matters; others would apply only to lower courts, leaving intact Supreme Court review of state court cases. But they all aim to undo particular constitutional principles handed down by the Supreme Court.

It has been argued that these proposals are themselves unconstitutional, and pronouncements by some leading law professors support that position. That is certainly not beyond question. But there are other fundamental reasons, of a basic order that transcends the specific substantive issues, why these bills should be rejected.

On their face, these proposals would not purport to overrule existing Supreme Court decisions. They would merely withdraw from the federal courts jurisdiction to hear cases in the specified areas. For that reason, they can be adopted by a simple majority of Congress. And by that same token, the Court's existing decisions would remain the constitutional law of the nation, their binding force as precedents undiminished.

On their face also, these bills would not affect the state courts. Yet, cases involving the specified subjects clearly can come before state courts, and those courts undoubtedly have the power and the duty to enforce the Untied States Constitution. Those who support curtailing federal jurisdiction because they disagree with current Supreme Court rulings must be assuming that state court judges generally—or at least those who share their views—will disregard the law laid down in those rulings. They would seek to make such state decisions controlling by ruling out actions in the federal courts. They would seek to make such decisions invulnerable to reversal by cutting off Supreme Court review. (Even where such review is not explicitly barred, the already extreme overcrowding of that Court's dockets would often produce effectively the same result.)

The proponents may or may not be right about the extent that state judges will act in disregard of previous Supreme Court authority. But precisely to the extent that they are—precisely to the extent that these bills would work as intended—the effect would be to reinforce disrespect for law.

The rule of law depends fundamentally upon consistent near-universal acceptance of an obligation of obedience to the authority of courts. That in turn depends upon recognition and acceptance of the governing authority of higher courts over lower ones. Occasional, individual, repudiation of this obligation may be tolerable. Routine, or even frequent, repudiation by judges in their official capacity is not.

Yet, these proposals expect state courts to flout the law laid down by the Supreme Court because they disagree strongly with the substance of that law. Where the proponents of this legislation share that disagreement, they would have Congress back up the judges who act that way and, by that token, encourage others to do likewise. That would in turn produce a continual series of judges consciously and overtly disregarding legitimate higher authority and being officially protected in that defiance. The effect of that could only be further to weaken general respect for law.

The proponents' position can only make sense on the premise that effectuating one's strongly held beliefs outweighs the moral demands of fidelity to law—and the long-run harm to the stability of the legal system inflicted by the repetitive public acting-out of that thesis.

This is not to say that that is the conscious view of the supporters of these proposals. Indeed, they are most often persons who see themselves as seeking to preserve and promote stability of important values and institutions in a rapidly changing world. But that conception of self will not change the results of their proposals being enacted.

The hegemony of the rule of law is not fragile, but neither is it entirely invulnerable. It has been battered and, it seems fair to say, somewhat diminished in our times. Many of the attacks have been precisely in the name of strongly held views of moral right. But, while occasional attacks in extraordinary circumstances may be both justified and readily absorbed, routinization of such attacks—and, particularly, Congressional legitimation of them—can only generate and reinforce destabilizing of them—can only generate and reinforce destabilizing tendencies. That is reason enough to reject the proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I again wish to thank the Senator from Oregon for giving me the opportunity to address these basic points. We are taking the floor because we think it is extremely important that the public, the press, and even Members of the Senate fully realize the import of these provisions so that the action we take is wise and not unwise.

Mr. President, I again thank the Senator from Oregon for yielding the floor to me.

(During the remarks of Mr. BAUCUS the following occurred:)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. BAUCUS. I might in just a moment. There are a few more letters I would like to get into the RECORD at this point, I say to the Senator from North Carolina, and at the end I would be glad to yield but only for purposes of a question.

Mr. HELMS. It is not for a question. I would ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter following the Senator's presentation.

Mr. BAUCUS. That would be fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor and has yielded to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PACKWOOD. What was the request of the Senator from North Carolina? I did not hear it.

Mr. HELMS. I wish to insert a Dear Colleague letter in the RECORD to appear following the presentation of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have no objection.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in connection with the pending business, I ask unanimous consent to insert a Dear Colleague letter signed by the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. DENTON) and myself and have it printed in the RECORD, along with an explanation of amendment No. 2038.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Oregon.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C., September 7, 1982.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: On August 18 Amendment No. 2038 to the debt ceiling bill, H.J. Res. 520, was called up. This amendment is an amendment in the second degree and deals with abortion. A copy is enclosed. We want to take this opportunity to explain briefly its purposes.

The amendment accomplishes three basic goals. First, it makes permanent law the Hyde Amendment limitations on federal funding of abortion. It also extends this defunding principle so as to remove the federal government from the abortion business.

Second, the amendment gives broad protection against discrimination to medical personnel, working in institutions receiving federal funds, who have conscientious objections to abortion. In this regard, it expands the protection previously afforded in the Health Services Extension Act of 1973 and the Nurse Training Amendments of 1979.

Third, the amendment lays a congressional basis for state anti-abortion laws and provides for an orderly reconsideration of Roe v. Wade by the Supreme Court. In its findings, it expresses a congressional understanding of the Constitution and the right to life different from that articulated by the Roe majority. Further, it contains a provision for expedited Supreme Court review of any state statutes based on the findings. In this way, the Supreme Court itself will be assured an early opportunity to reconsider the Roe decision.

Enclosed is a more detailed explanation of the provisions of the abortion amendment. If you have questions concerning it, please contact us or our staffs.

Sincerely,

JESSE HELMS,
U.S. Senator.
JEREMIAH DENTON,
U.S. Senator.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT NO. 2038 ON ABORTION TO HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 520

I. SECTIONS 202 THROUGH 205

Sections 202 and 203 basically make permanent law the Hyde Amendment funding limitations which in the past have been enacted piecemeal as riders to various appropriation bills. After enactment of this measure, such riders will not be necessary. Unless specific appropriations for abortion are made in the future, there will be no need for Congress to go through the annual Hyde Amendment battles on appropriations bills. This has obvious merit for the more efficient conduct of Senate business. The language in section 203 stopping federal funding of abortion referrals is a logical extension of Hyde and is based on the power of Congress to control the use of appropriated funds.

Section 204 extends the Hyde Amendment defunding principle to teaching abortion techniques, financing research on abortion, and financing experiments on aborted children. This provision will not prohibit use of federal funds to teach techniques that, while they can be used for abortion, are also generally used for non-abortion procedures. The ban here is on using tax money to teach the techniques of abortion or teaching procedures which can only be used to perform abortions. Likewise, the research language bans funding of research about how to perform abortions. It does not stop federal funding for compiling purely demographic data about abortions. Also, the language on experimentation prohibits federal funding for experiments on live babies after abortions but before death. Ordinary pathological and similar procedures are not within the scope of this language.

Section 205 is based on the so-called Ashbrook Amendment prohibiting the government from paying for abortions through employees' health insurance plans. Although not current law, it has passed the House and is generally in effect as a result of administrative action by the Office of Personnel Management.

II. SECTION 206

Section 206 affords medical personnel working in institutions receiving federal funds protection against discrimination on account of their objections to abortion. This is a freedom-of-conscience provision. It has antecedents in the Health Services Extension Act of 1973 and the Nurse Training Amendments of 1979.

III. SECTIONS 201, 207, AND 208

Section 201 lays a congressional basis for state antiabortion laws, and section 207 sets out the appellate procedure leading to an orderly reconsideration of Roe v. Wade by the Supreme Court. Taken together, these provisions assure that the Court itself will have an early opportunity to reconsider its much criticized decision in Roe. They do not constitute a reversal of the Court's order in Roe, but they do express a congressional understanding of the Constitution and the right to life different from that articulated by the Roe majority.

Some critics have suggested that even if Roe v. Wade was wrongly decided and ought to be overruled, Congress must always act in conformity with Supreme Court precedents until the Court itself chooses to overrule them. But the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers disagreed with this position and in its Report on S. 158 stated as follows:

"This criticism rests on a profound misapprehension of the doctrine of judicial review espoused in Marbury v. Madison 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803). Under Marbury, the Supreme Court, presented with a proper case, must rule in accordance with its own interpretation of the Constitution rather than with a contrary congressional interpretation, because the Justice have taken an oath to uphold the Constitution. As Chief Justice Marshall stated in Marbury, automatic judicial deference to a legislative interpretation of the Constitution would constitute an implicit violation of the Justices' oath of office; the Justices would thereby "close their eyes on the constitution, and see only the law." 5 U.S. (Cranch) at 178. It does not follow, however, that once the Court has interpreted a provision of the Constitution members of Congress must automatically defer to the judicial interpretation. Indeed, members of Congress take the same oath that the Justices take to uphold the Constitution. Confronted with a proposed law that is consistent with his own honest construction of the Constitution and with his view of sound policy, but that conflicts with what he regards as an erroneous Supreme Court decision, a member of Congress has at least the right and perhaps the duty to vote for the bill. To do otherwise would be to close his eyes on the Constitution and see only the case. Through its power to issue judgments that are binding on the parties to litigation, the Supreme Court will as a practical matter generally have the final word in any dispute over constitutional interpretation. But this does not preclude the possibility of a responsible dialogue between Congress and the Court.[11] (pp. 21-22; see also remarks of Senator Helms concerning "Separation of Powers," CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 18, 1982, S10739; and see generally Report on S. 158, Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Judiciary Committee, December 1981.)

Section 207 provides for appeal as of right to the Supreme Court from lower court orders involving statutes based on this amendment. In addition, award of attorneys' fees under federal law is specifically prohibited in cases involving this bill in order to carry out the purpose of ending federal financial support in securing abortions.

Section 208 assures severability of this amendment in the event of some partial judicial invalidation.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I thank very much my distinguished colleague from Montana who has reviewed very well the law on this subject.

This is not an issue of do you like or do you not like school prayer or do you think that it should be written by the school board or written by the Governor's son, as it is in Alabama.

This is an issue as to whether or not we are going to strip the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to pass on fundamental issues of American civil liberties and to pass it, if we do—it would be unfortunate if we do—in the passing passion of the moment because some people are disgruntled with the constitutional decisions of the Supreme Court and do not want to take the trouble of trying to amend it by statute or by constitutional amendment.

So I again thank my colleague from Montana for his extraordinary review of the law on this subject.

Mr. President, there has been prepared by Leland E. Beck, a legislative attorney for the Legislative Reference Service, a memorandum entitled "Historic Proposals to Except Particular Cases from the Appellate Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States."

I would like to read that review for the benefit of the Senate.

This report reviews the major historical proposals to except particular cases from the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction. The Constitutional premise for these bills is the Exceptions and Regulations Clause of Article III, § 2, of the Constitution. After enumerating the types of jurisdiction contemplated in the Constitution and specifying when that jurisdiction is to be trial in nature, the Constitution provides: "In all other Cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."

Prior to 1956 there do not appear to have been any substantial proposals to except particular classes of cases from the Court's jurisdiction. The authority exercised by Congress was limited to the regulation of processes of review by the Court. Numerous calls were made in the early days of the Republic for the abolition of the Court's jurisdiction to review decisions of the State courts of last resort, but none of these proposals succeeded; on the contrary, there was a steady increase in the scope of both the Supreme and inferior federal courts' jurisdiction.

Beginning in 1956, numerous proposals have been introduced to except a particular specie of cases from the Court's jurisdiction. The purpose of these proposals has been to stop the Court from further elaborating particular areas of constitutional law. The proposals have included both generic rights and particular types of prospective legislative review, including: due process in subversive activities regulation, contempt of Congress, desegregation of schools, reapportionment of State legislative bodies, regulation of obscenity, prayer in public schools, abortion, gender discrimination in military conscription, and others. We will here review the proposals which have received serious Congressional attention.

The first bill to receive formidable consideration was introduced by Senator Jenner in 1957. S. 2646 proposed to except from the Court's jurisdiction "any case where there is drawn into question the validity of" five different areas of governmental regulation or activity. At the time of hearings, the bill provided:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1253, 1254, 1257 of this chapter, the Supreme Court shall have no jurisdiction to review, either by appeal, writ of certiorari, or otherwise, any case where there is drawn into question the validity of—

"(1) any function or practice of, or the jurisdiction of, any committee or subcommittee of the United States Congress, or any action or proceeding against a witness charged with contempt of Congress;

"(2) any action, function, or practice of, or the jurisdiction of, any officer or agency of the executive branch of the Federal Government in the Administration of any program established pursuant to an Act of Congress or otherwise for the elimination from service as employees in the executive branch of individuals whose retention may impair the security of the United States Government;

(3) any statute or executive regulation of any State the general purpose of which is to control subversive activities within such State;

(4) any rule, bylaw, or regulation adopted by a school board, board of education, board of trustees, or similar body, concerning subversive activities in its teaching body; and

(5) any law, regulation of any State, or of any board of bar examiners or similar body, of any action or proceeding taken pursuant to any such law, rule, or regulation pertaining to the admission of persons to the practice of law within such State."

Mr. President, I am going to deviate from this report to comment especially on items (3), (4), and (5), to indicate the breadth of their effect.

Again, (3) reads:

Any statute or executive regulation of any State the general purpose of which is to control subversive activities within such State.

The other two following have similar language.

Mr. President, what does that mean? Does that mean that a State legislature or school board, or any other body in the State enumerated in the statute, can pass a law saying, "We regard as subversive activities the following:" and list whatever it is they wish to regard? In those days, of course, it was membership in the Communist Party, previous affiliation with the Communist Party, or Communist front organizations. But really, it could be anything that the school board wanted to define as subversive.

What Senator Jenner's bill said was no matter how broad that classification, define it as subversive and the court has no jurisdiction to review cases involving it.

I do not need to call to the attention of my fellow Senators the danger inherent in that kind of language. It is a bootstrap argument. It defines conduct you do not like or which offends your sensibilities. If you define it as subversive, you deny a person his or her rights because you have called them subversive and then you say they cannot have their rights reviewed in court.

By way of correlation, the first exception was founded on the authority of a Congressional Committee regarding witnesses and the power of contempt of Congress, and was in response to the Court's decision in Watkins v. United States. Second, the bill would have removed jurisdiction to review any program to assure the loyalty of government employees, in response to the court's decisions in Service v. Dulles and Cole v. Young. The third excision of jurisdiction centered on state "subversive activities" controls in response to, among other cases, Pennsylvania v. Nelson. A still more particular jurisdictional removal centered on rules or regulations of Boards of Education and like bodies concerning "subversive activities" by members of their teaching staff in response to the Court's decision in Slochower v. Board of Higher Education. Finally, the Jenner bill would have removed jurisdiction to review bar admissions practices and policies, a response to Schware v. Board of Bar Examiners and Konigsberg v. State Bar of California. All of these decisions were handed down during 1956 and 1957 and limited the Cold War loyalty and security programs. The bill was thus a major political response tuned to the perceived crisis of its time. The style of the bill, however, appears to be the first attempt to utilize in the strict linguistic sense the power of Congress to make "exceptions" to the Court's appellate jurisdiction.

Hearings were held on the bill and a substantially revised and more limited version was reported to the floor of the Senate. After it became apparent that the leadership would not call up the Jenner bill, proponents of the measure moved to attach it to another bill dealing with the federal courts. Both the new parent bill and the amendment, however, were laid on the table and were extinguished at adjournment sine die. Less problematic responses to another court decision were more successful.

A second major attempt to remove a particular subject matter from the Court's appellate jurisdiction was in response to the reapportionment decisions: Baker v. Carr and Reynolds v. Simms.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might yield to the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) for the purpose of debate only without losing my right to the floor and without this being construed as the end of the speech for purposes of the two-speech rule, and I ask further unanimous consent that I might be seated during the time required by the Senator from Connecticut without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I read into the RECORD at this point some very eloquent comments made by the distinguished Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS), which comments appeared in the New York Times of September 7, 1982.

The Senate adjourned for Labor Day in the middle of what most people believed was a filibuster against an amendment that would reverse the Supreme Court's historic 1962 decision preventing states from requiring prayer in public schools. Nothing could be further from reality.

The amendment at issue, sponsored by Senator Jesse Helms, Republican of North Carolina, would not overturn the 1962 decision. What it would do is prevent the Supreme Court and other Federal courts from considering future school prayer cases, thereby threatening the Court's ability—and right—to interpret the Constitution.

If Congress can strip the Federal courts of jurisdiction over school prayer cases, there is no provision in the Constitution immune from Congressional tampering.

Senator Barry Goldwater, Republican of Arizona, says: "I see no limit to the practice. There is no clear and coherent standard to define why we shall control the Court in one area but not another. The only criteria seems [sic] to be that whenever a momentary majority can be brought together in disagreement with a judicial action, it is fitting to control the Federal Courts."

"Momentary majorities" can exert enormous pressure on Congress, as anyone who has tangled with the National Conservative Political Action Committee and the rest of the New Right knows.

But court-stripping bills pose "a possible constitutional crisis that could prove the most serious since the Civil War," according to the president of the American Bar Association, Morris Harrell.

Attorney General William French Smith shares that concern. He maintains that Congress's power over Federal court jurisdiction cannot interfere with the "core functions" of the Supreme Court, and argues that the "integrity of our system of Federal law depends upon a single court of last resort having a final say on the resolution of Federal questions."

Despite objections from people such as Attorney General Smith and Senator Goldwater and organizations such as the A.B.A., Senator Helms' court-stripping proposal has gained an alarming amount of support. Three years ago, the Senate voted, 51 to 40, for a proposal identical to this year's Helms amendment (that bill died in the House). Senators, the press and the public all thought that vote was a referendum on school prayer. I hope this perception has changed.

The Senate may vote on the Helms amendment soon. I hope a majority of Senators will reject this radical proposal. Those of us who realize the implications of this measure have an obligation to prevent it from passing. We will continue our filibuster until every avenue is closed.

The Founding Fathers provided a way to reverse unpopular Supreme Court decisions: a constitutional amendment. The Framers of the Constitution wisely understood that constitutional principles must not be sacrificed on the altar of political appeasement.

Court-stripping does an end-run around the constitutional-amendment process and thereby undermines the Constitution itself.

School prayer, abortion and school busing are indeed controversial issues. I doubt that there ever will be complete agreement on the public-policy questions they raise. But as those who support the filibuster in the Senate understand, Article V of the Constitution provides a means of resolving these disputes.

Let's not take the short cut offered by Senator Helms.

Mr. President, I commend in the most sincere terms my good friend, Senator BAUCUS, not just for his statement in the New York Times, but his efforts here, on the floor of the U.S. Senate, and his efforts within the Judiciary Committee. Senator BAUCUS has a record of which every American could, indeed, be proud. That is that, regardless of what his personal views might be on any one of the given issues that have been raised on the floor by Senators HELMS, JOHNSTON, THURMOND, et cetera. The fact is that he wants to maintain three separate but equal branches of government. It is just as simple as that.

Mr. President, when that division, that number, disappears, then the loser is not Senator BAUCUS or Senator PACKWOOD or myself. The loser becomes the American people.

Right now, the American people have three separate but equal branches of government. By the time Senator HELMS is through, if he has his way, they will only have two, or maybe even one.

That is what is at issue here, on the floor. It is not a matter of anybody's personal views on school prayer, busing, court stripping, whatever. What is at issue is whether or not the full force and effect of the Constitution as it exists today is going to be there tomorrow on behalf of every one of the citizens of this Nation. The Senator from Montana has spoken eloquently to this point and with great courage. I did not want to let this opportunity go by without saying so on the floor, without commending him while, at the same time, including his written words on this particular subject.

(Mr. HUMPHREY assumed the chair.)

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, once again, we are at it. I suspect we are going to be at it for quite a period of time on this business of stripping the courts of their jurisdiction and trying to bypass the amending provison of the Constitution of the United States. There are a lot of people I have talked to during the recess who have raised the question as to why it is we are occupying ourselves in this manner when the rest of the country is flat on its back economically; when we have 10.5 million people unemployed; when we have continued high interest rates; when we have all sorts of difficulty in the various manufacturing industries of this Nation selling our products; when we have no housing being built? Why are we talking about these social issues and why are you, Senator WEICKER, Senator PACKWOOD, Senator BAUCUS, and others, taking up the time of Congress when there are more pressing issues?

I think it is important to point out that we are not the ones who raised this on the Senate floor. That question is better directed at Senator HELMS. That question is better directed at Senator JOHNSTON, Senator THURMOND, Senator HATCH. They are the ones who have raised all these issues. There have been many times, certainly, on the floor when we have had time to engage in this very serious academic exercise. But this is not one of them. There are very urgent needs that have to be addressed.

Here we are. We have gone through a good portion of the summer and at this particular moment in time, many young people are going or trying to go back to school. They do not have the ability to do so. If you want to know what I would consider to be a relevant debate on the floor of the U.S. Senate, it is one that would address itself to the needs of the students of America. It would consider whether or not their opportunity for an education, in the college, graduate, or vocational sense, has been dented by virtue of Presidential and congressional action, and whether there is anything we can do about it to make sure that educational opportunity is there? That would be a proper matter for debate.

Or, when we have 10.5 million people unemployed, it seems to me we would want to address ourselves to what it is in our economic fabric that needs repair. Is it public service employment? Is it to try to encourage additional employment through the public sector? Is it the fact that we could restore homeowning, homebuilding, and jobs by investing in that particular industry?

Is it that maybe jobs can be created by proper attention to our transportation system? Certainly, the deteriorating highways and the deteriorating rail systems of this country are something that really do need rebuilding.

Maybe it is just that, instead of having meaningless public service employment, money should be directed toward our transportation system, and the jobs thus created would help alleviate the unemployment that exists in this Nation today. These are matters that would make sense. Instead, we find ourselves confronted by the great moral crusaders of our time, who feel that their point of view and their morals have to be imposed on this Nation regardless of the tragedy that exists around us at this time.

I suspect they also feel that if they do not have their point of view imposed right now, they never will. There is probably a lot of truth to that. That is the reason why some of us are on the floor. If they have a good idea, believe me, it will last until the next Congress. If, on the other hand, it is a will-o'-the-wisp, if it is something that only was fanned into reality by virtue of one election and the attitudes of our people during a short period of time, then it will not withstand the test of time.

So, Mr. President, this is a service which some of us are more than glad to provide to test the substance of what is being proposed. Is it real, solid? Is it made of the stuff that will survive time? Or is it a temporary passion that is finding expression and would best find its way into the garbage can? I suspect that latter categorization is exactly what we are confronted with here today and have been for several weeks and months.

Mr. President, I am not disposed personally toward having any votes on any of these matters. There is not much I can do about a cloture vote, but certainly, I do not feel that these are matters that should be addressed now, should be voted upon now. Let the new Congress in January 1983 come to grips with these issues.

The substance, it has been said time and time again, is what it is that is being done out here if the courts are stripped of their jurisdiction. I would like to address another aspect of the problem that might be somewhat new to the debate that has taken place heretofore. That is the matter of describing the courts as if they were truly something dropped from above or, I am sure in the minds of some of my colleagues, something ascended from below. I refer to the idea that they are something separate and apart from all of us. The fact is that these courts clearly come out of the political system. Indeed, my colleagues on the floor have their imprimatur upon every single Federal judge who sits. They were all subject to confirmation by the U.S. Senate, including the Supreme Court of the United States.

Indeed, most of those who are sitting at whatever level of the Federal judiciary were proposed by Members of this body to the then sitting executive. I have no one from the State of Connecticut who sits on the Supreme Court but certainly I can assure you that I know each member of the Federal judiciary, whether it be Federal district court or the circuit court of appeals. I did not nominate them all. I nominated some of them. But I surely approved all of them and had the opportunity to block them.

My friends who propose this type of legislation not only want to nominate; they want to confirm, and then they want to have a leash on the subject of the confirmation. I do not think the American people want that sort of justice. I think they expect, once we have done our work, that the judiciary is independent of politics, that it is independent in philosophy, it is independent of religion. They expect the judiciary to blindly serve in the sense of impartiality, blind in the sense of impartiality in the cause of justice.

But this legislation, this court-stripping legislation, is in effect a senatorial leash law. We want our judges on a leash. If they do not say what we want them to say, if they do not believe what we want them to believe, then they no longer have their jobs or, indeed, they have their jobs but in name only.

Is that the justice that everybody wants regardless of their points of view on individual issues? Is that the kind of justice you want? Because, indeed, impartial justice is what we speak for, be it black schoolchildren or women or be it those youngsters that go to school—that pretty much covers the people I am talking about in the sense of school prayer, abortion, and busing. If you adopt this principle, then, believe me, the leash law is not restricted to those persons but, rather, it applies to all of us. Maybe it will come to pass that it is very onerous and expensive on the part of Government to take care of the elderly, and so there will be men and women on this floor to try to excuse Government of its obligations to that segment of our society. Maybe it will be very onerous and expensive to be disabled or retarded and there will be those on this floor who would try to excuse Government from its obligation to that segment of our society. Maybe it will be very expensive and very onerous to be a businessman and there will be those on this floor trying to excuse Government of its obligation to that segment of the society, and so on and so on.

There is no end to the mischief that is being proposed here. It does not relate simply to the discrimination against black schoolchildren which results in a court remedy. It is not simply a matter as to whether or not there is going to be a Christian society foisted upon schoolchildren. That is not the issue. The issue is not what the choice of women is going to be. The issue here today is whether or not the right of each of us to be ourselves and to live in freedom—that is truly the issue, freedom—is going to be diminished in any sense by a point of view held by either a minority or majority that happens to wield the power of a U.S. Senator.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. WEICKER. Without losing my right to the floor for the purpose of debate, I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may yield to me under those circumstances without his speech counting as a second speech and without prejudice to any rights that the Senator from Oregon may have in respect to recognition by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is clear to me that we are not going to resolve this issue today, and given that circumstance and the fact that I, for the life of me, cannot find another Senator who wishes to speak at length on this subject other than the distinguished Senators from Oregon and Connecticut, I am inclined to suggest that we may fold our tent for this day.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Will the Senator include in the order that I would have the floor coming then onto the bill tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ADAM BENJAMIN, JR., OF INDIANA

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, as in morning business, I send to the desk a resolution, on behalf of the Senators from Indiana (Mr. LUGAR and Mr. QUAYLE), and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 457

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Honorable Adam Benjamin, Jr., late a Representative from the State of Indiana.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit and enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses today, it recess as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, ADAM BENJAMIN was a distinguished Hoosier legislator whose mastery of detail and faithfulness to duty produced solid achievement.

He enjoyed bipartisan respect in the Indiana General Assembly and in the U.S. House of Representatives for his intelligence, his indefatigable work style, and his friendliness.

ADAM was extraordinarily effective in obtaining favorable transportation issue results for Indiana. I will deeply miss him as a strong legislative ally and as a gracious friend throughout many good years of Hoosier political life.●

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, the sudden death of Congressman ADAM BENJAMIN of the First District of Indiana this past weekend leaves a great void for those of us who had the privilege of knowing and working with this special person.

ADAM BENJAMIN and I came to the U.S. House of Representatives together in 1977. We worked together for nearly 6 years. Even though our political parties were different, there were many areas of agreement, and our efforts in behalf of Indiana were harmonious and productive.

ADAM was given a coveted seat on the House Appropriations Committee as a freshman Congressman, and he quickly mastered the intricacies of working with the Federal budget. He served as chairman of the Legislative Appropriations Subcommittee and in this Congress was chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee.

He worked hard on economic development of his congressional district in northwest Indiana. He was a leader in steel industry revitalization and strived for improvement of transportation throughout Indiana.

ADAM also served as a member of the Indiana House of Representatives and the State senate prior to his election to Congress in 1976.

ADAM BENJAMIN'S relatively short life was dedicated to helping people. He tackled every job with intensity, good humor, and skill.

Mr. President, I feel a deep personal loss over the passing of ADAM BENJAMIN. He was a true friend and patriot. His loss will be sorely felt by his dear family, his constituency, and all of us in Indiana who valued his friendship and his leadership.

We convey to his beloved wife, Patricia, and to his children, Adam III, Alison, and Arianne our heartfelt sympathy. May God bless them and comfort them during this time of sorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 457) was unanimously agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the resolution just adopted, the Chair appoints the two Senators from Indiana (Mr. LUGAR and Mr. QUAYLE) as the committee on the part of the Senate to join the committee on the part of the House of Representatives.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, let me propound this series of requests.

First of all, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR PERIOD FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. I further ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not past 12 noon, in which Senators may speak for not more than 3 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS ON THURSDAY FROM 12 NOON TO 1:50 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is my understanding, that there is a requirement for time for a caucus tomorrow, and I will discuss this further with the distinguished minority leader when he reaches the floor, but I ask unanimous consent then that the Senate stand in recess tomorrow from 12 noon until 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. President, could I inquire, if the order in respect to the vote under rule XXII to invoke cloture provides for the waiving of the mandatory quorum call prior to the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAKER. So there will not be a quorum call prior to the cloture vote, as I understand it, and the vote is ordered at 2 o'clock; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I think, under those circumstances, I will amend my previous request in respect to the recess.

CLOTURE VOTE AT 2 P.M.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess tomorrow from 12 noon until 1:50 p.m., and that at 1:50 p.m. the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business, and that at 2 p.m. under the order previously entered the Senate proceed to vote on cloture as provided under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PACKWOOD TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that at 1:50 p.m. when the Senate resumes consideration of the unfinished business, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) be recognized at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. And once again, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the interruption occasioned by the recess which has now been provided for not be deemed an interruption for the purpose of creating a second speech under the provisions of rule XIX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECORD TO REMAIN OPEN UNTIL 4 P.M. TODAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD remain open today until 4 p.m., for the insertion of statements and the introduction of bills, resolutions, petitions, and memorials.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in accordance with the previous order, and pursuant to the provisions of Senate Resolution 457, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased ADAM BENJAMIN, JR., late a Representative from the State of Indiana, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 3:21 p.m. the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Thursday, September 9, 1982, at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 8, 1982

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PRICE).

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We are grateful, O God, for all the blessings of life and for Your continued providence to us. We thank You for Your grace which fills our lives with hope and for Your bountiful love which surrounds us and gives us faith for each new day.

At this time we are particularly thankful for the life of ADAM BENJAMIN and for his good works done for the people he represented. We are conscious of his dedication to his tasks, his friendliness, and openness to those he met, and his care and concern toward those in need. We ask Your special blessing upon his family and those who mourn his passing, that Your peace that passes all human understanding may be with them now and during all the days to come. In Your holy name, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last legislative day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the grounds that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 268, nays 17, answered "present" 4, not voting 143, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 923) entitled "An act to amend chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, relating to pretrial services."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House with an amendment to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1409. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain modifications of the existing Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir, Shoshone project, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program, Wyoming, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1409) entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain modifications of the existing Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir, Shoshone project, Pick-Sloan Missouri basin program, Wyoming, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. WARNER, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. FORD, and Mr. METZENBAUM to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3517. An act to authorize the granting of permanent residence status to certain nonimmigrant aliens residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 3589. An act to authorize the exchange of certain land held by the Navajo Tribe and the Bureau of Land Management, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills, joint resolutions, and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S 503. An act to authorize the purchase, sale, and exchange of lands by the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe of the Devils Lake Sioux Reservation, North Dakota, and for other purposes;

S. 705. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain National Forest System lands, and for other purposes;

S. 1940. An act to amend chapter 209 of title 18, United States Code, relating to extradition, and for other purposes;

S. 1986. An act to provide for the use and distribution of funds awarded the Blackfeet and Gros Ventre Tribes of Indians and the Assiniboine Tribe of the Fort Belknap Indian Community, and others, in dockets numbered 250-A and 279-C by the U.S. Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

S. 2222. An act to revise and reform the Immigration and Nationality Act, and for other purposes;

S. 2355. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to provide that persons with impaired hearing are ensured reasonable access to telephone service;

S. 2874. An act to amend the Act of March 16, 1934, as amended, to credit entrance fees for the migratory-bird hunting and conservation stamp contest to the account which pays for the administration of the contest;

S.J. Res. 209. Joint resolution designating the week beginning September 5, 1982, as "National Adult Day Care Center Week";

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 923, PRETRIAL SERVICES ACT OF 1982

Mr. HUGHES submitted the following conference report and statement on the Senate bill (S. 923) to amend chapter 297 of title 18, United States Code, relating to pretrial services:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 97-792)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 923) to amend chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, relating to pretrial services, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Pretrial Services Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. Section 3152 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3152. Establishment of pretrial services

"(a) On and after the date of the enactment of the Pretrial Services Act of 1982, the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (hereinafter in this chapter referred to as the 'Director') shall, under the supervision and direction of the Judicial Conference of the United States, provide directly, or by contract or otherwise (to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts), for the establishment of pretrial services in each judicial district (other than the District of Columbia). Pretrial services established under this section shall be supervised by a chief probation officer appointed under section 3654 of this title or by a chief pretrial services officer selected under subsection (c) of this section.

"(b) Beginning eighteen months after the date of the enactment of the Pretrial Services Act of 1982, if an appropriate United States district court and the circuit judicial council jointly recommend the establishment under this subsection of pretrial services in a particular district, pretrial services shall be established under the general authority of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

"(c) The pretrial services established under subsection (b) of this section shall be supervised by a chief pretrial services officer selected by a panel consisting of the chief judge of the circuit, the chief judge of the district, and a magistrate of the district or their designees. The chief pretrial services officer appointed under this subsection shall be an individual other than one serving under authority of section 3654 of this title.".

SEC. 3. Section 3153 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3153. Organization and administration of pretrial services

"(a)(1) With the approval of the district court, the chief pretrial services officer in districts in which pretrial services are established under section 3152(b) of this title shall appoint such other personnel as may be required. The position requirements and rate of compensation of the chief pretrial services officer and such other personnel shall be established by the Director with the approval of the Judicial Conference of the United States, except that no such rate of compensation shall exceed the rate of basic pay in effect and then payable for grade GS-16 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) The chief pretrial services officer in districts in which pretrial services are established under section 3152(b) of this title is authorized, subject to the general policy established by the Director and the approval of the district court, to procure temporary and intermittent services to the extent authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code. The staff, other than clerical staff, may be drawn from law school students, graduate students, or such other available personnel.

"(b) The chief probation officer in all districts in which pretrial services are established under section 3152(a) of this title shall designate personnel appointed under chapter 231 of this title to perform pretrial services under this chapter.

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, information obtained in the course of performing pretrial services functions in relation to a particular accused shall be used only for the purposes of a bail determination and shall otherwise be confidential. Each pretrial services report shall be made available to the attorney for the accused and the attorney for the Government.

"(2) The Director shall issue regulations establishing the policy for release of information made confidential by paragraph (1) of this subsection. Such regulations shall provide exceptions to the confidentiality requirements under paragraph (1) of this subsection to allow access to such information—

"(A) by qualified persons for purposes of research related to the administration of criminal justice;

"(B) by persons under contract under section 3154(4) of this title;

"(C) by probation officers for the purpose of compiling presentence reports;

"(D) insofar as such information is a pretrial diversion report, to the attorney for the accused and the attorney for the Government; and

"(E) in certain limited cases, to law enforcement agencies for law enforcement purposes.

"(3) Information made confidential under paragraph (1) of this subsection is not admissible on the issue of guilt in a criminal judicial proceeding unless such proceeding is a prosecution for a crime committed in the course of obtaining pretrial release or a prosecution for failure to appear for the criminal judicial proceeding with respect to which pretrial services were provided.".

SEC. 4. Section 3154 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3154. Functions and powers relating to pretrial services

"Pretrial services functions shall include the following:

"(1) Collect, verify, and report to the judicial officer, prior to the pretrial release hearing, information pertaining to the pretrial release of each individual charged with an offense, including information relating to any danger that the release of such person may pose to any other person or the community, and recommend appropriate release conditions for such individual.

"(2) Review and modify the reports and recommendations specified in paragraph (1) of this section for persons seeking release pursuant to section 3146(e) or section 3147 of this chapter.

"(3) Supervise persons released into its custody under this chapter.

"(4) Operate or contract for the operation of appropriate facilities for the custody or care of persons released under this chapter including residential halfway houses, addict and alcoholic treatment centers, and counseling services.

"(5) Inform the court and the United States attorney of all apparent violations of pretrial release conditions, arrests of persons released to the custody of providers of pretrial services or under the supervision of providers of pretrial services, and any danger that any such person may come to pose to any other person or the community, and recommend appropriate modifications of release conditions.

"(6) Serve as coordinator for other local agencies which serve or are eligible to serve as custodians under this chapter and advise the court as to the eligibility, availability, and capacity of such agencies.

"(7) Assist persons released under this chapter in securing any necessary employment, medical, legal, or social services.

"(8) Prepare, in cooperation with the United States marshal and the United States attorney such pretrial detention reports as are required by the provisions of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure relating to the supervision of detention pending trial.

"(9) Develop and implement a system to monitor and evaluate bail activities, provide information to judicial officers on the results of bail decisions, and prepare periodic reports to assist in the improvement of the bail process.

"(10) To the extent provided for in an agreement between a chief pretrial services officer in districts in which pretrial services are established under section 3152(b) of this title, or the chief probation officer in all other districts, and the United States attorney, collect, verify, and prepare reports for the United States attorney's office of information pertaining to the pretrial diversion of any individual who is or may be charged with an offense, and perform such other duties as may be required under any such agreement.

"(11) Make contracts, to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, for the carrying out of any pretrial services functions.

"(12) Perform such other functions as specified under this chapter.".

SEC. 5. Section 3155 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3155. Annual reports

"Each chief pretrial services officer in districts in which pretrial services are established under section 3152(b) of this title, and each chief probation officer in all other districts, shall prepare an annual report to the chief judge of the district court and the Director concerning the administration and operation of pretrial services. The Director shall be required to include in the Director's annual report to the Judicial Conference under section 604 of title 28 a report on the administration and operation of the pretrial services for the previous year.".

SEC. 6. The table of sections for chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 3152 and all that follows through the item relating to section 3155 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"3152. Establishment of pretrial services.
"3153. Organization and administration of pretrial services.
"3154. Functions and powers relating to pretrial services.
"3155. Annual reports.".

SEC. 7. Section 604(a) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking out "agencies" in paragraph (9);

(2) striking out "for pretrial services agencies" and inserting in lieu thereof "providing pretrial services" in paragraph (10);

(3) striking out "pretrial service agencies" in paragraph (11) and inserting "offices providing pretrial services" in lieu thereof; and

(4) striking out "pretrial services agencies" in paragraph (12) and inserting "offices providing pretrial services" in lieu thereof.

SEC. 8. During the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the pretrial services agencies established under section 3152 of title 18 of the United States Code in effect before the date of enactment of this Act may continue to operate, employ staff, provide pretrial services, and perform such functions and powers as are authorized under chapter 207 of title 18 of the United States Code.

SEC. 9. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and each succeeding fiscal year thereafter, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the functions and powers of pretrial services established under section 3152(b) of title 18, United States Code.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the functions and powers of the pretrial services agencies established under section 3152 of title 18 of the United States Code in effect before the date of enactment of this Act.

And the House agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 923) to amend chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, relating to pretrial services, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

The Senate bill provides for the establishment of pretrial services in each judicial district. The House amendment provides for the establishment of pretrial services in those districts with respect to which the district court and the circuit council have so recommended.

The conference substitute adopts the Senate position.

The Senate bill provides that, for an 18-month period following enactment of the bill, any pretrial services beyond the existing demonstration districts—which are specifically authorized to continue their operation during the 18-month period—are to be provided under the supervision of the chief probation officers, utilizing existing resources, with no authority for additional appropriations. After this 18-month period, pretrial services may also be provided under the supervision of chief pretrial services officers, who must be individuals other than those serving as probation officers under the authority of section 3654 of title 18. When the district court and circuit counsel recommended the establishment of pretrial services in these special districts, authority is provided for additional appropriations to support pretrial services. The Senate bill also specifically authorizes appropriations necessary to continue the demonstration projects in effect prior to the date of enactment, for a period ending 18 months after the date of enactment.

The House amendment provides that, based on the recommendation of the district court and the circuit council, pretrial services may be provided under the supervision of either chief probation officers or chief pretrial services officers. There is no delay period in the availability of either type of pretrial services supervision, and the authority for appropriations extends to both types of management.

The conference substitute adopts the Senate position. This delay period is, in the opinion of the conference managers, sufficient for the district courts, circuit councils, and the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to evaluate the needs for pretrial services and the resources available in each district. This evaluation process, as described in more detail at page 10 of Senate Report 97-77, should begin immediately upon enactment of S. 923, and should permit the United States courts to identify those districts which are capable of providing pretrial services within existing resources and those which will need additional resources and will therefore be required to utilize the special districts provision of this statute.

The Senate bill provides that chief pretrial services officers and chief probation officers shall appoint such other personnel as required, and that the position requirements and rate of compensation of the chief pretrial services officer, the chief probation officer, and other personnel are to be established by the Director of the Administrative Office. The House amendment provides for the chief pretrial services officer to appoint additional personnel, and for position requirements and compensation of these persons to be fixed by the Director for the Administrative Office.

The conference substitute provides for the appointment of additional personnel by the chief pretrial services officer, and authorizes the chief probation officer to designate existing probation personnel to perform pretrial services functions. Authority for the chief probation officer to "designate", rather than "appoint", is necessary to remain consistent with the determination of the Managers that additional personnel will be appointed only in special districts under the supervision of chief pretrial services officers. Similarly, since the position requirements and compensation of probation officers and other probation support personnel are provided for in Chapter 231 of title 18, reference to them here is deleted.

Both the Senate and House bills provide for the confidentiality of information collected in the course of providing pretrial services functions. The conference substitute adopts the position of both bills, with language taken from both bills. The conference substitute clarifies that the protected information is that "obtained in the course of performing pretrial services functions. . . ." This carries out the purpose of protecting the relationship between the pretrial services officer and the particular defendant. Defendants may be reluctant to cooperate with pretrial services officers unless assured of the confidentiality of the information they reveal to the officers. The courts, in turn, would receive only incomplete information. The conference substitute also makes clear that the information is protected unless it is to be revealed for the purposes of a bail hearing. Hearings to determine whether a defendant's bail should be revoked are, or course, considered bail hearings.

The conference substitute requires the Director to issue regulations establishing the confidentiality of the information referred to above, and not just information contained in pretrial services files. Otherwise, as suggested above, the purpose of furthering the relationship between the pretrial services officer and the defendant, and thus of gathering the most complete information for the court, would be threatened.

Finally, the conference substitute provides that such information is not admissible on the issue of guilt in a criminal judicial proceeding unless the proceeding is for a crime committed in the course of obtaining pretrial release, or for the defendant's failure to appear on the case for which pretrial services were provided. In this case, the conference substitute adopts a combination of exceptions set forth in the Senate and the House bills. As described above, the limitation on admissibility is necessary to further the objective of ensuring that the court receives the most complete information possible. However, the exceptions are provided to ensure that defendants cannot attempt to take advantage of the pretrial services process and then shield themselves behind the guarantee of confidentiality.

Both the Senate and the House bills set forth the functions of providers of pretrial services, including collecting, verifying, and reporting to the court information about the defendant's pretrial release. The House bill also requires providers of pretrial services to inform the court if the release of the defendant may pose a danger to any other person or the community.

The conference substitute adopts the House position.

Both the Senate and the House bills require the providers of pretrial services to inform the court and the United States attorney of all apparent violations of conditions of release, and arrests of persons under their supervision or released to their custody. The House bill also requires providers of pretrial services to inform the court and United States attorney that the person may come to pose a danger to any other person or the community.

The conference substitute adopts the House position.

THE LATE ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

(Mr. HAMILTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, with deepest regret I inform the Members of this House of the death of our colleague, ADAM BENJAMIN. I extend my most heartfelt condolences to his wife, Patricia, and his children, Adam, Alison, and Arianne.

All of us who knew him are grateful for his life and the contributions he made to his friends, community, State, and Nation. His life, from West Point to Congress, was in the highest, finest tradition of public service.

ADAM was an extremely effective legislator. I know of no one who was so quick to master the procedures of the House and use them for the benefit of his constituents. He set a record by becoming the chairman of an appropriations subcommittee in his second term. There used to be a saying at the Indiana Statehouse that ADAM BENJAMIN was the only member of the general assembly who read all the bills. That gives some indication of the respect his fellow legislators had for ADAM's legislative skill. ADAM's drive for self-improvement enabled him to study for a master of law degree to teach academic courses while carrying on his duties as a Member of Congress.

ADAM believed in, and lived for, representative government. He came from his constituents; he was a part of them; and he worked hard for them. Their problems and hopes, troubles and ambitions were his as well. Their welfare was his primary concern. He thought constantly of how he might serve them better. ADAM had pride in his work as a politician and legislator. He believed it was the politician's job to make the country work, to provide stability, to accomodate different points of view, to develop a consensus, and to meet the needs of people.

He believed that a politician's work is the chief means of achieving justice for all persons.

His death cut short a brilliant career in the House of Representatives. We will miss him as a friend, politician, and legislator. All of us who knew him will be able to hold our heads a little higher because he contributed, as few are able to do, to making this House, as well as representative government, work better. His loss will be deeply felt by all of us who knew and worked with him.

The funeral for ADAM will be at 10 a.m. Friday, September 10. It will be held at the Sts. Constantine and Helen Greek Orthodox Cathedral, 8000 Madison Street, Merrillville, Ind. Visitation hours will be Thursday, September 9, from 12 noon to 10 p.m., at the funeral home of Stilinovich, Palmer, Wiatrolik, 4201 Broadway, Gary, Ind. A delegation will depart from the House steps at approximately 7:30 a.m. on Friday, September 10, for Gary, Ind., returning immediately upon conclusion of services in Indiana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, we all were shocked and saddened with the news yesterday morning of the loss of our dear friend, ADAM BENJAMIN. We all learned to know him, some more recently than some of the rest of us from Indiana. ADAM was one of the hardest working Members of Congress, as he had been a hard working State legislator. With his passing, he will be missed here in this House. We offer our condolences and our prayers to Pat and his children. The loss will be to our Nation to lose a very valuable, caring, and nice person that ADAM was.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the dean of our delegation for his contribution. Sadness and the understanding of death lie very heavily across this Chamber on this Wednesday. We had a colleague amongst us who was quick, alive, warm, friendly, and smiling just a few days ago. We are reminded that no person is an island. Particularly in this Chamber, we are a part of one another, and how childish our selfish tragedies seem at a time like this. Death ends a life, but it does not end a relationship, which will continue on in our hearts and in our minds. It does not make any difference whether it is a chamber of commerce person or a labor person in Indiana who speaks of ADAM BENJAMIN. The regard is high and is immense for his scholarship, for his fairness and for his just plain friendliness.

There is an old advertisement that says, "Nobody doesn't like Sarah Lee." And, as you shall soon see by the remarks that are to follow, nobody didn't like ADAM BENJAMIN.

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILLIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it was with great shock and with great sadness that I learned of this tragic event, the passing of our colleague. I had first gotten to know ADAM when we went to the Indiana General Assembly together in 1967 and served in the house where we sponsored a good number of bills together. As I got to know ADAM and worked with him we became quite good friends. He typified, as the gentleman said, everything that is good about politics and good about government. He was a symbol there. We used to call him Mr. Clean because of what he stood for and how he conducted himself. I would say in public service I have known many fine people and many great people. ADAM is of that category, probably the most ethical man in politics that I have ever known.

Mr. HAMILTON. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SHARP. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in recognizing our distinguished Hoosier colleague, who was a model, I think, for many of us as legislators. He certainly was an exceptional public servant who did honor to our people and honor to this Institution.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. I want to join in mourning the passing of ADAM BENJAMIN. There was no more dedicated or hardworking Member of this House.

He served as the chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, of which I am the ranking minority member. We sat shoulder to shoulder through countless hours of hearings, markups, and conferences with the other body.

ADAM sought solutions, not contention. He sought results, not showmanship. He was a champion of his people in his district. He was a giant of a man, a block of granite.

The people of Indiana have lost a great Congressman; the Congress has lost a fine subcommittee chairman, and I have lost a friend.

Mr. HAMILTON. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. FITHIAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege and the pleasure to share in the representation of ADAM's home county, Lake County. I think the best way to describe ADAM BENJAMIN is to say that he was a legislator's legislator. And the best phrase I know of to describe ADAM's life's work is that "he got things done," a tremendously effective person who knew no hours limitations on himself. His long hours contributed to democracy and to this House. We shall all miss him in Indiana, and we shall miss him in this House. The Nation has lost a great legislator. I extend my heartfelt condolences to the family of our late and great colleague, ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, was deeply shocked and saddened by ADAM's passing. As first-term Congressman from the other party, quite often you do not know what kind of relationships that you will be able to develop over time. But having the opportunity to fly with ADAM many, many times to and from Chicago I got to know ADAM as a friend and as a fellow Congressman. I think in those trips to and from Washington I learned a great deal not only about his dedication to his family, whether it was the last time I talked to him and he was the next day going to a baseball game with his children, or whether it was on Sunday afternoons or Sunday evenings hurrying to catch a plane, when we had been at the same parade, or at the same function, so that he could be here first thing Monday morning to get the job done here. Indiana will certainly miss ADAM BENJAMIN. The northwest Indiana sector had a fine Representative, and whoever follows him will have very large shoes to fill. I, as a new Member of Congress, will miss ADAM as well.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I express my gratitude to him for taking this time to relate to one of the great friends I have had in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out earlier, I, too, flew from Washington to Chicago, and I developed a truly wonderful friendship with ADAM. I never thought that it would so suddenly end.

As a man, ADAM was tough, he was generous and he was loving. As a Congressman, his achievements were as stunning as they were profound. ADAM was shrewd, he was honest, and he was effective. The effectiveness of the man was that he defeated one of the most powerful Members of Congress for that seat in Indiana. His rise on the Appropriations Committee was nothing less than miraculous. ADAM was a man certainly of national stature. Yet his dedication to his constituents ran very deep. ADAM BENJAMIN won many, many battles for Gary, and I am just happy to say that in winning those battles some of the victory spilled over into Chicago. He was a de facto member of the South Side of the city of Chicago because what was good for Gary and Indiana and Illinois was also good for my city. He also expected and received support from the Illinois delegation. I am proud of that. ADAM was a West Pointer and a marine. He was intensely proud of his family. He was a great storyteller and a magnificent person to share a martini with at week's end. Only in his death do we sadly recognize the national achievement and the personal wealth that were in one person, ADAM BENJAMIN. I express to his family my deepest sympathy.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COATS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think our colleagues are witnessing today the deep respect and admiration that both sides of the aisle have had for ADAM BENJAMIN. His loss is tragic. My first reaction was that ADAM is as close to irreplaceable in Congress as any person that I have known here. Even though I am a freshman from the party opposite of ADAM's, that was no barrier to his taking me under his wing, putting his hand on my shoulder, helping me to understand the legislative process, and working with me together for the good of Indiana and for the good of this Nation. I will miss him greatly. My deep sympathies are extended to his family. ADAM's loss is a loss to all of us.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, as a Congressman who has served on the Appropriations Committee and in the Steel Caucus and as one who was born in Indiana, I hope my colleagues will let me share their pride in ADAM and their sorrow over his death. He had a penetrating, no-nonsense mind. In the words of the E. F. Hutton ads, when ADAM spoke, people listened. We shall miss him very, very much.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I came to know ADAM BENJAMIN because my son, who was a political consultant, was involved in his first campaign in which he was elected to the Congress. When I had my office over in the Cannon Office Building, it would not matter whether I went home at 7 or 11 o'clock at night; I went by ADAM's office, and every time I went by his office, no matter how late it was, ADAM was in there working. I never experienced anyone who spent the hours at night working that ADAM did, for his constituents and for this House of Representatives. We will certainly miss him very much.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

May I pick up on the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, because I have known ADAM BENJAMIN over the relatively short period of time that he served in this body. I can tell you that he lived to work. When I have been driving home in the immediate neighborhood, there was ADAM at 8:30, 9 o'clock, just walking slowly back to his apartment. When I came back to work the next morning at 7:30, quarter to 8, there was ADAM BENJAMIN walking more briskly back to his office again.

Having served with him on the Subcommittee on Appropriations, I can certainly attest to the industrious manner with which he approached any subject. If it was the Capitol Grounds around here that needed repair, he wanted to see it firsthand, to make absolutely sure that the expenditure of a few thousand dollars was justified. I did not know about the fact that he came from a legislature with the kind of a reputation for having read every bill that came before the legislature, but I can fully understand that, having served the brief period of time that I served with him.

I guess at this time there really is no center aisle because those of us on our side appreciate just as much as those of you on the majority side what a contribution ADAM BENJAMIN has made to this House of Representatives. Seeing him operate, an "in-house" man at times, but also so well versed in the legislative ways, he brought credit to this House of Representatives. Each of us could take just a leaf from his book in how to conduct our lives on the floor of this House, on and off the floor. We are certainly going to miss ADAM. I consider him one of those new-found friends, now lost, that I got to know in the House of Representatives, and I guess that is what makes this such a great place to have the opportunity to serve with people about whom we feel so strongly, and I certainly want to extend my unbounded sympathy to his wife and children in their hour of bereavement.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Indiana has effectively summarized the characteristics of ADAM BENJAMIN that made him so beloved to all of us who had the opportunity to work with him. I was particularly privileged to have served with ADAM on the Budget Committee. Some of the traits that have been discussed already were the ones that stand out in my mind about ADAM, particularly the hard worker attitude that he had.

When I first came to this institution, one of the oldtimers told me that around this place knowledge is power, which means that if you do your homework fairly and effectively, people will come to you to seek information. If you are honest with them, you gain a stature of power that is not measured by title or by office. Clearly ADAM BENJAMIN was one of the most powerful people in this body because he was a prodigious worker who did his homework very effectively. And when you talked to him about an issue, he did not color the facts; he gave it to you straight. He was honest, he was independent. That made him a powerful and beloved individual. Another characteristic of ADAM was his independence, the fact that he was a strong Democrat, and yet he crossed the aisle many times and voted for Republican amendments when he thought that was in the best interest of the country.

Obviously, he had strong support from labor, organized labor, and working people, and yet a few months ago when I was in Gary at his request to speak to the chamber of commerce group there, it was obvious that he had very strong support and respect among management and the business community.

It is this honest and independence and hard work that made him stand out as a most effective legislator and a most effective national leader.

I will miss him very deeply as a friend. The Budget Committee and the whole process of the budget will miss him very deeply, because he did do his homework and he was effective.

I extend my very deepest sympathies to his family and friends.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, with a profound sense of shock and sorrow, I join my colleagues in paying a last tribute to ADAM BENJAMIN. As a human being, and as a Member of this House, ADAM embodied everything that was decent and good.

He was a caring person, with a deep sense of fairness and justice, and he was a warm personal friend of many Members of this House.

He was an exceptional legislator and public servant, who served with high distinction in the Indiana Legislature, and who in only three terms came to be recognized as one of the most respected and effective Members of the House. He was, in a word, a legislator's legislator, noted for his diligence, his knowledge of the procedures and the business of the House, and his skill in using the art of the possible to make good things happen.

In the House, there is no higher distinction than to be an effective chairman of an appropriations subcommittee. ADAM earned that distinction on two appropriations subcommittees during his three terms on the committee.

It was my privilege to serve with ADAM during his chairmanship of the Transportation Subcommittee. I served on that subcommittee for many years. I have a strong personal commitment to many of those programs, and I have had many deep and rewarding associations with members of that subcommittee.

ADAM mastered the programs and the personalities of that subcommittee, and became one of the most effective members and chairman in its history. I am deeply grateful for the opportunity I had to serve with him, and to share his high abilities as a legislator, and his warmth and depth as a human being.

His ability and his depth and his warmth will be missed by this House and each of its Members. His public service will be missed by this country. I send my heartfelt condolences to Mrs. Benjamin and his family.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I certainly want to join the gentleman from Indiana in extending my sympathy to ADAM's beautiful family. He was a wonderful father and husband and spoke of them very, very often.

ADAM was a friend and classmate. I remember when we came in together to this fine body, he gave our class many innovative, creative ideas.

I think ADAM was one of those public servants who very seldom would make headlines, but he was one of the most quietly effective and decent people for whom this country could hope.

In addition to that, he not only served Gary, Ind., so effectively and beautifully, and unselfishly, he also was very generous with his time for other constituencies. I know that the people of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, our mayor and Congressman STOKES, myself, and others, are especially grateful for the hard work that he performed on our behalf in terms of the supplemental bill that we will be taking up shortly.

So all of us will miss ADAM tremendously, but we will remember him. I believe for me, anyway, he will always be a prototype and a model of what a public official should be.

Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

● Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, as Congress reconvened from the district work period, I am sure that our colleagues join me in the grief that I felt upon learning of the death of ADAM BENJAMIN. He was a dear friend to all of those whose lives he touched, and he will be sorely missed.

ADAM and I became close friends shortly after his arrival to Congress in 1976, traveling together frequently on Midway Airlines from Chicago's southside. I think the fact that we had many things in common enabled us to develop a quick and lasting friendship. We were both Democrats who represented a Midwestern district, and had a long record of public service in our respective State legislatures. We were both keenly interested in transportation issues, he as chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee and I, as a member of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee.

The true testament to ADAM, though, is that aside from any common interests, he could befriend anyone. ADAM was an approachable, sensitive, warm person and genuinely liked people, regardless of their ideology or party affiliation. I am sure that is exactly how he became such a successful and respected leader in his community.

Coupled with his personal charm, ADAM was also one of the most tireless, dedicated workers of this body. The stories of his late night and weekend work hours have almost become legend in his relatively short tenure here. The industry and commitment which he brought to his job will be hard to match for many years by those of us remaining. As if the role of a Congressman were not demanding enough, ADAM still found the time and energy to better himself by attending Georgetown for a masters of law degree. I trust our House leaders and fellow Members recognized immediately this inherent perseverence and dependability, when ADAM was awarded a seat on the powerful Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Speaker, this body is composed of a variety of Members who span a broad range of stature. I am sure, with time, it will become evident that ADAM BENJAMIN made his mark as a giant amongst us. I offer my heartfelt condolences to his entire family.●

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I learned about ADAM BENJAMIN before he got here. He had the reputation in Indiana and in the Indiana Legislature for being the classic inside man. He was a real pleasure to work with. I had the privilege of working with from the very beginning and it was fascinating to watch him move in ways that most people do not, to get to the core of the House.

I doubt very much whether most people understand how potent he was in the first few months that he was here. He knew his way around in a way that was almost unbelievable in 6 months and he was a force and an influence in a year. His power and influence for good and for his State grew monthly. He was one of the most extraordinary Members I have ever seen in this institution and I doubt that even his close friends fully understand how much influence he had.

The country is going to miss ADAM BENJAMIN. The institution is going to miss ADAM BENJAMIN. The district and the State that he represented are going to miss him and I have nothing but the deepest sympathy for his family, because I know they will miss him, too.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

ADAM occupied the same corridor as I do in the Cannon Building, two offices down. No matter what time I left that office, 7 o'clock, 8 o'clock, 9 o'clock, 10 o'clock, ADAM's light was still on; no one in his office, just ADAM sitting at his desk poring over legislation, working on issues long after every other Member of Congress had gone home. He worked very, very hard. He worked too hard. He worked harder than any man I have ever met in any field of endeavor.

I am very sorry to see him pass, because he was one of the most honest, tough, ethical people that I have ever met. He was somebody who if he had worked a little less hard could have been with us another 20 or 25 years serving this institution and would have left a record that would have been unparalleled because of his ability to understand how this place worked and how to make it work for the issues and the beliefs that he held very dearly.

I will miss him very much, because he was a good friend of mine, and I believe the Congress and the people of this country will miss him just as much.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I subscribe to the many wonderful statements that have been made on the untimely passing of our friend, ADAM BENJAMIN.

On the Appropriations Committee, I do not know of anyone who applied himself more closely, who was more effective and who did it with as little fanfare as did ADAM BENJAMIN. Notwithstanding all the work that he did in so many fields, if ever there was a need for a volunteer, ADAM was willing to take that on, too.

So I say again that I subscribe to the many things said here and I add to it that his untimely passing leaves a void that is going to be difficult to fill and nobody will ever take his place, actually, but it will take two or three to take up the load that he carried.

I extend my deepest sympathy to his family. He leaves a monument and a mark here that all of us might well try to emulate.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in paying tribute to ADAM BENJAMIN.

Our colleague, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, summarized it well when he said that ADAM BENJAMIN did things with little fanfare. He was not a meteor out there. He was not doing things because it might make television tomorrow. He was a solid, substantial legislator, who contributed in a very meaningful way to what goes on in this body.

Our colleague, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BOLLING) was correct when he said this institution, this House, is going to miss him.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana, and my other friends and colleagues in expressing sympathy to the family of ADAM BENJAMIN.

We came to Congress together. He was a good friend, which of course was strengthened by the fact that he was educated in my district during his younger life.

He worked hard and he was what we call a real workhorse, as opposed to a show horse. This institution is all the finer because of it. This country is all the better off because of ADAM BENJAMIN.

I know that his memory will linger with us for many, many years.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for taking this time to give those of us who knew and loved ADAM BENJAMIN the opportunity to express our deepest and sincerest sympathy to his family.

Late yesterday afternoon, having lost the governorship in my State, I boarded a plane in Atlanta to return to Washington to complete my career in the Congress. I picked up a paper and opened it up and first learned of ADAM's death.

It suddenly dawned on me that all I have lost was an election, but that ADAM's wife has lost a husband. His children have lost a great father. His district and his State have lost a tremendous Representative and this Congress and this country have lost, I think, one of the finest men who ever served in this body.

I was a fellow Appropriations Subcommittee chairman with ADAM. No Member, to my knowledge, did his work more effectively, as has been pointed out, with less fanfare, but with more dignity and effectiveness than did ADAM BENJAMIN.

I extend my deepest sympathy to his family and to his district and to his State.

I think the highest compliment I can pay ADAM BENJAMIN is to say that he will truly be missed. I am a better person in having known my friend, ADAM BENJAMIN.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I would like to express my deepest sympathies to the family of ADAM BENJAMIN.

I was fortunate to get to know ADAM BENJAMIN as a member of the executive committee of the Steel Caucus and I watched him as a leader of that caucus. I listened and learned as he handled a wide variety of issues of critical importance to this Nation's steel industry. I grew to respect his ability and to admire him greatly.

It has been said that he operated without fanfare, that he was concerned with substance—that is so true. He was the kind of Congressman that we would hope for on both sides of the aisle—for the benefit of the body and for the benefit of the American people.

ADAM BENJAMIN was also a kind and affectionate human being. He did not seem to have, and if he had them, I never saw them—any partisan bones in his body. He would work with Members of this side of the aisle just as well as he would work with Members of his own party. Respect and friendship were in surplus from his fellow Members.

He will certainly be missed by his colleagues on the Steel Caucus and throughout this House. I heard some people talking the other day about what a Congressman has to do to achieve national recognition. You would think that national recognition would come to a Congressman who worked and achieved the way ADAM BENJAMIN did. That is not exactly the way things work out, but when people ask Members of Congress who they admire and who they respect and who they would like to emulate, certainly the name of ADAM BENJAMIN would stand tall before all of us as a name to remember.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the genetleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I join my colleagues in expressing my condolences to the family of my dear departed friend, ADAM BENJAMIN, with whom I had the privilege of serving on the Appropriations Committee.

Like others who have expressed their admiration for ADAM today, I respected ADAM for his quiet courage and the dedicated manner in which he went about his work in service to his Nation.

I was taught as a child at my mother's knee that loyalty was the greatest virtue, and I believe that ADAM demonstrated loyalty to the people that he worked for, to the Nation that he served, and to the family that he loved. He will be dearly missed in Congress. While his lights in the office in the Cannon Building will be darkened, the light that ADAM BENJAMIN shone here in Washington will long be remembered.

□ 1300

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I was shocked, as all of us were, to read of the untimely passing of our dear friend ADAM BENJAMIN. I want to join my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in paying tribute to a distinguished and dedicated Member of this body. ADAM's life will always stand as a great symbol for all of us to strive for in achieving excellence, in attempting to achieve excellence as we go about our legislative duties.

I do not know of a finer man than ADAM. ADAM was a marvelous man to deal with. He knew all the intricate details of every piece of legislation that he handled, and others.

Mr. Speaker, I used to enjoy talking with him about Hoosier hysteria and Hoosier mania and how all the teams were doing which represented that great part of this Nation, which he so ably represented. He was a fine gentleman.

I was doubly saddened to read that he had come back to town to put his son into school; to have it happen in such a way as that is the height of pain, I am sure, for he and his family.

The Nation is poorer for his loss. This House is poorer for his loss.

I want to extend my deepest condolences to his survivors and I thank the gentleman for taking the time to permit us to pause to pay tribute to a truly great American, the late ADAM BENJAMIN.

● Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, joining in this final tribute to our colleague, Congressman ADAM BENJAMIN, JR., of the First District of Indiana, I must first indicate the deep shock which accompanied the report of his unexpected and abrupt passing.

Mr. Speaker, my association with Congressman BENJAMIN was far more intimate than that which I have experienced with most of my colleagues in this body. As a Representative in Congress from the great steel-producing area of Gary, Ind., ADAM BENJAMIN and I worked closely together as members of the Steel Caucus. ADAM's consideration of the views and interests of others and his ability to organize and apply the joint efforts of those of us who were having similar economic problems were among his special talents.

Mr. Speaker, ADAM BENJAMIN has been one of the harder working Members of the Congress who earned the respect and enjoyed the friendship of those on both sides of the political aisle. In recalling his service and his useful life in our Nation, I take this occasion also to express my respect and deep sympathy to his widow, Patricia, and to all members of his family.●

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my deep sorrow at the passing of our distinguished and well-loved colleague, ADAM BENJAMIN. His sudden death is a great personal loss for me and a great loss as well for the Congress and the Nation it serves.

ADAM was a legislator in every good sense of the word. His ability to move complex legislation through the House—building coalitions, crafting compromises, and giving all affected parties a fair say in the final product—exemplified the best in our democratic traditions and in our legislative process.

As we worked together closely on legislation, ADAM and I developed a friendship that has ended too soon. My heart goes out to ADAM's family and to the people of Indiana in this time of sorrow. I know that we in the House will not soon forget the contributions ADAM BENJAMIN has made to our institution and to the American people.●

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, like so many of my colleagues, I was stunned yesterday at the tragic news of the untimely death of my distinguished colleague and good friend from Indiana, ADAM BENJAMIN.

During the last 6 years he served in the Congress, representing the First District of Indiana, I had the opportunity to work with him, to get to know him, and I became one of his great admirers.

He was a loyal, staunch, and dedicated Member of the House of Representatives. He reflected credit on the House, for he was a tireless worker in behalf of his constituents, his State, and his beloved America.

As chairman of the Congressional Steel Caucus, as a member of the House Budget and Transportation Committees, as a member of the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee and the Democratic Caucus Committee on Party Effectiveness, and later, as a member of the Appropriations Committee and chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation of the Appropriations Committee, he gave inspired leadership to this body which will be remembered for years to come.

He was a 1958 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, earned his law degree from Valparaiso University in 1968, and before coming to Congress, he served as a State senator in the Indiana Legislature from 1971 to 1977, and prior to that, he served as a State representative from 1967 to 1971.

Those of us who had the privilege of knowing ADAM BENJAMIN as a friend and colleague deeply mourn his passing, and our hearts go out to his bereaved family. Mrs. Annunzio joins me in extending our heartfelt sympathy to ADAM's devoted wife, Patricia, and his three children, Adam III, Alison, and Arianne, on their great loss.●

● Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I knew ADAM because we represented adjoining districts, we served together on the Steel Caucus, and we served together on the Appropriations Committee.

He was a model of what a Congressman should be.

No issue was too complex, nor constituent case too small, to escape his study. Everything that affected the lives of his constituents affected his life. He was totally dedicated to their service.

This was illustrated by his mastery of the problems of the steel industry. ADAM had a knowledge of the workers, the management, the plants, and the equipment that would have made a Wall Street analyst envious.

Why did he know these things? Because in ADAM's district the steel industry is the economic mainstay. And, to his great personal anguish, hundreds upon hundreds of steel workers are out of work.

ADAM made their concern his own. He could have paid lipservice to their plight, and probably have been seen as doing enough. But that was not ADAM. He had to learn the industry—top to bottom, inside and out—so that he would truly act in the best interests of those unemployed workers.

This is just one example of the kind of Congressman he was. There are many more.

What we have gained by his working among us is inestimable. What we have lost by his passing is clear: He was a voice of reason and conciliation, of compassion and responsibility.

I valued his counsel greatly. I will miss him every day.●

● Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the late ADAM BENJAMIN, JR., our colleague from Indiana. I know that many of the Members gathered here share my sadness at his sudden and untimely death.

ADAM BANJAMIN will long be remembered by his colleagues in the House, Indiana State legislators and local elected officials, and by more than anyone else his constituents for his tireless efforts on their behalf. The words dedication and self-sacrifice come to the minds of his friends and associates when his name is mentioned. I was privileged to serve with ADAM on the Congressional Steel Caucus, of which he was chairman—his leadership there will be sorely missed. Known for his mastery of detail and his in-depth knowledge of the problems facing steel and other heavy industries, he was an effective spokesman for the interests of the industrial Midwest.

ADAM BANJAMIN earned an engineering degree from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, and his law degree from Valparaiso University of Indiana. As well, he lectured on the social sciences and budget studies at Georgetown University, from which he was to have been awarded a master's degree in comparative and international law. He was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1976, and has served on the House Appropriations and Budget Committees, holding the chairmanship of the Subcommittee on Transportation of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and respect that we mark the passing of ADAM BENJAMIN, JR. No words can fully express the emptiness we all feel and the void which he has left. Our prayers go out to his family, for we know what a loss they have suffered, and pray that God will give them strength.●

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, there was something in the character of our colleague from Gary, Ind., that reflected the burgeoning steel-mill communities of his district. ADAM BENJAMIN was a man of steel when it came to making the difficult choices that we all must make in this body. He was a man of principle, of compassion, and a model of dedication for us all.

Many of us have our own special memories of this man, who I regarded as my friend. For me and for all the citizens of our country's territories, ADAM BENJAMIN will be remembered as a man who remembered them. Time and again, when faced with the need to control Government spending, it was politically expedient to forget that the territories are actually a part of this country and to wipe out their share of a particular Federal program. ADAM never saw things that way. His vision of the Nation was one of the whole rather than the overriding interest of a part.

We needed a man like ADAM to be our conscience and we are at a great loss with his passing. As chairman of the Congressional Territorial Caucus, I would like to extend to his family the deepest sympathy of the representatives and the people of the U.S. territories on the passing of this great man, our friend. I know that all our thoughts are with his wife, Patricia, and his children in this time of need. ADAM, we miss you.●

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, as a freshman Republican Member of this House it may seem unlikely that I would have had the time or experiences to come to know ADAM BENJAMIN but in fact my brief relationship with him was one of the most pleasant and surprising experiences I have had in this body.

Earlier this year I asked ADAM BENJAMIN if a city official from Omaha and I might visit with him and his staff about a project that his subcommittee had jurisdiction over. He readily agreed and during that meeting you would have thought the public works director from Omaha and the freshman Republican Congressman were visiting dignitaries from Gary, Ind. He knowledgeably discussed the problem with us and explained the various priorities and problems that his committee faced. We received no assurances or promises during that meeting but when we left we were both supremely confident that whatever decision was made—it would be a fair one.

Later, I had an opportunity to thank ADAM for his committee having agreed to appropriate funds for this project and he told me that the merits of the situation had made the decision for him—refusing my thanks.

ADAM BENJAMIN showed me the kind of class that one would expect to see in Congress and more. Listening to the remembrances of those who knew him far better than I it is clear that his life must have been a continuing series of impressions such as mine. As long as I will serve in this body, I shall remember the fairness and kindness that ADAM BENJAMIN showed me and I will recall how good he made me feel about this body. He was an example to all of us, not simply because he worked so hard, but because he did that work in a positive fashion, making friends all the while.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that I had the opportunity to know ADAM BENJAMIN during the short time that we served together in this body. It is a memory that I shall keep with me and treasure.●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in expressing my terrible shock and sadness at the sudden death of our colleague, ADAM BENJAMIN.

It would be impossible to find a Member of Congress who worked harder than the soft-spoken gentleman from Indiana. ADAM was a friendly and gentle man whose conscientious attitude earned him the admiration of his colleagues and the affection of his constituents.

A graduate of West Point Military Academy who served in Korea, ADAM BENJAMIN was intensely dedicated to serving his country. In his third term as the Representative of Indiana's First District, he proved to be a skilled legislator who sought out some of the most difficult tasks in the House. His work on the Budget and Appropriations Committees, and on the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee and the Democratic Caucus Committee on Party Effectiveness, reflected a sincere commitment to good government.

He brought honor to this House, and he will be remembered as a man of integrity and distinguished service to the people of America. I offer my deepest sympathies to his wife and family.●

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, as closely as I worked with our late colleague ADAM BENJAMIN on the Steel Caucus, and as much as I respected him, there is much about him I did not know because his talk was of work and not of himself.

For example, he was relentless in his search for useful knowledge and he had an unquenchable curiosity about the way things work.

But I do not know if he read philosophy.

However, I do know his approach to public life matched to the letter a maxim of a 19th century French philosopher, who said, "you can only govern men by serving them. The rule is without exception."

Around Gary and northwest Indiania they were well governed when ADAM BENJAMIN had a hand in it. And the same is true for the executive committee of the Congressional Steel Caucus, of which he was chairman.

I do not know if ADAM BENJAMIN was a religious man.

But I do know his personal style matched word for word the admonition from Ecclesiastes in the Old Testament:

"Whatsoever thou findest to do, do it with thy might . . ."

ADAM BENJAMIN'S time in the House of Representatives was marked by considerable service given with his might, which was substantial.

As a founder of the Steel Caucus, and a sustaining force, ADAM had an unspoken rule—never retreat, always advance. I do not know if he learned the rule in the Marines as an enlisted man or at West Point or as a young officer in the 101st Airborne; but he learned it well and he applied it with diligence as he moved from local government to State government to National Government and up in the National Government, always serving.

No meeting was too early for ADAM BENJAMIN and no crisis happened to late. He just was always there. It was never inconvenient for ADAM to drop what he was doing—and you never found him doing nothing—to go to the White House or the Department of Commerce or the International Trade Commission to work on a problem.

Unfailing is the only word to describe him.

One of his last official acts was to straighten out a punitive and discriminatory application to the steel industry of last month's tax bill.

He did it between 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. one hectic day before adjournment.

ADAM was never at a loss for long, and here he met and exceeded an ancient measure set down by the Roman historian Tacitus for judging the quality of a man:

"Reason and calm judgment are the qualities especially belonging to a leader."

ADAM BENJAMIN was a leader.

When you work day in and day out with a man, month in and month out, year in and year out, you come to understand his strength and his shortcomings.

ADAM BENJAMIN had very few flaws and they were all minor.

He had much strength, and as the Book of Proverbs says, "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friends."

The sharp edge of the steel caucus will be different because ADAM is not with us to apply his particular honing; so will that of the House; so will that of the Congress.

The highest tribute we can give him is to see that the edge is only different and not less sharp.

And most important in my mind is this: We must always advance, never retreat.●

● Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep and abiding sense of loss that I join with my colleagues in paying a final tribute to Representative ADAM BENJAMIN. Of course, with a man like ADAM, there is no "final" ending because his caring, his concern, and his hard work have left a lasting monument and living legacy.

The man got the job done. In a quiet and unassuming way he assured, for example, that the Midwest got a fair hearing always with the Federal Government when it came to dollars and cents. He got the job done of being a Member of Congress, and done well, because he understood not only practical matters like transportation needs, but he also understood the deeper needs of a citizenry for fair representation.

I counted ADAM as a personal friend and I will miss our discussion on the plane the many times we flew together to and from Washington, D.C. I will miss knowing he is not here. He was a fine and cooperative person with whom to work as well as a loyal friend.●

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, what word other than shocking can one use to describe the passing of ADAM BENJAMIN. The House has lost one of its most hard-working, decent, and principled Members—and I have lost a treasured and respected friend and colleague.

In only three terms, ADAM had already been chairman of two House Appropriations subcommittees. He was Chair of the Congressional Steel Caucus Executive Committee, where I worked closely with him, and to which he gave such forceful leadership.

He was a most effective representative of the people of his district. Despite a crowded schedule, ADAM somehow made time to work on a graduate degree in law and to lecture at the Georgetown University Law Center.

ADAM offered a most fitting example of the manner in which a Member should conduct himself—principled, competent, knowledgeable, unassuming, in touch with his constituents, responsive to the national interest.

My wife, Jo, and I join together to express to ADAM's wife and children our deepest sympathies. We can only imagine the great loss they feel. They and ADAM will be in our prayers.●

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week we were shocked to learn of the untimely death of one of this Chamber's most dedicated and hardest-working Members, the Honorable ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

In the three short terms ADAM BENJAMIN served in Congress, he proved himself to be one of this body's most skilled and effective legislators. Members on both sides of the aisle will agree that ADAM was one who did not constantly strive for attention from the media when he tackled the many problems we face today. He simply worked diligently at his desk and quietly looked for results. ADAM was one who took a position on an issue—no matter what the press or anyone else thought about it—and kept pushing that idea along till it could go no further. Many here quickly learned that if you had ADAM BENJAMIN on your side it made your job much, much simpler.

Born in Gary, Ind., ADAM attended the public schools before graduating from Kemper Military School. From there, he entered the U.S. Marine Corps. In 1958, he earned an engineering degree from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. Soon thereafter, he entered the Army and served through 1961. ADAM went on to receive a law degree in 1966 from Indiana's Valparaiso University. At the time of his death, ADAM was working on a masters degree in comparative international law at Georgetown University.

Prior to his work in Congress, ADAM first served in the Indiana House of Representatives from 1967 to 1971. After this, he continued to move up the ladder with his election to the State senate. He served in this capacity through 1977.

In November 1976, ADAM began the first of his three terms in the U.S. House of Representatives as the lawmaker of Indiana's First Congressional District. Those familiar with this tough, blue-collar, heavily industrialized area know that its residents made a wise decision when they sent ADAM to Washington to represent their views.

Upon his arrival in our Nation's Capitol, ADAM received two highly critical committee assignments: Appropriations and Budget. Also, he was chairman of both the executive committee of the Congressional Steel Caucus and the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee. ADAM also found the time to sit on the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee and the Democratic Caucus' Committee on Party Effectiveness.

As chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee, I have had the unique opportunity and privilege to work closely with ADAM on a number of projects in the field of public transit. Anyone the least bit familiar with his work in this area recognized that ADAM was an absolute champion in advocating the need for a strong national transit system. ADAM fought hard for many important transit projects, not only in Gary but also in the entire State of Indiana. At the same time, however, he had the foresight needed to look at the situation on a national scale and take appropriate action. His ability to comprehend the enormous problems which face our Nation's highways, bridges, and ports should not be overlooked. ADAM's insight, wisdom, and fortitude will sorely be missed through the end of this 97th Congress and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, my wife, Lee, joins me in expressing our heartfelt condolences to ADAM's wife, Patricia, and their three children, Adam III, Alison, and Arianne.●

● Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of deep sadness that I join today in paying tribute to and mourning the loss of our hard-working, affable colleague from Indiana, Representative ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

I had the opportunity to work closely with ADAM BENJAMIN in two major areas in recent years: Problems confronting our domestic steel industry and funding for mass transit systems.

As a member of the Executive Committee of the Congressional Steel

Caucus, I had a firsthand view of ADAM's leadership abilities. While chairman of the Executive Committee he was relentless in efforts to probe the problems of this vital domestic industry and to seek remedial action by drawing attention to those problems in Executive Committee sessions and special orders here on the floor.

In his capacity as chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Transportation, ADAM was a strong supporter of mass transit improvements. On several occasions, he was most helpful to our efforts in Buffalo, N.Y., to provide sustained Federal funding for construction of a light rail transit line in our city.

While he was diligent in carrying out his leadership responsibilities. ADAM BENJAMIN wore the mantle of leadership lightly, never too busy to listen to a colleague or lend a hand if he possibly could. ADAM BENJAMIN'S leadership and friendship will be missed in this Congress and I join in expressing sympathy to his family.●

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Members for their several contributions.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 579) on the death of the Honorable ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 579

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Honorable Adam Benjamin, Jr., a Representative from the State of Indiana.

Resolved, That a committee of such Members of the House as the Speaker may designate, together with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the House adjourns today, it adjourn as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE LATE HONORABLE FRANK CHELF

(Mr. NATCHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, our former colleague, Frank Chelf of Lebanon, Ky., died on Wednesday, September 1, in the nursing home of the Spring View Hospital. He was buried in Ryder Cemetery in Marion County, Ky.

Frank Chelf was born on a farm near Elizabethtown in Hardin County, Ky., on September 22, 1907. He attended the public schools in Elizabethtown and later attended Centre College at Danville, Ky., and St. Mary's College at St. Mary's, Ky. He was graduated from the Law School of Cumberland University in Lebanon, Tenn., in 1931 and was admitted to the bar the same year. He began the practice of law in Lebanon, Ky., and was elected to the office of county attorney of Marion County, Ky., and served from 1933 to 1944. Beginning on August 1, 1942, he was granted a leave of absence from his official duties to volunteer in the U.S. Army and later was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Air Corps and saw active service. He served as chief code designator, Intelligence Division, Air Transport Command, and later as executive officer of the Plans and Liaison Division and as assistant chief of air staff training. He was discharged on August 10, 1944, with a rank of major in the Air Corps. He was elected as a Democrat to the 79th and to the 10 succeeding Congresses, January 3, 1945, January 3, 1967. Frank Chelf returned to his home county to resume the practice of law following his service in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, my friend, Frank Chelf, established an outstanding record in the House of Representatives. He served for 22 consecutive years as Representative of the old Fourth Congressional District and this is the alltime record. He served in the House of Representatives with distinction and honor. Frank Chelf loved the House of Representatives and he believed that our country is the greatest country in the world. His concept of public trust was without parallel and never did he hesitate to speak out against any proposal which he felt was not sound and not in the best interests of our people.

Mr. Speaker, words are inadequate to fully appraise Frank Chelf's tremendous capacity for loyalty and love of his country. In every position he held, either private or public, he achieved distinction. His service in all of his assignments was marked by a high sense of conscience and duty. He will have a high place in the history of our country and in the hearts of his countrymen. His character, his achievements, and his faithful service will be an inspiration to generations yet to come.

During his service in the House of Representatives, he succeeded in passing the Young American Medals for Bravery Act, which went into effect in 1950. Under this legislation, young people who demonstrate unusual bravery are awarded medals by the President. My friend, Frank Chelf, was very much concerned about the immigration laws in this country and he soon became one of the leading authorities on his Committee on the Judiciary on this subject. He was a self-made man and he was one of the Members of the House who enjoyed participating in debate on important legislation. His life exemplifies those virtues that make a great Congressman and those were fairness, generosity, willingness to listen, and unyielding devotion to the principles of his party and to all matters which were for the best interests of our country. He left his mark on Congress, not necessarily through legislation which he succeeded in having enacted, but instead through his character itself. He was always a gentleman and always a strong leader.

I have lost a true friend and this country has lost a great statesman. To his lovely wife and family, I extend my deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thank the gentleman very much for having taken this moment to remind the Members of our House of the passing of our distinguished colleague from the State of Kentucky, Frank Chelf.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very sad day, because of our dear friend, ADAM BENJAMIN, who died and has been eulogized earlier today. He was a young man with great promise.

I would like to mention to my friend from the Second District of Kentucky, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education (Mr. NATCHER), that when I first came to the House 12 years ago I lived at the place which was then called the Coronet Hotel. As I walked back and forth to my office, which was then in the Longworth Building, I would see Frank Chelf, who was still in Washington following his distinguished service in the House of Representatives. Mr. Chelf, despite my own youth and newness to the Chamber and this body, and despite his senior status and great experience, never passed an opportunity to say hello to me, to welcome me, to try to make me feel comfortable, to give me the benefit of his years of wisdom.

Mr. Speaker, I have never forgotten that. In a short note to his bereaved widow the other day, I mentioned that. I think perhaps the way senior Members of this Chamber treat the junior Members of it is perhaps the best delineation and measurement of that individual's character. If I am correct in that analysis, I would say that our distinguished past Member, Mr. Chelf, had deep character.

I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for taking this moment, I extend, with him, sympathies to the widow and to the family.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, those of us who knew and served with former Representative Frank L. Chelf of Kentucky are saddened by his death on September 1.

He had been ill for a long time, and death came in his hometown of Lebanon, Ky. He would have been 75 on the 22d of this month.

Congressman Chelf was first elected to the House in 1944, and served from January 3, 1945, until the expiration of his 11th term on January 3, 1967. He performed distinguished service on the Judiciary Committee for many years.

He was a stalwart fighter for more equitable immigration laws at a time when our immigration policies had not been changed for many years. His own background as an orphaned child was reflected in his efforts to liberalize the immigration laws to permit the entry into this country of children orphaned and displaced by World War II.

Frank was born in Elizabethtown, Ky., on September 22, 1907. After spending time in an orphanage, he was graduated from the Elizabethtown High School, and then went on to study at Centre College in Danville, Ky., and at St. Mary's College in Kentucky. He took his legal training at Cumberland University School of Law in Lebanon, Tenn., and began his practice in Lebanon, Ky., in 1931. For 11 years he was county attorney of Marion County.

In August 1942, he took leave from his official duties to volunteer in the Army Air Corps, and was discharged for physical disability in August 1944 with the rank of major.

But service was in Frank Chelf's blood. As a returned veteran, he sought and won his Democratic Party's nomination to Congress, and in November 1944, defeated the incumbent, Hon. Chester O. Carrier.

Frank was widely known and much liked in the Congress. He was a friendly, outgoing man, and did his best to be accommodating. Service to the people of his district was his guiding star, and they responded by reelecting him time after time.

After a difficult court-ordered redistricting of Kentucky as a result of the one-man, one-vote decision, Frank Chelf voluntarily retired and the legislature created a new Fourth District. The Democratic nominee in the newly drawn district died with less than 2 weeks to go before the election. The Democratic Party once more turned to Frank as its standard bearer, but it was then too late to mount an effective campaign. And so Frank's last campaign—an accident no one could foresee—was the only unsuccessful one in his political career. He retired to the practice of law in his home State.

He is survived by his wife, the former Louise Rash; two daughters, Mrs. John Collins Polk and Mrs. Tommy Simpson; a son, Frank L. Chelf, Jr.; a sister, Mary Ellen Gruber; and seven grandchildren, all of Lebanon, Ky.

Those of us who knew this kind and decent man are grieved by his passing.●

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, may I join with my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), in expressing our deep regret at the passing of our good friend, Frank Chelf.

As we pause here today in memory of two of our friends, may I say that Frank was a valuable and outstanding Member of Congress with another type of approach. I never saw him that he was not enthusiastic and outgoing, active and personable beyond average. There is room in this Congress for all types, each successful particularly in these cases where there was a real contribution to the well-being of the country.

Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out, Frank was very much interested in all of his associates. We regretted to see him leave this body and we again join with our friends in expressing our sorrow at this untimely passing.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the life, character, and public service of the late Honorable Frank Chelf of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

"TALKING POINTS" OF PRESIDENT REAGAN'S MIDDLE EAST PEACE PROPOSAL

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan's speech last week outlining major and fundamental changes in American policy toward Israel raises several disturbing questions.

I have read the President's speech, I have read carefully the letters exchanged between President Reagan and Israeli Prime Minister Begin, and the formal response from the Israeli Cabinet on September 2, 1982.

The Israeli Cabinet response of September 2, and I quote, states:

The positions conveyed to the Prime Minister of Israel on behalf of the President of the United States consist of partial quotations from the Camp David Agreement or are nowhere mentioned in that agreement or contradict it entirely.

The Cabinet statement also says, "The following are the major positions of the United States:"

The Cabinet response then goes on to list seven major deviations from the letter and spirit of the Camp David accords.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that the positions enunciated by the President constitute major deviations from the Camp David peace process in that they fundamentally alter American policy in the Middle East are a matter of grave concern to me.

More importantly, however, is the matter of the details of the American position.

The language conveyed to the Israeli Government must come from some document.

Clearly the anguished response by our stauchest ally in the Middle East cannot be based on the fairly mild and vague statements contained in the President's speech.

Where does this language come from, which seems effectively to abrogate the Camp David agreements?

Mr. Speaker, highly respected sources in the Middle East and here in Washington have been saying for some days that the language comes from a detailed set of talking points which were included with the President's letter to Mr. Begin. Neither the President's letter to Prime Minister Begin, nor the accompanying documents, have been made public.

It is these so-called talking points that are the basis of the Israeli Cabinet's angry rejection of the Reagan plan.

One must also presume that these same talking points are the basis for the Arab States thus far warm reception to the Reagan plan.

Mr. Speaker, I have sent a letter to the President this morning in which I request him to make public the details of these talking points so that we in the Congress and the American people can make intelligent judgments with regard to the Reagan plan, once we are in possession of all the relevant facts.

It is essential for us to know exactly what are the elements of the President's peace plan.

The President and administration owe it to the American people to make the talking points a matter of public record.

Surely there can be no compromise to American security involved here since a number of Arab governments in the region had an advance look at the points before they were even shown to our ally, Israel.

AMBASSADOR PHILIP C. HABIB: A REWARD RICHLY DESERVED

(Mr. KAZEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Speaker, today, I want to extend my congratulations and my personal appreciation to Ambassador Philip C. Habib for the extraordinary work he has performed for this country and for the cause of peace in the world. Few people have the expertise, the tireless energy and the dedication to do what he has done in gaining the confidence of such diverse parties and bringing about a cease-fire and withdrawal of foreign forces in Lebanon.

I have known Philip Habib since the days when he served so well as our negotiator in Paris charged with the difficult job of dealing with the North Vietnamese, and it was obvious at that time that this country had been blessed with a truly remarkable person. It was characteristic of him to praise his own staff and others when, this week, he was presented with the Medal of Freedom, the highest honor a civilian can receive from a grateful Nation, for his untiring and successful efforts to end the bloodshed in the Middle East.

He has called himself a "chronic optimist," but he is also a caring person who is dedicated to the cause of peace. The Medal of Freedom is richly deserved for this fine man, this great American, this proud son of Lebanese immigrants, and I am pleased to extend my strongest support for his efforts and my warmest congratulations to him and his family.

THE LATE HONORABLE ADAM BENJAMIN

(Mr. GAYDOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, it is both ironic and significant that ADAM BENJAMIN leaves us at this time, since the Steel Caucus is just 5 years old this month. The significance of it is that ADAM BENJAMIN was one of the originators, one of the original organizers of the Steel Caucus. He took numerous trips personally with the executive committee which he headed during the last 3 years down to the White House, with the Secretary of Commerce, and held early morning meetings for years as chairman of the executive committee.

Mr. Speaker, these are the things we do not know and do not read of.

I knew ADAM BENJAMIN personally and I do regret that I was not here when my remarks could have been made part of the RECORD with my colleagues in a longer timeframe.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the life, character, and public service of our friend and colleague, the Honorable ADAM BENJAMIN, JR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

CONGRATULATIONS EXTENDED TO AMBASSADOR PHILIP HABIB

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday it was my privilege to attend the White House ceremonies honoring Ambassador Philip Habib for his dangerous and demanding mission to halt the bloodshed in Lebanon.

As President Reagan said in presenting the Medal of Freedom to him:

> His successful negotiation of the cease-fire in Lebanon and the resolution of the West Beirut crisis stands out as one of the unique feats of diplomacy in modern times.

Typical of his manner, Ambassador Habib responded by praising his talented deputy, Morris Draper, and Secretary of State George Shultz.

Yet, it was Phil Habib, the son of Lebanese parents, who almost singlehandedly was responsible for halting the war in Lebanon and enhancing the prospects for peace in the region.

As the Washington Post said so well this morning, "He had the imagination, toughness, and perseverance to see the game through."

Mr. Speaker, I know every Member joins me in extending congratulations to Phil Habib for his truly heroic work and in praying that the process he has begun will bring lasting peace to the Middle East.

THE LATE HONORABLE KEITH SEBELIUS OF KANSAS

(Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, it is with heavy heart that I address the House today because of the news of the death of my good friend, counselor, and the former colleague, the gentlemen from Kansas, the Honorable Keith G. Sebelius, from the First District of the great State of Kansas.

Even as I speak, his funeral, attended, by his family, by his Kansas colleagues in both the House and Senate as well as by other important officials of his State and region, and by many hundreds of other friends, is being held in Norton, his home town.

One of the saddest days since I became a Member of the Congress, was the day that I learned that Keith Sebelius was leaving the House for good after six terms of distinguished service and would not seek reelection in 1980.

From the moment that I came into the House back in 1974, I was advised to confer frequently with the gentleman from Kansas because he "always figured things out right." And I, and my colleagues, learned to have profound respect for his knowledge and for his judgment.

And from the beginning, he was my staunch and dependable friend—ever ready to back me up on the tough battles in committee and on the floor of the House. When campaign time came, he was always willing to leave his own election effort to travel to my district to help me—whenever I asked.

Keith Sebelius was a man of unshakable integrity. He had backbone. His convictions had stamina. His goals reflected the man and his district: To have a happy family; to leave agriculture better than he found it; and to see his country renewed in strength and leadership. Let us thank God for such men.

For his wife, Bette, and for his sons and their families, we realize the pain of his loss must be almost umbearable, because those of us who worked with him feel so bereft ourselves.

His legacy to us all is great, especially his astute and knowledgeable successor, my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. ROBERTS) who has assumed the Sebelius mantle with such skill and distinction.

We will never forget Keith Sebelius. We will miss him beyond measure.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my colleague in expressing our sympathy on the passing of our former colleague, Congressman Sebelius.

I have had the privilege of serving with him on the House Agriculture Committee as well as making some trips, one of them China, in our pursuit of expanded markets.

I share the expression of sorrow over his loss, and the fact of what a great American he was in serving the people and the Congress. It is a tremendous loss to his family as well as to the State of Kansas and the American people.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding. I would like to add that Keith Sebelius came to Congress 14 years ago as a freshman, the same year as I did. We were a small group and very close. Our class in Congress came to know Keith as a knowledgeable legislator and came to appreciate him as a true representative of his State and of agriculture.

I thank the gentlewoman.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add that it is my understanding that there will be a special order in tribute to Keith Sebelius early next week.

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED TO REPEAL WITHHOLDING OF TAXES ON INTEREST AND DIVIDENDS

(Mr. HAGEDORN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to repeal the withholding of taxes on interest and dividends. This legislation is a direct result of the outcry from my constituents over the past 2 weeks. More than any other issue, as I traveled my district, my constituents were outraged over the Government using their dollars as an interest-free loan.

I believe we need to give this issue time for debate and time for a separate vote. Two years ago this House overwhelmingly defeated withholding and just 2 weeks ago the vote on a separate rule was 220 to 210. I believe that vote is close enough to warrant a direct vote on the provision itself.

I urge you to cosponsor my repeal bill and join those of us who will not settle for a hastily drafted bill. With the correct reporting information, there is a taxpayer compliance rate of 96.7 percent. I think that is pretty darn good.

Is it fair to burden the banks and interest recipients with much more paperwork and regulation to get at that small percentage who do not comply? This proposal will cost $1 billion to implement and $1 billion to administer annually. Is this consistent with less Government interference?

Of the $4.3 billion this provision will raise, only $1.3 billion comes from increased compliance; $3 billion is an interest-free loan from the people to Uncle Sam. The people in my district are a little outraged and I can see why. Let us take the time to reconsider this ill-conceived provision and repeal it before it begins.

AN ALTERNATIVE TO MASS AMNESTY FOR ILLEGAL ALIENS

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, many of us have grave reservations over the Immigration Reform and Control Act as passed recently by the other body, and the House Judiciary Committee will shortly be considering its version of this legislation, H.R. 6514.

Today, I am introducting an alternative to the amnesty provision contained in H.R. 6514, in the form of a registry date amendment. Our proposal would simply amend existing law by updating current methods for granting legal status to certain types of deserving illegal immigrants, and allow permanent residence for illegal aliens who entered the country prior to January 1, 1973.

Should H.R. 6514 be brought to the floor of the House prior to consideration of our alternative, we will be prepared to offer our alternative as an amendment to H.R. 6514. I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this more reasonable alternative.

VOTERS NO LONGER HAVE BOLD FAITH IN REAGANOMICS

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Labor Day 1981 picnics were filled with bold faith that Ronald Reagan's promises to reduce wasteful Government spending, cut taxes, and balance the Federal budget would solve the Nation's economic problems. A year later, that bold faith in the ability of the President's economic policy has faded and has been replaced by a sense of betrayal.

An Arkansas farmer, dressed in threadbare overalls, told me the other day that it is hard to see through the pain, but "I can now tell that I was tricked by Reaganomics."

While rhetoric oftentimes rolls in Washington, actions speak louder than words in farm country.

(7) At 9:14 a.m. on Monday, August 30, 1982 and said to contain H.R. 6863, An Act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes, with the President's veto message of August 28, 1982, thereon.

(8) At 10:50 a.m. on Wednesday, September 1, 1982 and said to contain a message from the President whereby he transmits the Fiscal Year 1981 Annual Report of the Rehabilitation Services Administration.

(9) At 10:50 a.m. on Wednesday, September 1, 1982 and said to contain a message from the President whereby he transmits a report on agencies and units of agencies excluded from the Federal Merit Pay System.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely,

EDMUND L. HENSHAW, Jr.,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1982—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 97-231)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the Ur.ited States:

To the House of Representatives:

A week ago, the Congress passed important legislation to reduce deficits through tax reform. I worked hard to help win that passage—and at the same time stressed that if we are to keep deficits down we must also keep Federal spending down. We can only do this if the Congress resists the temptation to slide back into old spendthrift habits. I will use every means in my power, including the veto, to prevent that from happening.

Accordingly, today I am returning to the House of Representatives, without my signature, the bill H.R. 6863, making supplemental appropriations for Federal programs and agencies for fiscal year 1982.

I do not take this step lightly. Delay in the adoption of this legislation poses serious problems for the Department of Defense and other Federal agenices in meeting prior commitments, including payroll, that are funded by this bill. In addition, the bill contains funds for important new programs, such as the Caribbean Basin Initiative, for which funds are needed prior to the beginning of the next fiscal year.

But this bill would bust the budget by nearly a billion dollars. It provides an unacceptable total of $918 million in unrequested and unwarranted increases in domestic spending programs. We have seen a positive reaction to last week's Congressional action in the Nation's securities markets and other areas. It is founded in large measure on a growing conviction that this Government has finally developed the will to set its fiscal house in order. This legislation flies in the face of that conviction. Unless amended to restrict its scope to only those funds that are urgently needed, it will undermine the confidence crucial to continued reductions in deficits and interest rates which we must achieve for sustained economic growth.

Increases in domestic spending include $367 million in funding for items contained in the urgent supplemental I vetoed in June that were subsequently deleted from the urgent supplemental bill I signed in July. Also restored is $892 million in funding that was cut by the Congress last fall. This simply is not tolerable in the face of triple-digit deficits, and I cannot endorse these unwarranted spending increases.

While the enrolled bill includes $918 million in unrequested domestic increases, it provides only $0.5 billion of the $2.6 billion defense program supplementals I requested, a reduction of 82 percent. The enrolled bill fails to provide required funding in virtually every major defense program—military personnel (reduced 52 percent), operation and maintenance (reduced 93 percent), procurement (reduced 86 percent), and military construction (reduced 77 percent).

The bill also unnecessarily restricts the Executive Branch from exercising its authority to allocate funds appropriated by the Congress. Most notable among these are provisions that would:

—prevent the planned consolidation of the Office of the Inspector General into the Department of the Treasury and thereby block improvements in administrative effectiveness and efficiency;

—require the expenditure of $1.75 billion in unexpended balances in 1982 for the Section 8 housing program. The Administration would achieve similar purposes by using budget authority available from program deobligations, rather than new appropriations; —require the Department of Energy to maintain specified employment levels that are unnecessary for the effective management of the Department;

—require a minimum staffing level for the Railroad Retirement Board, blocking savings that could be achieved through improved management and administrative consolidation;

—direct 1982 Energy and Water funds be made available for a specific project (Tug Fork, West Virginia), that is expected to cost over $1 billion before it is completed; and —extend, through 1983, the restrictions on the President's ability to deal with the Polish debt problem.

For these reasons, I am returning H.R. 6863 without approval. I urge the Congress to enact immediately a 1982 supplemental appropriations bill that does not contain excessive and unwarranted spending increases for domestic programs and that provides an acceptable balance of supplemental funding for those programs requiring additional money in fiscal year 1982.

Certain important provisions of the bill must be preserved, notably funding for the Caribbean Basin Initiative. This funding is designed to resolve an unprecedented economic crisis that affects a strategic region located at our doorstep. I hope the Congress will review and modify country funding levels to bring them closer in line with the Administration's original request. The Congress has also provided $50 million for special Lebanon emergency relief. This humanitarian assistance is essential for thousands of Lebanese civilians requiring aid. The funds provided for security assistance, while less than I requested, will help demonstrate that countries in pivotal regions of the world can count on American support when they need it. I strongly urge the Congress to continue to include these essential programs as they work on an acceptable alternative.

To bring the sustained recovery we all want we must not only rewrite this measure; we must also press forward in an all-out attack on wasteful and unnecessary spending. I look forward to prompt Congressional action on a revised bill that will assure continuity in the operations of Federal agencies and be consistent with continued progress toward economic recovery.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 28, 1982.

□ 1330

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message and bill will be printed as a House document.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the veto message of the President on the bill (H.R. 6863) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, be postponed until tomorrow, Thursday, September 9, 1982.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

VIRGIN ISLANDS NONIMMIGRANT ALIEN ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1981

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3517) to authorize the granting of permanent residence status to certain nonimmigrant aliens residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 7, line 2, strike out "States." and insert "States other than for employment as an entertainer or as an athlete and for a period not exceeding forty-five days.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not have any intention to object, but I make this reservation in order to give an opportunity to the subcommittee chairman to explain to the House the nature of the Senate amendment that was added to our bill.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to thank him publicly for his support in reaching today's events and the passage of the bill.

Essentially, as the gentleman knows, the bill regularizes the status of certain (H)(ii) temporary workers who came into the Virgin Islands around the time of the Second World War to make up for labor shortages. As part of the bill that we passed from the House, we suggested that there be a termination of the (H)(ii) program by which other temporary laboring people can come into the Virgin Islands.

It came to the attention of the Senate that that language would inadvertently bar from entering into the Virgin Islands temporary workers, for example, such as athletes and musicians. Of course, the Virgin Islands has a very lively tourist industry, and both of those are very important elements, so the Senate amendment which we are asking permission today for the House to adopt is simply to permit the short-term admission into the U.S. Virgin Islands of persons such as athletes and entertainers who would otherwise be barred by the House-passed bill.

The amendment conforms to the intent of the legislation, as the gentleman, who is a codraftsman of the bill, knows, the primary purpose of which is to prohibit the future admission into the U.S. Virgin Islands of large numbers of temporary agricultural or industrial workers but, again, not those workers or persons, for example, who are in the entertainment field or in athletics.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. MAZZOLI).

Does the Delegate from the Virgin Islands (Mr. DE LUGO) wish me to yield to him?

Mr. DE LUGO. Yes; I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from the Virgin Islands.

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very historic moment for the people of the U.S. Virgin Islands. The House of Representatives is about to take the final step in passing H.R. 3517, the Nonimmigrant Alien Adjustment Act. Years of work and development have gone into this bill and the hopes and aspirations of many people are riding on its passage. Many of these people who were invited into the U.S. Virgin Islands to assist us during the boom years of our development have been living as long as 20 years under the shadow of deportation. They have laid their roots there, and have become active and responsible members of our community. This bill will end their legal limbo and allow them to plan their future with dignity and assurance.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill on May 12, 1981, and in its travels through the various House and Senate subcommittees and committees it has not received a single opposing vote. This legislation was passed by the House last fall with no opposing votes and on August 20 the Senate was unanimous in its passage and even willingly waived its rules to expedite this measure to the benefit of the people of the Virgin Islands.

However, its smooth passage through this Congress does not mean the waters were always calm for this legislation. On the contrary, stormy and frequently bitter debates rose up in our islands. I know from the 10 years I have been working on this that it was in fact one of the most divisive issues in our history. And many times during those years I was frequently the only political figure trying to tackle this issue. As little as a few months before this bill was introduced the storm was still raging. But, with the assistance of Gov. Juan Luis, a compromise solution was finally reached. It is reflected in the legislation before you, but it was not without pain, not without sacrifice, and not without years of development and debate.

The people of the Virgin Islands should be proud today, for this bill is an honorable and equitable solution to a very difficult and long-standing problem. It tugged at their conscience. They wrestled with it publicly and privately. And, in the end reached this compromise solution which is uniquely ours—a product of our community for our community. Credit must be given to them, and to the Governor of the Virgin Islands who worked with me in the development of this legislation, and to the people of the alien community for their patience, cooperation, and genuine concern for the community as a whole, and to the legislature for finally recognizing the community's support and passing a resolution in support of the bill.

All that remains today, Mr. Speaker, is for this House to concur with an amendment adopted by the Senate Immigration Subcommittee at my request which will allow athletes and entertainers to continue to enter the U.S. Virgin Lslands under temporary visas. I urge my colleagues to concur on this, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank my colleagues in the House for their support, and Senator ALAN SIMPSON, the chairman of the Senate Immigration Subcommittee, for all his support and assistance, Senators DENNIS DECONCINI, TED KENNEDY, and Congressman HAMILTON FISH, and most especially, the chairman of the House Immigration Subcommittee, and my friend, Congressman RON MAZZOLI, whose unfailing commitment on this bill, and whose sympathy and concern for all the people of the U.S. Virgin Islands, have without a doubt been a major factor in this success.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the minority has no objection to the Senate amendment or to concurring therein, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESOURCE CONSERVATION AND RECOVERY ACT REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1982

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 545 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 545

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order, sections 402(a) and 401(b)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) to the contrary notwithstanding, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6307) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1983 and 1984, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of section 401(b)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation to said substitute now printed in boldface roman in the bill, it shall be in order to consider amendments to said substitute printed in the Congressional Record of August 3, 1982, by, and if offered by, Representative Roe of New Jersey. It shall also be in order to consider an amendment to said substitute printed in the Congressional Record of August 2, 1982, and if offered by, Representative Fithian of Indiana, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule XVI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MOAKLEY) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. QUILLEN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 545 is the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 6307, to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1983-84, and for other purposes.

This is an open rule. It provides 1 hour of general debate, 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. It makes in order consideration of the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule, and it also waives section 401(b)(1) against said substitute.

Section 401(b)(1) bars consideration of legislation which provides new entitlement authority to become effective before the beginning of the next fiscal year. The committee substitute provides new entitlement authority in the form of salaries to be paid to members of the National Groundwater Commission.

Mr. Speaker, I am advised, however, that the Committee on Energy and Commerce intends to offer an amendment which will change the entitlement authority into an authorization subject to an appropriations, thereby curing the violation and making the waiver technical in nature.

In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation now printed in the Energy and Commerce Committee substitute, the rule makes it in order to consider amendments to the substitute which are printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 3, by, and if offered by, Representative ROE of New Jersey.

An amendment to the substitute printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 2, by, and if offered by, Representative FITHIAN of Indiana, is also in order and points of order against the amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule 16 which prohibits the consideration of nongermane amendments are waived. Mr. FITHIAN's amendment pertains to hazardous waste facilities owned by States or political subdivisions.

Finally, the rule provides one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6307 reauthorizes and amends the principal law governing the disposal of solid and hazardous wastes, the Solid Waste Disposal Act enacted in 1976, in order to assure adequate protection of public health and the environment. The bill authorizes $108.5 million for fiscal year 1983 and $111.5 million for fiscal year 1984. The bill also amends the act to set deadlines for issuance of permits for the coverage of the waste and creates a National Groundwater Commission.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6307 addresses several important and somewhat controversial issues regarding the disposal and management of hazardous wastes. I urge my colleagues to adopt this open rule, House Resolution 545, so that the House may proceed to debate and consider these important issues.

□ 1345

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, the rule has been ably explained; it is an open rule.

We need to get down to the business of discussing the measure on the floor of the House. There are controversial sections in this bill. There will be amendments offered which will be hotly debated. But it is time for action.

H.R. 6307 needs to be considered. The rule needs to be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6307) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1983-84, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 6307, with Mr. MOAKLEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) will be recognized for 15 minutes, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT) will be recognized for 15 minutes, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROE) will be recognized for 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT) will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlemen from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) was originally enacted in 1976 in response to the need for protection of public health and the environment from uncontrolled hazardous waste management practices.

In 1980, Congress established the Superfund program to initiate and fund the cleanup of thousands of inactive hazardous waste sites that were created by the uncontrolled waste management practices of the past. Together with the Superfund program, RCRA is intended to provide comprehensive prevention and cleanup of hazardous waste damage incidents.

In examining the operation of the RCRA program and its relationship to the Superfund and other environmental statutes, the committee discovered that the relationship is anything but complementary. In fact, the committee uncovered several major loopholes in RCRA coverage which allow as much hazardous waste to escape regulation as is presently covered by RCRA controls—40 million tons.

These loopholes have several damaging effects:

First, they cause substantial gaps in protection of public health and the environment;

Second, they compromise the occupational health of works in the waste management and related fields; and

Third, they create direct disincentives to investment in alternative treatment and ultimate disposal technologies. Without the necessary controls in place, the hazardous waste marketplace will never function in a way that is consistent with protection of health and the environment.

In this regard, I reference three recent reports:

First, Review of Activities of Major Firms in the Commercial Hazardous Waste Industry: 1981 Update, prepared for the EPA; and,

Second, Comparative Evaluation of Incinerators and Landfills for Hazardous Waste Management, prepared for the Chemical Manufacturers Association; and Third, Impact of Burning of Hazardous Waste in Boilers, prepared for SCA Services, Inc.

I would like to insert into the RECORD recent letters from SCA Services, Inc., Stablex Corporation, and the Hazardous Waste Treatment Council; firms and associations that have been at the forefront of the hazardous waste treatment field.

SCA SERVICES, INC.,
Boston, Mass, September 3, 1982.

Hon. JAMES J. FLORIO,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism, House Office Building, Annex II, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to endorse H.R. 6307, the "RCRA Reauthorization Act of 1982", and the amendments you will offer to it.

SCA Services, Inc. is the nation's technological leader in the recovery, treatment and disposal of hazardous wastes. These services are provided from waste processing centers in six states, with two additional facilities planned. SCA also provides solid waste services from 79 operating centers in 28 states and the District of Columbia.

EPA now allows significant amounts of hazardous wastes to be exempt from RCRA regulation. In particular, a facility is exempt if it burns hazardous wastes from the "primary purpose" of energy recovery. The public is exposed by this exemption to 1.2 million metric tons of hazardous pollutants emitted from unpermitted boilers burninig hazardous wastes. SCA's permitted incinerator will be 300 times more efficient in the destruction of hazardous wastes than uncontrolled commercial and residential boilers. H.R. 6307 will close this loophole. Your labeling amendment will also assure the end to the unknowing burning of hazardous wastes.

H.R. 6307, and the Florio amendments, also provide a reasonable and workable balance between the very real environmental and safety dangers posed by the present small quantity generator exemption and the legitimate concerns of small business. SCA speaks with experience of the problems posed by the present exemption. An SCA transfer station caught fire, sending a dozen people to the hospital, because of laboratory hazardous wastes dumped with the regular garbage by a school that had a small quantity generator exemption. SCA strongly opposes the Gramm Amendment to "study" the issue. Keeping the status quo allows a generator to dispose of 12 tons of hazardous wastes a year into sanitary landfills. The Gramm Amendment should be defeated.

SCA has made a major commitment in high technology hazardous waste treatment and to the future of the RCRA program. Enactment of H.R. 6307 and the Florio amendments will show that Congress is willing to keep its commitment to protect human health and the environment, and to foster the economic health of companies like SCA committed to protecting the environment.

Sincerely,

JOHN T. FOX,
Chairman of the Board.

STABLEX CORPORATION,
Radnor, Pa., August 20, 1982

Hon. JAMES J. FLORIO,
Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. FLORIO: As Congress again takes up issues relating to hazardous wastes, I want to bring one crucial fact to the attention of all members of Congress. Since the passage of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act in 1976, there have been no new advanced hazardous waste treatment and disposal facilities constructed and placed in operation in accordance with the detailed environmental protection guidelines developed in Congress. Companies engaged in high-technology solutions to the hazardous waste problem, such as Stablex Corporation, have spent millions of dollars to locate suitable sites, obtain federal, state, and local permits, and prepare for the construction and operation of the modern type-facilities Congress sought when it passed the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. While the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act has, at last, finally resulted in a more complete regulatory program to halt some of the more outrageous dumping practices in the past, it has failed to formulate a policy and a direction to allow companies using their own funds to develop and institute modern technological solutions to treatment and disposal of toxic and hazardous waste.

Let us work together to halt the old practices and procedures that for too long have poisoned our environment. Let us work together to consider how to set the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act back on its original and true course to stimulate the construction and operation of new advanced waste treatment plants which can permanently eliminate the threat of chemicals leaching from landfills.

Sincerely yours,

STEVEN I. TAUB,
Vice President.

HAZARDOUS WASTE TREATMENT COUNCIL,
Washington, D.C. September 6, 1982.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We represent the Hazardous Waste Treatment Council, a trade association of companies engaged in the treatment, destruction, stabilization, recycling and detoxification of hazardous wastes. A basic objective of the Council is the development of more stringent laws on the management of hazardous waste. The Council lead a coalition of environmental organizations, states and grass-roots citizen groups earlier this year to successfully reverse EPA's suspension of the liquid-to-landfill ban.

The Council urges you to support the amendment being offered by Representative LaFalce to H.R. 6307—an amendment which would require EPA to begin restricting certain hazardous wastes from being landfilled. The philosophy of the amendment recognizes that some very persistent toxic wastes present problems for safe long-term containment in a landfill. Some waste destroy the liners which are designed to contain wastes and others are simply too toxic and persistent to be contained in perpetuity.

Several states have moved aggressively to restrict certain wastes from landfills and the Council believes that protection of public health and the environment mandate a uniform federal rule in this regard.

The amendment would require EPA to begin the process of determining which wastes need to be so restricted. We believe that this effort is long overdue. Every week the newspapers carry new stories of landfills that have developed problems of groundwater contamination. Prevention of further problems requires that Congress act favorably on this important amendment.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE C. MERTHAN,
MARVIN B. DURNING,
RANDY M. MOTT,
SCOTT J. SCHWARZ,
Attorneys for the Hazardous Waste Treatment Council.

Furthermore, unless these loopholes are closed, the RCRA program itself and the hazardous wastes it is supposed to control will be doing little more than sowing the seeds of future Superfund sites.

The present RCRA system allows wastes to escape controls through a varity of gaps:

Generators of up to 1 ton of hazardous wastes per month are virtually exempt from RCRA coverage and may dispose of their wastes into solid waste facilities and municipal dumps—a practice which has produced the majority of our present Superfund sites.

I would like to point out that the National Solid Waste Management Association has attempted to close this serious loophole ever since its inception in 1980, and should be commended for this effort.

There are virtually no categorical restrictions on the placement of wastes into domestic sewer systems, or their injection into the ground near areas that supply drinking water.

Hazardous waste recycling, including the burning of hazardous wastes in boilers, has been virtually ignored by RCRA despite the fact that 13 recycling operations are on the Superfund list and 20 million tons of waste are inefficiently burned in boilers each year.

The placement of liquid wastes into landfills must be further restricted.

The legislation addresses all of those loopholes by prescribing the appropriate restriction, prohibition, or assessment. In addition, the legislation:

Insures that the final permitting review of major hazardous waste facilities occurs in an expeditious fashion and that leaking facilities not be granted a final permit until there is some form of commitment to control the release;

Protects the right of citizens and States to seek redress for hazardous waste damages and releases under the existing common law;

Establishes a National Groundwater Commission to report to the Congress on the nature and scope of present and future groundwater pollution and to issue recommendations on direction of the future policy; and

The bill also provides a generous authorization under sections 3011 and 3012 for State hazardous waste programs, which are vital to a sound RCRA program. Equally important to the RCRA program operation and oversight are State hazardous waste management associations. In the RCRA area, this group is the Association of State and Territorial Solid Waste Management Officials (ASTSWMO). ASTSWMO has greatly contributed to the Congress understanding of State RCRA programs and always with an emphasis on professionalism and thoroughness. I for one, speaking for the committee, believe it would be both appropriate and highly beneficial to fund ASTSWMO directly from the 3011 State grants authorization.

This legislation has been drafted through bipartisan cooperation with my distinguished colleague from New York (Mr. LENT) and his staff.

Since adoption of H.R. 6307 by the Energy and Commerce Committee, a number of concerns have been raised regarding several provisions of the bill. Mr. LENT and I have developed a substitute amendment which amends several of the bill's provisions in a manner consistent with the legitimate concerns that have been voiced. Specifically, the bill changes the present small generator exemption by explicitly modifying all of the administrative and managerial requirements prior to disposal, while maintaining the requirement that hazardous wastes must go to a hazardous waste facility when being treated or disposed of not to sanitary landfill municipal dumps.

The substitute bill reflects a shared consenus regarding the necessary measures for protection of public health and the need to accommodate the legitimate concerns of the regulated community. I strongly urge all of my colleagues to support H.R. 6307 and to oppose all amendments that would continue these loopholes.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, today the committee has under consideration H.R. 6307, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Amendments of 1982. This bill makes a number of important and necessary changes to RCRA, the law which governs the disposal of hazardous waste in this country. However, as reported from committee, H.R. 6307 was not, in my opinion, an acceptable bill. The minority views in the committee report reflected a number of my concerns with H.R. 6307 as reported.

Since that time, I have been working with my distinguished colleague from New Jersey, Subcommittee Chairman FLORIO, to make what I consider are necessary changes to H.R. 6307. I would indicate to my colleagues that Mr. FLORIO and I have been able to agree on several changes to H.R. 6307 which will be offered today as part of an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 6307. This amendment retains the beneficial provisions of H.R. 6307 while incorporating several desirable modifications to a number of other provisions of that measure. Unfortunately, we were unable to agree to delete section 10 of the bill relating to Federal common law remedies.

Before addressing some of the specifics of our substitute amendment, I would like to take a moment to commend the chairman of the subcommittee for his leadership in this area. The safe disposal of toxic waste should be one of this Nation's primary goals and the gentleman from New Jersey has done yeoman's duty to insure that this goal is met. I would also express my appreciation for the spirit of cooperation that Mr. FLORIO and his staff have exhibited in working out many of the troublesome provisions of H.R. 6307. I also want to commend my colleagues, Mr. ROE and Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT for their contribution as well. I believe that the substitute that will be before this committee today is far superior to our original committee bill. If it is adopted along with a number of other meritorious amendments to be offered today, such as an amendment to strike section 10, I believe the Members of this body will have produced a well-considered and much-needed environmental measure.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to take a moment to highlight what I consider to be several of the more important provisions of the amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 6307 which will be offered shortly.

Section 3 of the substitute brings into the RCRA regulatory system for the first time a large number of small generators of hazardous waste. These small generators previously had been exempted from RCRA so the EPA could concentrate on regulating the larger generators which are producing the lion's share of hazardous waste in this country. Now that EPA has completed the regulations implementing RCRA, I am hopeful that the agency will have sufficient resources to adequately regulate these small generators. In addition, since compliance with RCRA will impose additional costs on these small businesses, I am pleased to point out that the substitute makes provision for regulatory variances for those businesses. For instance, section 3 of the substitute makes it clear that all the complicated RCRA testing procedures do not have to be followed by the small generators—identification of wastes to the level of process involved will be sufficient to satisfy the RCRA requirements. This variance provision will substantially lessen the financial and regulatory impacts of RCRA on small generators.

Another extremely important provision of the substitute is section 6. That section calls for a two-step approach to regulating the burning and blending of hazardous wastes as fuel, it is badly needed because the burning of hazardous wastes for purposes of energy recovery is totally exempt from RCRA regulation at this time. Even though energy recovery is a laudable goal and should be an important national priority, it should not, in my opinion, be achieved at the expense of our national health and environmental goals. Therefore, section 6 performs an important service in requiring notification to EPA by those who produce, distribute, and burn hazardous waste fuel. EPA is then required to regulate those production, distribution, and burning practices which are determined to be harmful to public health and the environment. Once these practices are regulated, a major gap in the RCRA regulatory program will be closed.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to monopolize the time the minority has available on this measure but suffice it to say that sections 3 and 6 are only two of many worthwhile RCRA amendments contained in the substitute to be offered shortly. I believe it is our obligation as Members of Congress to support legislation which contributes to the long-term environmental well-being of our country. Today we are being given an opportunity to fulfill that obligation—I believe each of us should seize this opportunity and vote in favor of the bipartisan substitute.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to join with our colleagues today and particularly pay my deepest respect in regard to our chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO), the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT) and also the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT), and strongly support H.R. 6307, to which I know there will be an amendment in the nature of a substitute which will incorporate the amendments in the nature of a substitute of the Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Public Works Committee to sections 4 and 9. In my judgment, I think it is an extremely important environmental bill. As background, Mr. Chairman, this bill, after being reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce, was sequentially referred to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation for consideration of section 4 and section 9. These sections direct a study by EPA of mixtures of sewage and hazardous wastes and establish a National Groundwater Commission to study and report on our ground water resources.

I might say at this point, Mr. Chairman, that the ground water of our Nation has been really neglected over the years in most of our legislation. I think that this bill is a monumental step forward in bringing into clear focus the policy developments that the Congress chooses to make to protect our ground water drinking water supply.

Our committee amended each of these provisions and our amendments will be incorporated in the substitute.

Section 4 directs the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to submit a report to Congress on mixtures of sewage and hazardous wastes. These mixtures are presently regulated under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act. EPA would be directed to include recommendations as to whether regulations of these mixtures would be better accomplished under the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

The amendment to section 4 deletes the reference to the Solid Waste Disposal Act and calls, rather, for recommendations on whether existing law applicable to such mixtures is adequate to protect human health and environment.

The Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Committee on Public Works now has under review the pretreatment requirements under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act which relate directly to this amendment.

Section 9 of H.R. 6307 establishes a National Groundwater Commission composed of four Members of the House, four from the Senate, four appointed by the President from lists submitted by various groups and the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment.

The commission is charged with assessing a number of problems associated with contamination of ground water from hazardous wastes, together with that contamination coming from possible solid waste disposal, with a report to be submitted to Congress by October 30, 1986. The amendment to section 9 expands the scope of the study, Mr. Chairman, to include other aspects of the subject of ground water, including a general assessment of the amount, location and quality of the Nation's ground water resources; a general identification of the sources, extent and types of ground water contamination; an assessment of the relationship between surface water pollution and ground water pollution; an assessment of the extent of overdrafting of ground water resources and the adequacy of existing mechanisms for preventing such overdrafting; an assessment of the engineering and technological capability to recharge aquifers; an assessment of the methods for abatement of ground water contamination and a comparison of cleanup costs to the costs of substitute water supply methods; an assessment of the adequacy of existing standards for ground water quality under State and Federal law; an assessment of Federal and State monitoring methodology; an assessment of the adequacy of existing ground water research; and, finally, an assessment of the Federal, State, and local roles in managing ground water quality and quantity.

The amendment also changes the membership of the commission, as I previously mentioned. Of the four House Members, two would be from the Energy and Commerce, and two from Public Works and Transportation. Eight Members would be appointed by the President, four from a list submitted by the National Governors Association, and four from lists submitted by other organizations and groups.

The commission would be directed to utilize on a reimbursable basis personnel from the U.S. Geological Survey and from the Corps of Engineers.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the date for submission of the report to Congress would be changed from October 30, 1986, to October 30, 1985, and the amount authorized to be appropriated for this indepth Commission review and study of the Nation's groundwaters will be $7 million.

The substitute includes an additional provision directing the Groundwater Commission to submit a separate preliminary study to Congress concerning ground-water contamination from solid and hazardous waste, and this study would be submitted within 1 year as an exigency to deal with this vitally important measure, as was mentioned by the subcommittee chairman (Mr. FLORIO).

In addition, the final conclusions and findings of this study would be incorporated in the Commission's report as a separate chapter.

May I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by complimenting the distinguished gentleman, my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO), in having joined his subcommittee with our subcommittee in the two major elements of our concern and responsibility in this legislation, and also particularly compliment him on the joint work we did in the State of New Jersey—if our other colleagues will pardon us that provincial observation—coming out of the joint hearings we held in the county of Morris in the State of New Jersey, particularly Rockaway Borough, relating to solid waste and hazardous waste disposal in so-called dumps and land disposal of that nature, which brought forth many of the problems that our Nation is faced with in this vitally important issue.

Take into consideration, my colleagues, that 50 percent of the drinking water supply of this country is groundwater supply affecting the very life and health and safety of the people of our Nation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to associate myself with those remarks just made by our very able Chairman of the Water Resources Subcommittee, Mr. ROE of New Jersey.

Mr. Chairman, there are two provisions of H.R. 6307, As reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce, which involve matters under the jurisdiction of the Public Works Committee. These two provisions relate to regulation of hazardous substances in publicly owned treatment works and creation of a national groundwater commission. The two committees have resolved their differences with respect to these two provisions, and I rise in support of this compromise on sections 4 and 9 of the bill.

Others have explained the process whereby H.R. 6307 was sequentially referred to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. They have also summarized the provisions of the different versions reported by the two committees reporting this legislation.

I would like to emphasize just a few matters in my statement.

First, I would like to recognize and thank the leadership Chairman FLORIO and Mr. LENT of the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee and their staff for their willing cooperation in fashioning the compromise language that reconciles the differences in sections 4 and 9 between the bills reported by the two committees.

Second, the Public Works Committee received sequential referral of H.R. 6307 only for consideration of section 4 (dealing with publicly owned treatment works) and section 9 (dealing with the Groundwater Commission). In testimony received on the bill during the Water Resources Subcommittee's hearings, concerns were raised with respect to other sections but the committee limited its amendments only to those areas covered by the sequential referral. Two of the concerns expressed include the small generator provision and the Federal common law provision. The committee discusses these concerns in its committee report. Regarding section 3, the small generator provision, there was concern expressed that reducing the exemption for small generators from 1,000 to 100 kilograms per month would add significantly to the number of those people regulated without substantial benefit in control of hazardous wastes. Section 10 might, according to those testifying, subject those who are in full compliance with the act to additional undefined Federal liabilities and be an invitation to plaintiffs to reverse legitimate administrative determinations.

Third, Mr. Chairman, the Public Works Committee amendments to sections 4 and 9 of the bill reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee were designed to improve those provisions while maintaining the basic thrust and intent of the Energy and Commerce Committee. Our amendment to section 4 maintains the Clean Water Act focus of EPA's pretreatment study and calls for the results of the study in 1 year rather than 2 years. The shorter time frame is appropriate because much work has already been done and data collected concerning EPA's pretreatment program and because the 1-year period will better dovetail with future congressional legislative schedules. Our amendment to section 9 expands the scope of the Groundwater Commission's duties to deal with ground-water contamination of all types, not just that associated with hazardous waste, and to make a number of other changes to the structure and charter of the Commission. The compromise that has been agreed to by the two committees is identical to the Public Works Committee amendments, except that an additional paragraph has been added to subsection 9(f) of the bill calling for EPA to submit after 1 year a preliminary study concerning ground-water contamination from hazardous and other solid waste.

Finally, I think it is important to note that the amendments to section 4 and 9 of H.R. 6307 which were approved by the Public Works Committee were unanimously adopted by voice vote, with obvious support from both sides of the aisle.

In summary, then, I believe that sections 4 and 9 of H.R. 6307 are improved by actions taken in the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and I urge my colleagues to support these provisions.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished ranking minority member of the full committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. CLAUSEN).

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be able to join my colleagues in support of the compromise version of H.R. 6307's provisions relating to hazardous wastes entering publicly owned treatment works and formation of a National Groundwater Commission.

Our Committee on Public Works and Transportation received sequential referral of H.R. 6307 to consider sections 4 and 9 of the bill reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee. Section 4 required EPA to submit a report to Congress within 2 years of enactment, addressing whether hazardous wastes exempted from Solid Waste Disposal Act control when discharged to a sewer should be regulated under the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Section 9 established a 13-member National Groundwater Commission to conduct a 4-year study of ground water contamination by hazardous wastes and to report to Congress with recommendations for appropriate legislative and administrative actions.

The amendment reported by the Public Works Committee refined the study authorization contained in section 4, restructured the National Groundwater Commission authorized in section 9, and expanded the scope of the Commission's responsibilities. The 2-year section 4 study was shortened to 1 year, with a progress report due in 6 months, and the Solid Waste Disposal Act orientation of the study was broadened to an evaluation of adequacy of existing law generally.

Section 9's ground water commission charter was amended to call for an examination of all types of ground water contamination rather than just that resulting from hazardous wastes. In addition, the due date for the report was advanced from 1986 to 1985, the authorized funding reduced from $10 million to $7 million, a requirement added that the Chairman of the Commission will be selected from among the House-appointed Commission members, and a number of other changes made to improve the organization and effectiveness of the Commission.

After a number of discussions, the Public Works and Energy Committees have reached a consensus position concerning these provisions. Essentially, this compromise version is identical to the language reported by the Public Works Committee with the addition of a new requirement that the Commission submit an interim report within 1 year focusing on the narrower issue of ground water contamination resulting from hazardous wastes.

Mr. Chairman, I am persuaded that these two provisions will be valuable additions to our national effort to address the problems associated with safeguarding the quality of our ground water supplies and disposing of hazardous wastes in a safe and environmentally sound fashion.

Protecting our ground water is a matter of very special priority. Twenty-five percent of the fresh water used for all purposes in this country comes from ground water. Fifty percent of our population relies on ground water as its primary source of drinking water.

Despite these facts, it is only recently that we have begun to realize how remiss we have been in understanding and protecting this invaluable natural resource. The General Accounting Office reports that, in 25 States, private and public water supply wells have been capped as a result of contamination. Over 200 wells in California have been contaminated by toxic wastes. On Long Island, N.Y., where 100 percent of the population depends on ground water, 36 public water supplies and dozens of private wells have been closed because of contamination. The water supplies for nearly 2 million residents have been affected. Just this year, it was reported that contamination was only 900 feet from the well field that supplies Atlantic City, N.J.

These are just a few examples that illustrate how important our ground water supplies are and how necessary it is that we direct more national attention and resources to protecting this special national resource. Establishment of this ground water commission will significantly assist us in these efforts, and I complement the two committees for recognizing this fact and bringing this important legislation to the floor this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I commend these provisions to the attention of my colleagues here today and I urge you to join me in supporting their enactment.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Ms. MIKULSKI), a very valuable member of our subcommittee.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act deals with one of the most serious health hazards facing this Nation, the hazard of toxic waste. It is a problem that knows no boundaries. It affects every person, every home, every farm and every neighborhood in this country. It is insidious and deadly.

The legislation we are asked to vote for today, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act is the most important vehicle, the most critical tool we have to deal with hazardous waste—to contain its creeping power. RCRA, is the most effective shield we have to help protect our communities and our citizens.

Earlier this year I held extensive hearings on hazardous waste in my district. And I would like to take this opportunity to thank the chairman for allowing me to hold those hearings. They were invaluable.

As the hours went by I heard horror story after horror story about toxic and hazardous waste, not only in my community, but in communities throughout the State, and throughout the country.

I learned two very important facts from those hearings. First, I learned that the law must be enforced, that it must be enforced fairly and equitably, and that there must be some control over those who enforce it.

Second, I learned that there is no vehicle now for citizens to find redress for their grievances. I found that people were being treated as if they were the problem, when the problem was the poison of hazardous waste.

RCRA took important steps to tighten up loopholes that allowed improper disposal of toxic waste. We must pass and support funding for the legislation as our pledge toward a poison-free community.

What we are talking about in this legislation is the right of human beings to live without the fear of disease of impairment by chemical poisoning. We are talking about the responsibility of Government to protect its citizens, and we are talking about the ability of the Government to respond to the people—the people who have heard the warning of Rachel Carson, and who do not want to face a silent spring, or poisoned neighborhood.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL).

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey, who is the author of this legislation and the chairman of the subcommittee from which it is reported, a few questions concerning the so-called small generator exemption now found in the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. It is my understanding that facilities generating less than 1,000 kilograms per month of hazardous wastes currently are exempt from most RCRA regulation and may dispose of their wastes at sanitary landfills. Section 3 of H.R. 6307 would lower the threshold to 100 kilograms per month.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEDELL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. That is correct. Section 3 also provides, though, that the EPA may establish a different set of standards for generators in the 100- to 1,000-kilogram range than they have for those who produce more than 1,000 kilograms.

Mr. BEDELL. Those of us who serve on the Small Business Committee have advocated two-tier regulations for some time now, and that distinction in your legislation is welcome.

I also commend the gentleman for his floor amendment to clarify the present two-tiered nature of the small quantity generator provision by modifying the managerial and administrative requirements imposed on such generators prior to the actual disposal or treatment of the waste.

However, I still am troubled by the large number of small businesses that could be brought under RCRA's provisions who are now substantially exempt.

Clearly, there are certain hazardous substances that cannot be overlooked, no matter how small a quantity we are talking about. But there are other materials, which when properly recovered and recycled, do not endanger public health or the environment.

In particular, I am concerned about the tens of thousands of service stations where waste oil, used car batteries, and various solvents are collected. As the gentleman knows, the Small Business Subcommittee on Energy, Environment and Safety, which I chair, has been deeply involved in both motor fuel marketing issues and used motor oil recovery.

We have found that waste oil, in particular, has become an increasingly valuable commodity. Gasoline dealers, car care centers, and others are being paid up to 30 cents per gallon for the waste oil they collect. Similarly, there is a lucrative market for used batteries and solvents.

Mr. FLORIO. The gentleman is correct. Used motor oil is a recyclable product and this committee has sought to encourage the recovery of this resource through enactment of the Used Oil Recycling Act of 1980. We are disappointed that the Environmental Protection Agency has not yet issued regulations covering the recycling of waste oil. Section 3012 of RCRA mandates that such regulations should be promulgated promptly. I would also point out that it is the purpose of H.R. 6307 to serve as an additional impetus in this regard by bringing the appropriate incentives and control to this segment of the waste stream.

If I may digress, it should be noted that the gentleman from Iowa and his subcommittee have been very helpful in bringing the public's attention to the fact the EPA has not acted yet on this important matter. The Small Business Committee has correctly pointed out that EPA's failure in this regard has impeded development of the used oil recycling industry.

Mr. BEDELL. I thank the gentleman for his kind comments.

In regards to H.R. 6307, is it the gentleman's understanding that service stations which collect used motor oil would be considered hazardous waste storage facilities?

Mr. FLORIO. It is certainly not the committee's intention to categorically require that service stations become permitted hazardous waste storage facilities under RCRA, particularly when waste oil is the sole or primary component of their waste stream and when such material is properly recycled. Nor is it the committee's intent to categorically exempt all service stations from storage requirements irrespective of the nature and quantity of the waste stream and the manner of waste management. This will depend upon how much of what type of waste is generated, and upon the ultimate disposition of the waste material.

One of the RCRA's basic purposes is to insure that all forms of hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal are controlled as may be necessary to protect public health and the environment. It is the intent of this amendment to stem the disposal of hazardous wastes into solid waste landfills, a practice which has contributed to unparalleled environmental harm. In light of these concerns, and given the general nature of operations at service stations, however, the committee does not intend or expect that such facilities will be substantially affected for the following reasons.

First, waste oil is covered by the Used Oil Recycling Act of 1980 which directs the EPA to develop regulations that create incentives for used oil recycling. While some waste oil may ultimately be determined to be a hazardous waste, it is expected that the Agency will take into account the nature of the waste oil management practice and the need to encourage such recycling when implementing any waste oil standards.

Second, under current EPA regulations, car batteries are not included even in the 1,000 kilogram-month count, and would not be subject to regulations, or included in the monthly generator count prior to recycling. The committee believes this approach to be appropriate.

Third, with specific reference to potential permitting for hazardous waste storage at service stations and other previously exempt generators, the committee has included specific statutory language which allows the Agency to accommodate the particular storage needs of such facilities, where appropriate, including extension of the current 90-day limit.

And fourth, the committee has also clarified the recycling provision of the legislation such that certain recycling practices may not be regarded as hazardous waste management, or need not be subject to regulation where the Agency determines that such a distinction is appropriate and will not endanger public health and the environment. Recycling of hazardous wastes under RCRA, however, connotes much more than oil recycling. The use of hazardous wastes as landfill covers and the air emissions of hazardous wastes through boilers also constitute waste recycling. Such practices must be subject to the same health and environmental standard as all other forms of hazardous waste management.

In summary, used oil collected by service stations which is properly recycled, is not intended to be subject to substantial additional requirements under RCRA. However, if this same material or other hazardous waste generated by such facilities is discarded rather than recycled, the amendments should not be construed to allow the disposal of such wastes by generators of more than 100 kilograms per month to occur at facilities other than subtitle C hazardous waste facilities.

Mr. BEDELL. In fact, in many areas, including my home State of Iowa, service stations have actually added to the cleanup of environment by serving as collection points where do-it-yourselfers can bring in waste oil for proper disposal.

Mr. FLORIO. That is correct. This is an activity that is beneficial to all parties concerned.

Mr. BEDELL. RCRA requires those who generate hazardous wastes to keep various records regarding its disposal. If waste oil becomes listed as a hazardous waste, this could impose a significant burden on service station operators. They frequently sell used motor oil to several different, competing collectors who then transport it hundreds of miles to reprocessing facilities. It would be impractical for the service station operator to meet the present RCRA requirements in such cases.

Mr. FLORIO. The committee recognizes this problem. We have included specific instructions to EPA that smaller generators of hazardous wastes should be relieved of as much administrative burden as possible.

Is it our understanding that most States require waste oil collectors to be licensed to operate, and that this includes a showing that they are disposing of the product in an approved fashion. Consequently, we feel it would be sufficient for a service station operator to merely keep receipts from waste oil collectors, showing that particular quantities of specific substances were sold to properly licensed collectors for subsequent disposition.

Mr. BEDELL. That would place the primary burden on the waste oil collector or transporter, which I believe is where it properly belongs. Thus the transporter or collector would assume the bulk of the responsibility for the generator's manifesting requirements.

Would you envision a similar disposition of recordkeeping requirements for used batteries and solvents that are sold for reuse?

Mr. FLORIO. Yes, this type of arrangement is appropriate for waste oil and could be appropriate for slovents depending upon the type of recycling arrangements and degree of continuing control over spent solvent exercised by the generator. Solvents, however, are the architypical hazardous waste contaminant, which readily migrate and solubilize additional hazardous waste contaminants, particularly when placed into landfills. It is those type of wastes when so disposed that have been the specific focus of this legislation and much recent controversy.

The committee recognizes though, that certain arrangements regarding solvent recycling may well provide the necessary level of public health and environmental protection, while minimizing administrative burden to the generator. For instance, many automobile repair facilities employ commercial cleaning services that actually retain title to the materials they use and who remove and recycle used solvents, so that the shop owners are not functioning as generators in the usual sense of the word. The specifics of such complex determinations, however, require the exercise of Agency discretion.

These are all spent materials which have commercial resale value, and which are already being recycled. It is my feeling that service station operators are already behaving in a very responsible fashion. Imposing an added paperwork burden on them would not produce any further improvement in environmental protection.

Our concern is for what happens to the products after they have been sold for reuse, and I believe showing proof of sale to licensed collectors or reprocessors, and requiring the manifesting responsibility to be borne by the collector and/or transporter should be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of RCRA as it would be amended by H.R. 6307.

Mr. BEDELL. I thank the gentleman, and I commend him for his continuing awareness of this potential for energy savings and environmental protection from encouraging the recycling of used motor oil, and for his awareness of the special circumstances of the service station industry. I believe the gentleman seeks an appropriate balance between environmental protection and the needs of smaller generators in section 3 of this legislation.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK).

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6307 as substituted, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act reauthorization before us this afternoon. I believe that the $113.5 million authorized by this legislation for fiscal year 1983 as well as the $11.5 million for fiscal year 1984 will go far in our Nation's fight against environmental degradation.

In 1976, Congress revised the Solid Waste Disposal Act to establish the RCRA program and provide for a basic national hazardous waste program. Since that time, we have made great progress in our ability to better control hazardous solid wastes.

Today, we have an opportunity to expand on that progress by voting in favor of this legislation as reported by the House Energy and Commerce Committee and amended by substitute. Based on an evaluation of the RCRA's performance to date, the Energy and Commerce Committee in conjunction with the Public Works Committee has proposed certain changes designed to improve the program's effectiveness through the closing of loopholes in the system of tracking hazardous waste and the streamlining of EPA disposal permit processing.

Finally, I favor the work done to narrow the hazardous waste exemption for small quantity generators. With about 10 percent of all hazardous wastes, about 8 billion pounds, the responsibility of small quantity generators, I think the need to control this waste is self-evident. Currently, I understand that these wastes are dumped into sanitary landfills or public sewage treatment systems—neither of which are designed to safely contain hazardous materials. I find this unacceptable.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in support of this legislation to help preserve our environmental quality of life.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. EDGAR).

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6307 and commend the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROE), on the Public Works and Transportation Committee; our chairman of the Commerce Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO); the ranking Republican members of both Commerce and Public Works, particularly the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT), for their work in putting together this reauthorization of RCRA.

I commend all of these who have taken the time to look at the way in which resource recovery and its legislation has been put in place so that we can protect ourselves in the disposal of hazardous substances.

I could go into some great detail about the provisions of the legislation that deal with resource recovery, but I would like to take the few minutes I have been granted in general debate to talk about one section of the bill which I had something to do with and also a section which I think is important to the whole Nation, North, East, South, and West.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6307, the bill reauthorizing the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

As chairman of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, I am aware that the proper management and disposal of hazardous wastes has to be one of the Northeast-Midwest region's top priorities. Due to the region's history of heavy industrialization, our States have been the sites of numerous horror stories about illegal or careless disposal of hazardous wastes. In fact, under the Superfund program, 57 percent of the priority cleanup sites that were both solid and hazardous waste facilities are located in the Northeast-Midwest region.

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act provides the public with important protections against the environmental and health impacts of hazardous substances. H.R. 6307 amends the 1976 act in ways that will serve to enhance that protection and close certain loopholes which otherwise may allow dangerous disposal practices to continue at many facilities. For example, H.R. 6307 phases out the current exemption for those which generate between 100 and 1,000 kilograms per month of hazardous wastes. Eight States in the Northeast-Midwest region already have regulations which establish a 100-kilogram cutoff, as does the committee bill, and some States have substantially lower cutoff points. Several other States in the region have imposed requirements that are significantly more stringent than EPA's current practice. It is possible that, due to a lack of uniformity in the treatment of small quantity waste generators by the States, certain areas will suffer a competitive disadvantage with businesses that are concerned about waste disposal requirements.

Other provisions of the bill which will help control one of the most serious threats to environmental quality—that is, the contamination of ground water with hazardous substances. These provisions will restrict the disposal of hazardous waste liquids in landfills and the injection of hazardous wastes into ground water.

Section 9 of H.R. 6307 authorizes the creation of the National Groundwater Commission. As an author of the original legislation to create the Commission included in Mr. FLORIO's bill and modified by the Public Works Committee amendments I want to underline the importance of this section.

A great deal of evidence has surfaced showing that contamination of our Nation's ground water supplies is increasing at a dangerous pace. When you consider the fact that over one-half of all Americans depend on ground water for drinking water, you can begin to realize the magnitude of this problem.

According to a survey published last year by the New York Public Interest Research Group, a sampling of 450 wells in Nassau County found traces of suspected carcinogens in 25 percent of the tested wells. Public water supplies have been found to be contaminated in 20 Massachusetts communities, 16 communities in Connecticut, 25 in Pennsylvania, and 22 in New York. About 100 drinking water wells surrounding a landfill in Jackson Township, N.J., have been closed because of organic contamination. Thirty square miles of the shallow aquifer under the Rocky Mountain Arsenal in Denver have been contaminated by chemical byproducts from the manufacture of pesticides and herbicides. A May 6, 1982 survey by the General Accounting Office points out as a major national issue impending water shortages in the West and Southwest caused by continual shifting of population to urban centers in the western region which are dependent on underground aquifers for water supply.

Congress has addressed ground water problems in the past—notably in the area of hazardous water control. The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, and the Superfund Act all address issues concerning ground water contamination and related health hazards. The Northeast Midwest Congressional Coalition held an informal field hearing on this subject last fall at Greenvale, L.I. At that hearing 11 witnesses told Senator PAT MOYNIHAN and Representatives LENT, FERRARO, and CARMAN of the need for a more concerted Federal and State attack on ground water contamination.

The idea for a Groundwater Commission grew out of that hearing on Long Island and a subsequent conference on water issues in January. At the Northeast-Midwest Coalition conference in January, which was attended by our distinguished subcommittee chairman, Mr. ROE, Prof. David Morrell of Princeton University strongly advocated the need for a high-level Commission to focus on ground water problems. Subsequently, Dr. Morrell wrote to me:

> While local areas already face serious dangers, at the national level we still have sufficient time (perhaps two or three years) to formulate responsible and effective public policy. Moreover, this is an area of public policy which, while national in scope, requires a great deal of action on the state and local level * * *. In addition, ground water policy remains highly ambiguous. Essentially, no one knows what we should be doing: not the government regulatory officials at EPA or in the states; not the academic experts; not the business executives; not the environmental community; and not the politicians. Frankly, all of us are still foundering in a morass of unclear scientific information, political and economic pressures, and regulatory confusion.

These are the words of an environmental engineer and one of America's top experts in this field. While much work and research is being conducted on ground water currently, there is no overall focus for these efforts. The bureaucracy at EPA has not helped substantially. Congressional committees have tried to find answers, but congressional jurisdiction is scattered and chaotic on this issue. Dr. Morrell went on to suggest to me that what we need is a congressionally charged commission, with specific duties.

The Water Resources Subcommittee examined the Groundwater Commission concert in hearings and heard no substantive objections to the legislation. Representatives of the EPA expressed concern that the formation of the Commission might somehow interfere with administrative activity now being undertaken on the groundwater issue, but were reassured that the formation of the committee would not preclude any near-term actions being taken by EPA or the administration. The Commission is, rather, a long-range effort to instill coherence in our knowledge and policy on a problem that is dealt with in several Federal statutes, dozens of State laws, and a handfull of committees of the House and Senate.

Membership on the Commission is equitably composed of Members of Congress and representatives of State government, public interest groups and industry. There is no prior bias as to the policies and directions the Commission may eventually recommend. I believe that this provision will put us on a firm path toward preserving a safe and adequate supply of ground water and is an important addition to the reauthorization of the RCRA program. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

I ask the Members as they think about this particular legislation to think about the many other experts throughout the Nation who have reminded us that we really are in a time-skip as we live in our society. We are the only generation in human history that has an opportunity to plan, not predict, its future, and I think that moving toward the establishment of a National Groundwater Commission gives us an opportunity to put handles on this very serious problem in time for us to address in an adequate way the solutions to that problem in the future.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDGAR. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to identify myself with the gentleman's comments and also thank the gentleman for the extensive effort the gentleman has been putting forth in really spearheading the work that we are projecting in this legislation, in the ground water area.

I think it is an extremely important environmental issue that has been completely overlooked over the years. I think the gentleman is doing a superb job. I want to compliment the gentleman for his efforts.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDGAR. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I would likewise like to recognize the initiative of the gentleman coming forward with this proposal and it is out of the gentleman's ideas that this whole situation of the bill has developed.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. EDGAR. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) would engage in a colloquy briefly.

Several oil refineries in my district inject refinery wastewater through class IV wells into an old oil and gas producing formation located several thousand feet underground, well below any current or even anticipated future sources of drinking water. Current EPA regulations define the term "underground source of drinking water" to allow such a formation to avoid designation as a USDW if it can be shown the aquifer does not now and cannot in the future serve as a source of drinking water.

Was it the gentleman's intention, in drafting section 5 of H.R. 6307, to incorporate the current EPA regulatory definition of the term "underground source of drinking water"?

□ 1430

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the answer is "Yes."

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman. Therefore, this bill and the gentleman's substitute will not change the existing regulatory procedure for the designation as "exempted aquifers" of those formations which do not now, or cannot in the future, serve as underground sources of drinking water, as provided by the EPA regulations; is that correct?

Mr. FLORIO. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, at the moment I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), who has been extremely helpful in developing this legislation.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the subcommittee's substitute being offered by both the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT).

I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from New York, and their staffs, for working with me and my staff to put together what I believe is a responsible approach to the hazardous wastes in landfills issue.

The amendment contained in the substitute embodies a fundamental principle with which all Members can agree: Hazardous waste management must fully protect human health and the environment.

The compromise amendment directs EPA to submit annual reports to Congress identifying those hazardous wastes for which landfill disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment based upon the toxicity, mobility, persistence, and the ability of the waste to bioaccumulate.

The amendment also directs EPA to also identify those hazardous wastes for which there exists one or more technologically feasible means of treatment, recover, or disposal, other than landfill disposal, which will protect human health and the environment. Most importantly, the compromise amendment directs EPA to promulgate regulations respecting those hazardous wastes for which landfill disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment. For the purposes of such regulations, the amendment directs EPA to consider the ability of landfill disposal facilities to contain hazardous wastes over time; to examine alternative treatment, recovery, and disposal technologies, and the actions taken by State governments in this regard; and to review, for possible regulatory action, all halogenated organics.

The compromise amendment is fully consistent with EPA policy. Yesterday, Rita Lavelle, Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response, wrote to both the Speaker and the minority leader. Ms. Lavelle's letter notes:

> The Agency now plans to prohibit land disposal of hazardous wastes which are highly toxic, persistent and mobile, where alternative treatment or recovery technologies are reasonably available.

Mr. Chairman, the evidence continues to demonstrate that the unrestricted landfill disposal of hazardous wastes in secure landfills makes those landfills less than secure. Peter Montague, the administrator of Princeton University's hazardous waste research program, recently reported that four New Jersey landfills that employed state-of-the-art technology to prevent leakage actually leaked. These were not landfills constructed in the 1950's or 1960's; they were landfills that were less than 4 years old.

A recent report in Civil Engineering, the journal of the American Society of Civil Engineers, concludes that low permeability clay used to contain hazardous wastes can be rendered highly permeable by certain chemicals. And EPA, in the introduction to its regulations for hazardous waste landfills, notes, "any liner will begin to leak eventually * * *" EPA concludes, "thus it can be assumed that a hazardous waste land disposal unit presents some risks to groundwater well into the future * * *."

Secure hazardous waste landfill design features include: Liners to block or impede movement of leachate out of the waste containment area; subsurface and groundwater monitoring wells; caps which do not allow rainwater to infiltrate the landfill, yet remain sufficiently moist to support vegetation; drainage control facilities; and features to collect any leachate or gas produced in the waste disposal area.

These features minimize, but do not prevent, the escape of materials from secure landfills. Perpetual monitoring, maintenance, and cleanup are required even at the most modern, secure landfill.

The growing concern throughout the United States regarding the adequacy of landfills for the safe disposal of hazardous wastes reflects a belief, shared by EPA, that these requirements simply cannot be met.

Given these real problems, we must exercise care in the selection of hazardous wastes for landfill disposal. If the landfill disposal option is to remain viable—and I believe it will for the foreseeable future—we cannot allow the indiscriminate disposal of all hazardous wastes in landfill disposal facilities. It is this end, Mr. Chairman, which the compromise amendment is designed to achieve.

This Nation generates over 60 million metric tons of acids, corrosive materials, toxic chemicals, and other hazardous wastes annually. The volume of such wastes will grow at an annual rate of 3.5 percent, exceeding 80 million metric tons annually by 1990. I believe that the time has come to phase out the landfill disposal of hazardous wastes for which landfill disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment.

Several States have moved ahead aggressively to achieve just this end. California will, over the next several years, phase out the landfill disposal of priority hazardous wastes including PCB's, pesticides, toxic metals, cyanides, halogenated organics, and nonhalogenated volatile organics.

As the gentleman from New York, Mr. LENT, knows, the Department of Environmental Conservation has developed a plan to selectively ban landfilling of hazardous wastes. CECOS International and SCA Services, Inc., New York's two licensed hazardous waste disposal companies, are working with the State to phase in alternative treatment technologies.

Several other States, including Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Vermont, have or will implement plans to encourage the development and utilization of alternative technologies for the treatment, recovery, or disposal of hazardous wastes.

Mr. Chairman, in 1977, a small community in Niagara Falls, N.Y., in my congressional district, achieved national prominence. Love Canal, a neat working class community, became synonymous with the problem of hazardous waste disposal. Today over 237 homes have been demolished, and dioxin, the most toxic substance known to man, still poisons area creeks and sewers.

Love Canal is but one of the thousands of toxic time bombs that dot the American landscape. The Congress has committed $1.6 billion to clean up these sites, and we are becoming painfully aware that billions more may be needed to complete the job. We will be paying for yesterday's mistakes tomorrow and for years to come.

Passage of RCRA 6 years ago marked the beginning of our commitment to insure that hazardous waste landfills are designed, operated, and maintained to fully protect human health and the environment. If we are to avoid a second generation of Love Canals, we must manage hazardous wastes with the same vigilance. Mr. Chairman, the compromise amendment is a first, necessary step toward that goal. I urge its adoption by the House.

The second necessary step is to insure that most, if not all, hazardous wastes generated in this country each year are disposed of in a manner which protects public health and the environment.

RCRA currently regulates generators that produce more than 1,000 kilograms of hazardous waste per month. The exemption afforded the so-called small quantity generators allows them to dispose of their hazardous wastes in solid waste landfills and municipal dumps.

There can be no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that this exemption poses a potentially serious threat to human health and the environment. Solid waste disposal facilities and municipal dumps are simply not designed to contain hazardous wastes. There are no facilities to monitor, control, or clean up hazardous wastes that might migrate from these nonsecure landfills.

According to EPA's own data, over one-half of the 115 Superfund priority sites identified by the Agency for cleanup were solid waste facilities or municipal dumps that accepted both hazardous and solid wastes.

The substitute being offered today by Mr. FLORIO and Mr. LENT includes a responsible solution to this serious problem. The substitute lowers the level of the exemption from 1,000 kilograms-per-month to 100 kilograms-per-month. It gives EPA the flexibility necessary to modify the administrative and managerial requirements on these smaller operations prior to actual disposal or treatment of the waste. And, the substitute requires that small generators take their waste to a proper hazardous waste management facility, and not a sanitary landfill or municipal dump.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who support this provision of the substitute, recognize that compliance with regulations that will be amended to take into account the particular conditions affecting small business will be costly. But we also recognize that the cost of noncompliance will be greater.

The subcommittee substitute being offered today by Mr. FLORIO and Mr. LENT moves us several steps closer to insuring that all hazardous wastes are properly managed.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the subcommittee substitute and the provisions therein to restrict the landfill disposal of hazardous wastes for which land disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment, and to bring most, if not all, of the 60 million metric tons of hazardous waste generated in this country each year under RCRA's regulatory umbrella.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his support and I wish to pay recognition for the gentleman's role as an environmentally oriented person who is particularly concerned for small business.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SCHEUER).

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6307 and I especially want to commend the efforts of the two gentlemen from New Jersey, Mr. FLORIO and Mr. ROE. I feel like I am reciting a Shakespeare play, but they have done a fine job in bringing this responsible and essential legislation to the floor.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 6307 addresses a serious problem that deeply concerns many Americans, the problem of hazardous waste.

This legislation authorizes $109 million in fiscal year 1983 for EPA's program on hazardous waste and takes positive and essential steps in the management of hazardous waste.

I believe this funding level would allow for an effective hazardous waste program at the Environmental Protection Agency.

In addition, I wholeheartedly approve of the provisions in the bill that would tighten the management requirements for hazardous waste generated in this country.

Existing law has failed to address some very serious hazardous waste problems and I believe appropriate actions must now be taken.

Specifically, I refer to the handling of hazardous wastes from small generators, the disposal of hazardous wastes in municipal landfills, and the use of fuel that has been combined with hazardous waste materials.

Oversight activities conducted by the Subcommittee on Natural Resources, Agriculture Research and Environment, which I have the honor to chair, confirm the fact that these are all serious problems, not only in my State of New York but also in many other parts of the country.

We cannot ignore these problems and further jeopardize our environment and our citizens.

This legislation addresses these problems responsibly and I, therefore, strongly urge its adoption by the House.

● Mr. ZEFERETTI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6307, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act reauthorization.

Hazardous waste management has become an issue of major national concern and one of great concern for both New York State and New York City. Since passage of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act in 1976, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has been slow to implement this important law. The EPA did not issue its first major package of hazardous waste regulations until May 1980, and it had barely begun to implement them before the Reagan administration took office. Since then, EPA has been hit with severe budget reductions.

As approved by the Energy and Commerce Committee, the bill authorizes appropriations of $108.5 million in fiscal year 1983 and $111.5 million in fiscal year 1984. These figures are more than $30 million more than the President had originally requested for the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). In addition, the bill earmarks $109 million to enhance the enforcement activities of RCRA. H.R. 6307 will significantly expand the scope of the hazardous waste law and will force the EPA to meet new deadlines for issuing or denying disposal permits to the generators of hazardous wastes. Plus, this legislation will create a National Ground Water Commission to recommend ways of protecting ground water from contamination.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, I support:

Restricting the disposal of bulk and containerized liquid hazardous wastes in landfills. Present EPA regulations are inadequate to protect the environment from contamination in that those regulations permit the free disposal of untreated bulk liquid wastes in landfills. The regulations ignore the fact that toxic chemicals can migrate through the ground and into the ground water.

Prohibiting the injection of hazardous wastes into underground sources of drinking water and restricting the injections above present and potential underground water supplies, pending the development of State programs to regulate this practice. EPA has vacillated on whether to regulate underground injection wells for the disposal of hazardous wastes under RCRA of the Safe Drinking Water Act. Thus the regulation of class IV underground injection wells used for the disposal of toxic and radioactive liquids into and above underground sources of drinking water has been sorely neglected.

Requiring the EPA to set standards for industrial boilers that burn hazardous wastes as fuel.

Requiring that interim status facilities wanting to expand by more than 10 percent obtain permits in accordance with the standards that apply to new facilities.

Establishing a timetable for the EPA to review permit applications to accelerate the issuance of final permits which spell out specific environmental protection measures for existing hazardous waste management facilities.

All of these issues—my concerns, the concerns of the Nation, the concerns of my congressional district, and the people of Staten Island—are addressed by H.R. 6307. The national hazardous waste problem has reached a crisis stage in many of our communities. If we fail to act now, we may very well lose the opportunity to develop a preventative approach to future hazardous waste problems. We need a strong Federal law now more than ever to restore public confidence. We need to put teeth in the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. We need H.R. 6307, and I call upon my colleagues to give their wholehearted support to it.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6307, the RCRA Reauthorization Act of 1982. This legislation provides a 2-year reauthorization for a major law that established our Nation's basic hazardous waste system.

RCRA represented a milestone in our efforts to regulate and monitor the problem posed to the environment by the increasing amounts of hazardous wastes which are generated annually. If unchecked, these wastes would create enormous environmental and health problems for generations to come.

This legislation seeks to provide additional guidelines for the implementation of the law. The establishment of specific deadlines in the legislation dealing with the issuance of hazardous waste disposal permits is an additional step in the right direction and which will provide certainty in this complex regulatory area.

At the same time, I also support the amendment that will be offered by our colleague, Congressman PHIL GRAMM, dealing with small generators of hazardous wastes. I agree that there should be some consideration given to the regulation of generators of hazardous wastes in quantities of less than 1,000 kilograms per month. However, the immediate applicability of the RCRA regulations on small generators, as provided for in section 3 of the bill, will have a significant economic impact on those generators, the majority of which are small businesses such as gas stations, dry cleaners, auto repair shops, laboratories, and so forth. I favor the approach taken by Congressman PHIL GRAMM which directs the Environmental Protection Agency to conduct a comprehensive study on small generators to assess the problem they present and to analyze the regulatory alternatives available to deal with these hazards. In this way, different options can be studied that will achieve the desired purpose without being onerous on the small generators that will be regulated.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Gramm amendment and will also support the prompt enactment of this bill.●

● Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6307. First, let me thank Mr. FLORIO and Mr. ROE for their leadership on this issue and congratulate them on this excellent reauthorization bill.

Over 80 billion pounds of hazardous wastes are dumped each year, creating a serious threat to the land, to drinking water supplies, and to the health and well-being of our citizens. H.R. 6307 is an important and essential step in providing a solution to this problem and in reaching the goal of protecting the public from significant environmental and health damage.

In particular, I would like to emphasize the importance of the creation of the National Ground Water Commission. The Subcommittee on Environment, Energy and Natural Resources, which I chair, undertook a year-long investigation into the ground water problem. Our investigation culminated in a report of the full Government Operations Committee which urged, in the strongest terms, the development of a national strategy to protect our ground water resources.

Over 100 million Americans depend on ground water. Over 40 percent of our citizens in my State of Connecticut obtain their water from wells. Ironically, as the dependence on ground water is growing, so is the destruction of precious underground drinking water supplies. In Connecticut alone, some 25 percent of the towns have suffered from hazardous waste and toxic chemical contamination of ground water.

Just last week, I visited the residential community of Montville, Conn., where toxic organic solvents had destroyed 13 private wells and pose a threat to dozens more. The problems faced by the citizens of Montville are being faced by residents of towns across the Nation.

Despite my pleasure at seeing the ground water issue addressed, I am disappointed that EPA's failure to act in this vital area has necessitated further congressional action. The Reagan administration has not used its authorities to address this issue and, by failing to act, is exposing our resources and our citizens to dangers which could be mitigated. As Mr. FLORIO noted in the full committee markup on this legislation, the establishment of this Commission should be viewed by the EPA as a signal that the Congress is not happy with its "go slow" approach, that Congress is frustrated by the EPA's meager efforts to prevent the destruction of ground water supplies. Thus, the creation of the Commission must be seen as a call to action.

I would also like to say that I believe Mr. FITHIAN's amendment is essential. Hearings held by my subcommittee in the field earlier this year clearly indicated that this amendment will correct wasteful and unnecessary ambiguity in the Superfund legislation. I believe this amendment clearly expresses the intent of the Congress that only municipally owned and operated sites should be forced to pay 50 percent of the cleanup costs.

I believe that H.R. 6307 deserves the full support of the House. I look forward to working with my colleagues in future efforts to protect our essential and irreplaceable underground drinking water supplies.●

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6307, legislation to reauthorize the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. This statute has been most effective in addressing the hazardous waste question, and the protections it affords the public should be retained.

It is widely accepted that the mismanagement of hazardous wastes is one of the most serious public health and environmental problems before our country today. This fact is underscored by the large number of abandoned toxic dump sites littered across America, and the continued illegal dumping of wastes down sewers, storm drains, and in vacant lots. It is disconcerting to realize that the public still relies on land disposal facilities for the most deadly and persistent chemicals despite overwhelming evidence that most landfills eventually leak.

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976, which sought to correct these egregious problems, was modeled on California's 1972 hazardous waste law. California, with one of the Nation's most serious waste problems and one of the most progressive programs to combat it, provides an interesting case to study during our consideration of RCRA's reauthorization.

Indeed, my State has assumed an important role in the debate surrounding the hazardous waste question, and a review of the relevant facts concerning California's current situation is appropriate. Given the Environmental Protection Agency's claims that California is the fourth largest producer of hazardous wastes in the country, a discussion of my State's problems will also be instructive to other industrial States faced with similar difficulties.

During the past several years, nearly 100 hazardous waste sites have been identified throughout California. The soil and water surrounding these areas has been contaminated with dangerous pollutants and are a profound threat to human health and the environment. Cleanup of these sites represents a long-term commitment of resources and time, as it will require hundreds of millions of dollars and many years to complete the task. These 100 sites are only the first to be discovered, and it is expected that numerous other hazardous dump sites will be located before California's county-by-county search is ended.

We cannot shirk our commitment to the eradication of dangerous wastes, as many of these sites have contaminated drinking wells with solvents, pesticides, and other possible carcinogenic materials. The existence of these tainted wells poses an unacceptable hazard to the public's well-being and as such, it becomes our responsibility to prevent such pollution from occurring. Once an aquifer is contaminated, the process of reclaiming it is a difficult and expensive one, and the natural rate of ground water recharge is on the order of decades. This problem needs to be addressed, as over half of all U.S. citizens rely on ground water aquifers for their drinking water. We cannot continue to threaten that water supply by relying on questionable land disposal practices.

Hazardous wastes of all types continue to be churned out at an alarming rate. In 1982, California discovered that the actual amount of waste generated within its borders is close to 18 million tons, rather than the 5 million tons previously estimated. Most recently, we have witnessed the Santa Clara Valley's citizens contend with a critical waste problem. This productive area, which is the capital of the State's electronics industry, has been plagued by a series of massive leaks in underground storage tanks containing toxic solvents. The event's potential for damaging the integrity of the area's ground water supplies was significant and is indicative of the need for society's greater vigilance in the disposition and long-term management of hazardous waste.

Notwithstanding the numerous hazardous waste problems encountered by the State, California has been in the vanguard of the battle to reclaim these poisoned sites. Our State's hazardous waste laws have been updated during each of the last 10 years as the extent of the problem becomes understood more fully. The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, on the other hand, has not been modified to reflect the new changes in our knowledge about hazardous wastes. It is my firm belief that the adoption of H.R. 6307, as amended by the committee proposals, will allow our country to keep pace with the growing complexity of this problem, I urge my colleagues to support this measure.●

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6307, the reauthorization of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act and in support of strengthening amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I commend by colleagues on the Energy and Commerce Committee for the excellent work they have done in addressing the problem of hazardous waste management. In particular, I commend my colleague from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) for the leadership he has demonstrated. The Superfund legislation enacted in 1980, providing authority for clean up of abandoned hazardous waste sites, was guided through the committee by Mr. FLORIO and will benefit communities across the country suffering the results of poor or illegal dumping practices. The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) is designed to control current waste management practices so that ideally, Superfund would no longer be needed.

The problems of hazardous waste management describe by my colleagues and well known to most Members are very real. They certainly are found in my own State of California, long known for its aggressive efforts to protect its rich environmental resources. In my own district, the community of Glen Avon in the Jurupa hills has suffered years of turmoil and uncertainty regarding a liquid hazardous waste site leaching toxic chemicals into underground streams feeding the community. The Stringfellow Acid Pits, as the site is called, is listed as one of the 100 or so sites on the Federal Superfund list. I appreciate the provisions contained in Superfund which can help alleviate the problems of sites like Stringfellow across the country. But I am also interested in insuring that communities do not have to face problems like this in the future.

California's hazardous waste law was enacted in 1972. It was the first law in the country and provided the model for RCRA. California updated its statute during each of the last 10 years as the extent of the hazardous waste problem became more fully understood. I believe that a few points about California's program are relevant to our debate today.

NO SMALL GENERATOR EXEMPTION

California has never exempted smaller generators from hazardous waste controls. Many of the most poisonous wastes, such as cyanide, toxic metals, PCB's, and chlorinated solvents, are produced by smaller businesses. In practice, this has not been a burden for either the State or for industry. An Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) exemption can have serious results. Each small generator can send up to about 50 barrels per year of waste to the local municipal landfill. In any good size city you may have 100 smaller generators. That is 5,000 barrels per year of toxic wastes going into a landfill that was never engineered to accept hazardous wastes. The results are injured municipal trash collectors, combinations of incompatible wastes that can form toxic clouds that drift over residences, and continued contamination of ground water.

This situation must be changed and this bill does that by reducing the small-generator exemption.

NO EXEMPTION FOR BURNING WASTES IN BOILERS

EPA now allows generators to burn their hazardous wastes in their own boilers without a permit. Just because the waste is to be burned for the laudable goal of energy recovery does not mean that the hazards of such a practice can be ignored. The flagrant abuses of this exemption have become clear over the last year—the mixing of hazardous wastes with fuel oil. California has no such exemption—a permit is required no matter whether treatment, incineration, recycling, or landfilling is planned.

This bill addresses this problem.

BAN ON THE LAND DISPOSAL OF HIGHLY TOXIC WASTES

Despite EPA's ban on the landfilling of liquid wastes and new design and operating standards for disposal facilities, there is nothing to prevent many of the worst wastes from continuing to go to surface impoundments, injection wells, or land farms. EPA is taking the bandaid approach, patching the symptoms but not addressing the cause of the illness.

California has an aggressive new program that has received national attention. I will insert a Washington Post article for the record for those of my colleagues who may have missed it over the recess. The Governor's Office of Appropriate Technology has worked for a couple of years on alternatives to land disposal of toxic wastes. The Governor's office has identified wastestreams that are not suitable for land disposal, has set up a 3-year schedule to ban about 500,000 tons of the most toxic wastes from land disposal, and aggressively encouraged the construction of alternative management technologies that recycle, treat, or destroy these hazardous wastes. Technologies to treat, recycle, or destroy such toxic wastes are proven and in use in Europe or in other parts of the world. A future of safer waste management is possible today if we are willing to recognize it.

I understand that my colleague from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) will offer an amendment that will require EPA to promulgate regulations indentifying hazardous waste which would be banned from land disposal. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. The State of California has shown that it can be done for the State. Let us show that we are committed to solving this problem for the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the bill.

At this point I include the following:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 1, 1982]

CALIFORNIA UNVEILS STRICT NEW TOXIC WASTE RULES

(By Ward Sinclair)

The California state government yesterday announced details of a far-reaching new program to ban the land disposal of a variety of highly toxic chemical wastes identified as serious hazards to human health.

The program, which would require that toxic wastes be treated at new handling facilities, would be the most stringent in the nation when its first portions take effect, as expected, early next year.

Gov. Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown, Jr., who unveiled the program at a San Francisco press conference, said the program, an outgrowth of his executive order last year banning toxic waste land dumps, "will help prevent intolerable human suffering . . . and help end enormous cleanup costs that neither industry nor the taxpayer can afford."

Although the proposed regulations apply only to California, Brown's action yesterday carried a decidedly national slant.

Public concern over toxic waste disposal has been heightened by the Love Canal, N.Y., tragedy, involving sickness and land contamination, and disclosures that hundreds of unregulated toxic dumps may threaten public health across the country.

Brown, the Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate from California is a frequent critic of Reagan administration environmental enforcement and a gubernatorial aide conceded yesterday that the state action is intended to spur the federal Environmental Protection Agency to take a more militant enforcement stand.

Brown was joined at his press conference by Sen. Gary Hart (D-Colo.), who has proposed amendments to the federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA), now awaiting congressional reauthorization, that parallel California's program.

The Hart proposals are pending before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. The House is expected to debate its own version of a RCRA extension, with amendments similar to Hart's offered by Reps. James J. Florio (D-N.J.), John J. LaFalce (D-N.Y.) and Norman F. Lent (R-N.Y.).

Brown said yesterday that he was "fully supportive" of the Hart proposals.

California officials estimate that their new regulations, although subject to final public comment and review before they take effect next March, would affect at least half a million tons of highly toxic chemical wastes now dumped in landfills.

Wastes that would be banned from landfill-dumping include cyanides, toxic metals, strong acids, PCBs, halogenated organic compounds such as the pesticides DDT, DBCP and Kepone, and all other wastes currently classified by the state as "extremely hazardous."

The proposed regulations carry a maximum fine of $25,000 per day for each violation of the land-dumping ban.

Compliance and enforcement, according to Kent Stoddard of the governor's Office of Appropriate Technology, will be keyed to a two-year timetable for construction of treatment facilities, beginning next March 31.

The facilities will be built by private enterprise, with low-interest state pollution-control loans available. The Brown program also calls for expedited state processing of applications for construction permits.

"We have identified the treatment and recycling technologies that could be used," Stoddard said, "and we know there are clear alternatives to land disposal of these wastes. We have worked closely with the chemical, petroleum and electronics industries in laying out these treatment timetables."

California's plan to phase out landfills as dumps for highly toxic wastes began last October when Brown issued an executive order banning such activity and increasing state monitoring and enforcement at all hazardous waste disposal sites.

State officials estimate that California, with perhaps the nation's fourth largest volume of toxic wastes, has at least 70 major dumping sites that need cleaning up, including some in the state's most populous counties.●

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6307, a bill to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act and authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1983 and 1984.

This bill was sequentially referred to our Committee on Public Works and Transportation for consideration of sections 4 and 9 in recognition of our jurisdiction over water pollution and water resources management, conservation and development.

Section 4 directs the Environmental Protection Agency to submit a report to Congress with recommendations as to whether regulation of hazardous wastes mixed with domestic sewage under the Solid Waste Disposal Act is necessary to protect human health and the environment, or whether the existing provisions of law are adequate. Section 1004(27) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act provides that the term "solid waste" does not include solid or dissolved material in domestic sewage. Therefore, hazardous waste mixed with domestic sewage is currently exempt from regulation under the provisions of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Instead, the pretreatment provisions of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act establish a program for the regulation of toxic pollutants which interfer with, pass through, or contaminate the sludge produced by municipal sewage treatment plants.

Section 9 establishes a National Ground Water Commission to investigate and assess a broad range of matters relating to ground water contamination by hazardous wastes and existing or needed mechanisms for the protection or rehabilitation of ground water resources. The Commission is directed to transmit a report along with recommendations for appropriate legislation and administrative actions to Congress and the President no later than October 30, 1986; $10 million is authorized to carry out the study.

Our committee adopted amendments to these sections, which will be explained in detail by Congressman ROE, chairman of our Water Resources Subcommittee. I would like, however, to discuss the National Ground Water Commission provision. Ground water is one of our most precious resources. It is used extensively for human consumption, irrigation of agricultural crops and industrial purposes. It is essential that it be protected and used wisely so that its availability for continued and future use will be assured.

We know that our ground water resources are threatened with contamination and depletion. Yet we lack comprehensive information on the nature and scope of these threats and possible remedial action which can be taken with regard to them.

So that this information will be available, the Commission is charged with the study of a broad range of matters relating to ground water, ranging from the extent and condition of available resources to measures which can be taken to restore and preserve them. This will enable us to determine what measures should be taken to insure that future generations will be able to enjoy the benefits of this vital resource.●

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, almost everyone recognizes that the careful disposal of the increasing volume of hazardous waste is one of the major problems society must face. I am pleased that yesterday the House acted to improve the way this Nation disposes of hazardous waste.

In western Pennsylvania, there are many sites, including abandoned strip mines and landfills, where all types of wastes are being dumped, some of which are hazardous. In the view of one citizens' group in my district, "We view these landfills as ticking time bombs." Citizens should not have to live in fear that their health will be imperiled and the value of their property decreased by unsafe disposal methods.

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, enacted in 1980, has provided a framework for the identification, transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of hazardous waste. Yet there are major loopholes in present law that require us to improve regulation of these dangerous substances.

First, present law exempts the multitude of generators of smaller amounts of hazardous waste from the requirement that amounts under 1,000 kilograms be disposed of in sites that will effectively seal the waste from the surrounding environment. Although some argue that these wastes should continue to be exempt, and although it is generally acceptable to exclude small parties from regulation, small amounts of hazardous waste often cause as much damage to our environment as larger concentrations. In view of the increasing size of this problem for our society, we should bring all such waste under some form of reasonable regulation to protect our environment in both the short and in the long run.

Second, the bill will sharply curtail two very damaging practices—the disposal of hazardous waste in landfills not designed for that purpose and the underground injection of hazardous wastes that may pollute drinking water.

Third, the bill will make a number of improvements in the administration of regulations including the requirement of action on permit applications on a strict schedule. The bill also provides for critical studies that will insure that we stay ahead of the hazardous waste problem.

Fourth, the bill provides increased money to enforce the disposal requirements so that we have an effective program to monitor and deal with this problem.

I am also pleased that we adopted an amendment, offered by Congressman LAFALCE, to require that EPA submit an annual report on hazardous waste for which land disposal may be harmful to human health and the environment. This amendment would also prohibit the landfill disposal of hazardous wastes that EPA determines to be unsuitable for such disposal because they would be harmful to human health based on the toxicity, mobility, persistence, or ability of the waste to bioaccumulate. I believe that this amendment will go a long way toward protecting human health.

This is one of the most important problems for the longrun future of our environment. I urge my colleagues to support this measure that we must act on today.●

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) for his leadership in this field of storage and disposal of toxic wastes. I commend and thank him, in particular, for taking time out of the recess last week to come out and spend a day in Ohio to look at a novel situation where PPG Industries is proposing to use a 2,000 foot deep abandoned limestone mine as a permanent disposal site and also a temporary storage site for hazardous wastes.

I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey, with respect to the study and the proposed regulations that the EPA is directed by this substitute to come up with, is it the gentleman's intent to the maximum extent feasible to require treatment or processing of wastes so that they are reduced to their least hazardous form before they are permanently stored or disposed of?

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct. That is the clear intent of this legislation, so as to discourage inappropriate disposal means. We saw at the gentleman's facility a good example of a hybrid system that was a combination storage and disposal facility for which there really is not a clear cut regulatory system that has been defined; so the gentleman is correct. Circumstances such as the proposed, underground mine site require separate standards for facility operation and specific restrictions on the types of wastes that can be placed in the facility.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman and I commend him and also the other gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROE) for the work that he has done in connection with this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the reported bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment. It shall be in order to consider amendments to said substitute printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 3, 1982, by, and if offered by, Representative ROE of New Jersey in lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation now printed in the reported bill.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6307

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEARS 1983 AND 1984

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FLORIO: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEARS 1983 AND 1984

SEC. 2. (a) GENERAL AUTHORIZATION.—Section 2007(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "and $80,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982" and substituting "$80,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, $44,520,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and $44,520,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984".

(b) STATE HAZARDOUS WASTE PROGRAMS.—Section 3011(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "and $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1982" and substituting "$40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1982, $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1983, and $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984".

(c) HAZARDOUS WASTE SITE INVENTORY.—Section 3012 of such Act (relating to the hazardous waste inventory) is amended by—

(1) redesignating such section (and the corresponding reference thereto in the table of contents) as "Section 3012A."; and

(2) by striking out "$20,000,000" in subsection (c)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1983, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984".

(d) DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION ASSISTANCE.—Section 4008(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "and $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1982" and substituting "$20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1982, $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1983, and $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1984".

(e) IMPLEMENTATION ASSISTANCE.—Section 4008(a)(2)(C) of such Act is amended by striking out "and $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1982" and substituting "$2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1982, $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1983, and $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1984".

(f) SPECIAL COMMUNITIES.—Section 4008(e)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "and $1,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1981 and 1982" and substituting ", $1,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1981 and 1982, $500,000 for the fiscal year 1983 and $500,000 for the fiscal year 1984".

(g) ASSISTANCE TO STATES FOR RECYCLED OIL PROGRAMS.—Section 4008 of such Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (f) (relating to assistance to municipalities for energy and materials conservation and recovery planning activities) as subsection (g); and

(2) in paragraph (4) of subsection (f) (relating to assistance to States for discretionary programs for recycled oil) by striking out "and $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1983" and substituting "$5,000,000 for fiscal year 1983 and $3,000,000 for fiscal year 1984".

(h) DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE FUNCTIONS.—Section 5006 of such Act is amended by inserting after "1982" the following "$1,500,000 for fiscal year 1983, and $1,500,000 for fiscal year 1984".

SMALL QUANTITY GENERATORS

SEC. 3. Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(d) SMALL QUANTITY GENERATOR WASTE.—(1) After the date twenty-four months after the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982, no hazardous waste which is generated by any generator in a quantity greater than one hundred kilograms during any calendar month shall be exempt, by reason of the small quantity generated, from standards under this subtitle.

"(2) Not later than twenty-four months after the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982, the Administrator, after opportunity for notice, comment, and public hearings, shall promulgate standards under sections 3002, 3003, and 3004 for hazardous waste which is generated during any calendar month by any generator in a quantity greater than one hundred kilograms but less than one thousand kilograms. Such standards may vary as provided in this paragraph from the standards applicable to hazardous waste generated in larger quantities to the extent that the Administrator deems such variation necessary by reason of the smaller capacity of the facilities concerned. The Administrator is directed to provide variances in such standards which—

"(A) in the case of standards under section 3002, provide that—

"(i) a determination concerning whether or not hazardous waste is being generated may be made through testing, or process identification, or applying knowledge of the characteristics of the waste based upon materials or processes used, or generic testing for an industry where waste streams of generators within the industry have the same or similar characteristics;

"(ii) requirements for waste identification on manifests may be modified so that such requirements may be satisfied on the basis of information obtained by testing, or process identification, or applying knowledge of the characteristics of the waste based upon materials or processes used, or generic testing for an industry where waste streams of generators within the industry have the same or similar characteristics;

"(iii) labeling requirements prior to waste shipments may be modified so that such requirements may be satisfied on the basis of information obtained through testing, or process identification, or applying knowledge of the characteristics of the waste based upon materials or processes used, or generic testing for an industry where waste streams of generators within the industry have the same or similar characteristics;

"(B) in the case of standards under section 3003, provide that transportation requirements for smaller quantities of hazardous wastes may vary from those applicable to hazardous waste generated in excess of one thousand kilograms during any calendar month, and

"(C) in the case of standards under section 3004, provide that storage requirements shall be modified to allow on-site waste storage for up to 180 days without the requirement of a permit.

The variances as specified in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) shall apply to all hazardous waste generated during any calendar month in a quantity of less than one thousand kiiograms unless the Administrator demonstrates that other standards are necessary to protect human health and the environment. In addition, the Administrator is directed to examine the requirements in effect under section 3003 and, in cooperation with the Secretary of Transportation, modify regulations in effect on the date of the enactment of this paragraph to the extent appropriate to conform such requirements to the scale of the operations involved. The actions of the Administrator under this paragraph shall be treated as a nondiscretionary duty for purposes of section 7002.

"(3) The Administrator may promulgate regulations under this subtitle which established special standards for, or exempt from regulation, hazardous wastes which are generated by any generator in a quantity less than one hundred kilograms during any calendar month.

"(4) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the validity of regulations of the Administrator promulgated prior to the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982 with respect to hazardous waste generated by generators of less than one thousand kilograms per month of hazardous waste, except that after the date eighteen months after such date of enactment, such prior regulations shall not apply to hazardous waste generated by generators which generate more than minimal quantities (one hundred kilograms or less) of hazardous waste per month.".

HAZARDOUS WASTE MIXED WITH DOMESTIC SEWAGE

SEC. 4. The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall, not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, submit a report to the Congress concerning hazardous wastes identified or listed under section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act which are excluded from regulation pursuant to subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act under regulations exempting mixtures of domestic sewage and other wastes that pass through a sewer system to a publicly owned treatment works for treatment. Such report shall specify the types and quantities of such hazardous wastes which are exempted pursuant to such regulations and shall include recommendations respecting whether or not existing law applicable to such mixtures are adequate to protect human health and the environment from the hazards associated with such wastes. Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall submit to Congress a notice setting forth the progress made on the report required under this section.

HAZARDOUS WASTE INJECTION; LIQUIDS IN LANDFILLS

SEC. 5. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—" after "3004." and by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(b) HAZARDOUS WASTE INJECTION.—(1) Eighteen months after the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982, the disposal of hazardous waste by injection through a class IV well into an underground source of drinking water is prohibited. Twelve months after the date of enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Reauthorization Act of 1982, disposal of hazardous waste by injection through a class IV well which is above an underground source of drinking water is prohibited until such practices are regulated by State programs or by the Administration pursuant to section 1422 of the Safe Drinking Water Act. In those States that have not undertaken administrative responsibility for the underground injection program with regard to injection into an underground source of drinking water by January 1, 1983, the Administrator shall assume such responsibility at that time. For purposes of this subsection, the terms 'underground source of drinking water' and 'class IV well' shall have the same meaning as provided in regulations of the Administrator under the Safe Drinking Water Act.

"(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) shall affect any well which injects fluids:

"(A) which are brought to the surface in connection with conventional oil or natural gas production;

"(B) which are brought to the surface in connection with the withdrawal of natural gas from underground storage reservoirs;

"(C) which are brought to the surface in connection with the production of geopressured methane;

"(D) for enhanced recovery of oil or natural gas;

"(E) for storage of hydrocarbons which are liquid or gases at standard temperature and pressure.

"(3) Nothing in paragraph (1) shall affect any well which injects fluids for extraction of minerals or energy, including, but not limited to:

"(A) mining of sulfur by the Frasch process;

"(B) solution mining of minerals;

"(C) in-situ combustion of fossil fuel; and

"(D) recovery of geothermal energy to produce electric power.

"(c) LIQUIDS IN LANDFILLS.—Not later than one year after the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982, the Administrator shall promulgate final regulations which minimize the disposal of liquid hazardous waste, and free liquids contained in hazardous waste, in landfills. Pending promulgation of such regulations, the Administrator shall maintain the current requirements in regulations under this section respecting the disposal in landfills of liquid hazardous waste and free liquids contained in hazardous waste.

"(d) LAND DISPOSAL REPORTS.—The Administrator shall, not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this subsection, and after notice and opportunity for public comment, publish and submit to the Congress a report listing those hazardous wastes for which one or more types of land disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment based upon the toxicity, mobility, persistence, and ability of the waste to bioaccumulate. The report shall also identify hazardous wastes for which there exists one or more technologically feasible means of treatment, recovery, or disposal (including incineration, neutralization, fixation, chemical destruction, or any other means of thermal, chemical, physical, or biological treatment, recovery, or disposal) other than land disposal which will protect human health and the environment. The report shall include an assessment of the costs of such other means of treatment, recovery, or disposal. The report shall also include an assessment of other hazardous wastes which are unsuitable for other means of waste treatment or disposal. The report under this subsection shall be modified and supplemented from time to time after its initial publication as new information becomes available.

"(e) RESTRICTIONS ON LAND DISPOSAL.—Not later than 9 months after the date on which the report is required to be published under subsection (d), and from time to time thereafter, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations respecting those hazardous wastes for which land disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment based upon the toxicity, mobility, persistence, and ability of the waste to bioaccumulate. Such regulations shall contain effective dates that take into account the Administrator's best estimate of the amount of time necessary to install nationwide sufficient capacity of alternative treatment, recovery or disposal methods identified pursuant to section (d). After any effective date such prohibition shall not apply when it can be demonstrated on a case-by-case basis that capacity for such alternative means of disposition is not reasonably available. Factors to be considered in determining reasonable availability shall include, but shall not be limited to, geographic proximity and the nature of particular wastes. For purposes of such regulations, the Administrator shall—

"(1) consider the ability of land disposal facilities to contain hazardous wastes over time;

"(2) consider alternative treatment methods;

"(3) examine the actions taken by State governments with regard to such controls; and

"(4) review all halogenated organic wastes.".

SEC. 6. (a) NOTICE.—(1) Section 3010 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting the following after the first sentence thereof: "Not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of this sentence—

"(1) the owner or operator of any facility which produces a fuel (A) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, (B) from such hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material, (C) from used oil, or (D) from used oil and any other material;

"(2) the owner or operator of any facility which burns for purposes of energy recovery any fuel produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains used oil or any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001; and

"(3) any person who distributes or markets any fuel which is produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains used oil or any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 shall file with the Administrator a notification stating the location and general description of the facility, together with a description of the identified or listed hazardous waste involved and, in the case of a facility referred to in paragraph (1) or (2), a description of the production or energy recovery activity carried out at the facility and such other information as the Administrator deems necessary. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'hazardous waste listed under section 3001' also includes any commercial chemical product which is listed under section 3001 and which, in lieu of its original intended use, is (i) produced for use as (or as a component of) a fuel, (ii) distributed for use as a fuel, or (iii) burned as a fuel. Notification shall not be required under this subsection in the case of facilities (such as residential boilers) where the Administrator determines that such notification is not necessary in order for the Administrator to obtain sufficient information respecting current practices of facilities using hazardous waste for energy recovery. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the provisions of section 3001(b)(3). Nothing in this subsection shall affect regulatory determinations under section 3012 (as amended by the Used Oil Recycling Act of 1980)."

(2) Section 3010 is amended by striking out "the preceding sentence" and substituting "the preceding provisions".

(b) STANDARDS.—Section 3004 of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(e) HAZARDOUS WASTE USED AS FUEL.—Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this subsection, and after notice and opportunity for public hearing, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations establishing such—

"(1) standards applicable to the owners and operators of facilities which produce a fuel (A) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or (B) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material;

"(2) standards applicable to the owners and operators of facilities which burn for purposes of energy recovery any fuel produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001; and

"(3) standards applicable to any person who distributes or markets any fuel which is produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001—

as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such standards may include any of the requirements set forth in paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (a) as may be appropriate. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the provisions of section 3001(b)(3). For purposes of this subsection, the term 'hazardous waste listed under section 3001' includes any commercial chemical product which is listed under section 3001 and which, in lieu of its original intended use, is (A) produced for use as (or as a component of) a fuel, (B) distributed for use as a fuel, or (C) burned as a fuel.

"(f) LABELING.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, it shall be unlawful for any person who is required to file a notification in accordance with paragraph (1) or (3) of section 3010 to distribute or market any fuel which is produced from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 if the invoice or the bill of sale fails—

"(1) to bear the following statement: "WARNING: THIS FUEL CONTAINS HAZARDOUS WASTES", and

"(2) to list the hazardous wastes contained therein.

Such statement shall be located in a conspicuous place on every such invoice or bill of sale and shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layouts, or color with other printed matter on the invoice or bill of sale.".

SECTION 3005 PERMITS

SEC. 7 (a) FINAL PERMIT.—Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(g) RELEASES.—Any permit (other than a permit treated as issued pursuant to subsection (e)) issued to a treatment, storage, or disposal facility under section 3005 (or under an authorized State hazardous waste program under section 3006) shall, in addition to other applicable requirements, address any release of hazardous waste from such facility which occurs prior to the date of issuance of such permit. Such permits shall include schedules and provide financial assurances for addressing such releases where the required action cannot be completed prior to permit issuance. The permit provisions required under this subsection shall not apply to any portion of the facility at which hazardous waste treatment, storage or disposal activities do not take place.

(b) EXPANSION DURING INTERIM STATUS.—Section 3005(e) of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "The Administrator shall promulgate regulations under which any owner or operator of a treatment, storage, or disposal facility operating under interim status pursuant to this subsection who expands the capacity of the facility (except the capacity for storage or treatment in tanks or containers and enclosed waste piles) by an amount in excess of 10 per centum of the capacity specified in the permit application shall be required to obtain a permit under the provisions of this section prior to construction of such expansion. The regulations of the Administrator under this subsection may, in the discretion of the Administrator, contain standards for facilities which expand such capacity by 10 per centum or less and such standards may vary from the standards applicable to those facilities operating pursuant to a permit under this subsection which do not expand such capacity.".

TIMETABLE FOR REVIEW OF EPA PERMIT APPLICATIONS

SEC. 8. Section 3005(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "PERMIT ISSUANCE.—" and by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(2)(A) Not later than the date four years after the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982, in the case of each application for a permit for a land disposal facility under this section which was submitted before such date, the Administrator shall issue a final permit pursuant to such application or issue a final denial of such application.

"(B) Not later than the date six years after the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Reauthorization Act of 1982, in the case of each application for a permit for any facility under this section (other than a facility referred to in subparagraph (A)) which was submitted before such date, the Administrator shall issue a final permit pursuant to such application or issue a final denial of such application.

"(C) The time periods specified in this paragraph shall not apply in the case of any State which is administering an authorized hazardous waste program under section 3006. Interim status under subsection (e) shall terminate for each facility referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) on the expiration of the four- or six-year period referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B), whichever is applicable, unless an application is filed for a permit under other provisions of this subsection within such four-year or six-year period, as the case may be.".

NATIONAL GROUNDWATER COMMISSION

SEC. 9. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a commission to be known as the National Groundwater Commission (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Commission").

(b) DUTIES OF COMMISSION.—The duties of the Commission are to:

(1) Assess generally the amount, location, and quality of the Nation's groundwater resources.

(2) Identify generally the sources, extent, and types of groundwater contamination.

(3) Assess the scope and nature of relationship between groundwater contamination and groundwater withdrawal and develop projections of available, usable groundwater in future years on a nationwide basis.

(4) Assess the relationship between surface water pollution and groundwater pollution.

(5) Assess the need for a policy to protect groundwater from degradation caused by contamination.

(6) Assess generally the extent of overdrafting of groundwater resources and the adequacy of existing mechanisms for preventing such overdrafting.

(7) Assess generally the engineering and technological capability to recharge aquifers.

(8) Assess the adequacy of the present understanding of groundwater recharge zones and sole source aquifers and assess the adequacy of knowledge regarding the interrelationship of designated aquifers and recharge zones.

(9) Assess the role of land-use patterns as these relate to protecting groundwater from contamination.

(10) Assess methods for remedial abatement of groundwater contamination as well as the costs and benefits of cleaning up polluted groundwater and compare cleanup costs to the costs of substitute water supply methods.

(11) Investigate policies and actions taken by foreign governments to protect groundwater from contamination.

(12) Assess the use and effectiveness of existing interstate compacts to address groundwater protection from contamination.

(13) Analyze existing legal rights and remedies regarding contamination of groundwater.

(14) Assess the adequacy of existing standards for groundwater quality under State and Federal law.

(15) Assess monitoring methodologies of the States and the Federal Government to achieve the level of protection of the resource as required by State and Federal law.

(16) Assess the relationship between groundwater flow systems (and associated recharge areas) and the control of sources of contamination.

(17) Assess the role of underground injection practices as a means of disposing of waste fluids while protecting groundwater from contamination.

(18) Assess methods for abatement and containment of groundwater contamination and for aquifer restoration including the costs and benefits of alternatives to abatement and containment.

(19) Assess State and Federal groundwater law and mechanisms with which to manage the quality and quantity of the groundwater resource.

(20) Assess the adequacy of existing groundwater research and determine future groundwater research needs.

(21) Assess the roles of State, local, and Federal Governments in managing goundwater quality and quantity.

(c) MEMBERSHIP.—(1) The Commission shall be composed of seventeen members as follows:

(A) Four appointed by the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives from among the Members of the House of Representatives, two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce;

(B) Four appointed by the majority leader of the United States Senate from among the Members of the United States Senate;

(C) Eight appointed by the President as follows:

(i) Four from among a list of nominations submitted to the President by the National Governors Association, two of whom shall be representatives of groundwater appropriation States and two of whom shall be representatives of groundwater riparian States;

(ii) One from among a list of nominations submitted to the President by the National League of Cities;

(iii) One from among a list of nominations submitted to the President by the National Academy of Sciences;

(iv) One from among a list of nominations submitted to the President by groups, organizations, or associations of industries the activities of which may affect groundwater; and

(v) One from among a list of nominations submitted to the President from groups, organizations, or associations of citizens which are representative of persons concerned with polution and environmental issues and which have participated, at the State or Federal level, in studies, administrative proceedings, or litigation (or any combination thereof) relating to groundwater; and

(D) the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment.

A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. Appointments may be made under this subsection without regard to section 5311(b) of title 5, United States Code. Not more than two of the four members appointed under subparagraph (A) and not more than two of the four members appointed under subparagraph (B) may be of the same political party. No member appointed under paragraph (C) may be an officer or employee of the Federal Government.

(2) If any member of the Commission who was appointed to the Commission as a Member of the Congress leaves that office, or if any member of the Commission who was appointed from persons who are not officers or employees of any government becomes an officer or employee of a government, he may continue as a member of the Commission for not longer than the ninety-day period beginning on the date he leaves that office or becomes such an officer or employee, as the case may be.

(3) Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission.

(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), members of the Commission shall each be entitled (subject to appropriations provided in advance) to receive the daily equivalent of the maximum annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including travel time) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Commission. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistance, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(B) Members of the Commission who are Members of the Congress shall receive no additional pay, allowances, or benefits by reason of their service on the Commission.

(5) Five members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum but two may hold hearings.

(6) The Chairman of the Commission shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives from among members appointed under paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection and the Vice Chairman of the Commission shall be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate from among members appointed under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman of the Commission shall serve for the life of the Commission unless they cease to be members of the Commission before the termination of the Commission.

(7) The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of its members.

(d) DIRECTOR AND STAFF OF COMMISSION; EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—(1) The Commission shall have a Director who shall be appointed by the Chairman, without regard to section 5311(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(2) The Chairman may appoint and fix the pay of such additional personnel as the Chairman considers appropriate.

(3) With the approval of the Commission, the Chairman may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5 of the United States Code.

(4) The Commission shall request, and the Chief of Engineers and the Director of the Geological Survey are each authorized to detail, on a reimbursable basis, any of the personnel of their respective agencies to the Commission to assist it in carrying out its duties under this section. Upon request of the Commission, the head of any other Federal agency is authorized to detail, on a reimbursable basis, any of the personnel of such agency to the Commission to assist it in carrying out its duties under this section.

(e) POWERS OF COMMISSION.—(1) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out this section, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate.

(2) Any member or agent of the Commission may, if so authorized by the Commission, take any action which the Commission is authorized to take by this section.

(3) The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

(4) The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(5) The Commission may secure directly from any department or agency of the United States information necessary to enable it to carry out this section. Upon request of the Chairman of the Commission, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(f) REPORT.—(1) The Commission shall transmit to the President and to each House of the Congress a report not later than October 30, 1985. The report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Commission with respect to each item listed in subsection (b), together with its recommendations for such legislation; and administrative actions, as it considers appropriate.

(2) Not later than one year after the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall complete a preliminary study concerning groundwater contamination from hazardous and other solid waste and submit to the President and to the Congress a report containing the findings and conclusions of such preliminary study. The study shall be continued thereafter, and final findings and conclusions shall be incorporated as a separate chapter in the report required under paragraph (1). The preliminary study shall include an analysis of the extent of groundwater contamination caused by hazardous and other solid waste, the regions and major water supplies most significantly affected by such contamination, and any recommendations of the Commission for preventive or remedial measures to protect human health and the environment from the effects of such contamination.

(g) TERMINATION.—The Commission shall cease to exist on October 30, 1985.

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal years 1983 through 1985 not to exceed $7,000,000 to carry out this section.

PRESERVATION OF OTHER RIGHTS

SEC. 10. Section 7002(f) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "section" and substituting "Act".

SEC. 11. Section 1004(27) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "The Administrator shall promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to protect human health and environment ensuring that the use, reuse, recycling, and reclamation of hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 is conducted in a manner consistent with such protection.".

SIZE OF CERTAIN FACILITIES

SEC. 12. (a) Section 4001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "In developing such comprehensive plans, it is the intention of this Act that in determining the size of the waste-to-energy facility, adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs of the recycling and resource recovery interest within the area encompassed by the planning process.".

(b) Section 4003 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsection (c) at the end thereof:

"(c) SIZE OF WASTE-TO-ENERGY FACILITIES.—Notwithstanding any of the above requirements, it is the intention of this Act and the planning process developed pursuant to this Act that in determining the size of the waste-to-energy facility, adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs of the recycling and resource recovery interest within the area encompassed by the planning process.".

DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

SEC. 13. Section 4008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(h) RECYCLING INTERMEDIATE PROCESSING CENTER.—(1) The Administrator is authorized to make grants to local government authorities to construct demonstration recycling intermediate processing centers. Such grants may also be used for the acquisition of lands necessary for such centers, notwithstanding subsection (a)(2)(A).

"(2) Grants under this subsection may be made only to a local government unit which demonstrates a successful past experience in multimaterial curbside source separation programs at the municipal level. Grants under this subsection may be made only to a local government unit which has approved, and expressed its intention to carry out, a plan for a recycling intermediate processing center which—

"(A) is part of a county-wide recycling program that includes curbside collection of recyclable material and central processing at the intermediate processing center;

"(B) projects commencement of operation of the center not later than October 1983; and

"(C) projects the processing at such center of an annual total of not less than 21,000 tons of recyclable material within 3 years after commencement of operation.

"(3) No grant may be made under this subsection to the local government of any political subdivision having a population of less than 175,000 or greater than 225,000. Not more than $900,000 of the funds made available under subsection (a)(3)(C) may be used to make grants under this subsection.

"(4) Section 8004 shall not apply to any grants made pursuant to this subsection.".

Mr. FLORIO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I would at the outset publicly express my appreciation to all who have been involved in fashioning this compromise proposal.

The substitute makes several technical and substantive changes to H.R. 6307:

Regarding small generators, the bill explicitly modifies the administrative and managerial requirements for these generators prior to the actual disposal or treatment of the wastes. However, when wastes are taken to be treated or disposed of, the wastes must go to a proper hazardous waste facility, and not a sanitary landfill or municipal dump. For example, the maximum storage period for smaller generators is extended to 180 days from 90. This means that smaller generators would only be required to dispose of their wastes twice a year, but that it be done properly.

In addition, the provision as amended by the substitute would allow smaller generators to identify their wastes at the more general level of process identification rather than individual chemical structure. Thus, for a generator who knows or believes his waste to be hazardous, he could identify it at a more general level for purposes of labeling, manifesting and waste identification on the condition that it was subsequently handled, transported, and treated or disposed of as a hazardous waste. In short, the provision allows such a generator to make a presumption of hazardousness in lieu of actual testing. At the same time, the provision does not allow a waste to be presumed nonhazardous without testing or some previous demonstration. The generation is still responsible for correctly identifying whether a waste is hazardous, and for knowing whether they generate sufficient quantities and types of hazardous waste to come under the requirements of this provision.

Section 4 of the substitute incorporates the Public Works Committee amendment on the disposal of hazardous wastes into sewer systems.

Section 5 makes a number of technical changes to the underground injection prohibitions, and incorporates a requirement to impose restrictions on the land disposal of certain hazardous wastes as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. This latter amendment embodies the approach of the LaFalce amendment, and is a much needed addition to the bill.

Section 6 is amended to require that only hazardous wastes listed or identified under the regulations will be considered for controls when burned in boilers. This section also requires that 12 months postenactment, and the Agency will concurrently publish a notification requirement for those who burn, blend, or distribute fuels containing hazardous wastes, and that such fuels be labeled so that consumers are aware of the hazardous waste content of any fuels they may be buying.

For purposes of this provision, the term "distribute and market as a fuel" is not intended to encompass those operations which only collect used oil and in turn sell that material to collectors for purposes of recycling, such as many service stations currently do. The bill is concerned with hazardous waste and used oil collection facilities and operations, as these types of facilities have been involved in the practice of blending, distributing, and marketing waste containing fuels. However, it is the committee's belief that service stations which only collect used oil have not been a major source of concern.

Similarly, for purposes of notification the Agency is given the discretion to not require notification from certain operators that produce, burn, distribute or market a fuel derived from or which contains hazardous wastes on the basis of the smaller size of the operation. For example, residential boilers should not have to notify. With regard to service stations, the Agency may want to include such operations in the class of facilities that are not required to notify, however, this determination is left to Agency discretion based upon its evaluation of the nature of hazardous waste management at service stations and the need for such information in developing a complete and accurate picture of fuel production, distribution and burning from hazardous wastes.

Material which is released during the process of re-refining or reclaiming used oil is not intended to be considered as "production of a fuel" for purposes of this provision.

Regarding the standards for the burning of hazardous wastes in boilers, the committee believes that these requirements could take the form of facility standards and/or fuel content standards.

Section 7 is amended to clarify that permits can be issued prior to the completion of required actions on the condition that compliance schedules and financial assurances for such actions are specified in the permit.

Substantial demands are and will be made on the superfund for remedial action at abandoned and inactive sites. It is imperative that active sites, which seek a final permit, conduct or initiate the necessary cleanup or containment action prior to final permit issuance wherever possible and thereby prevent the transfer of responsibility for such action to the superfund program.

Section 9 incorporates the Public Works and Energy and Commerce Committee amendments to the National Ground Water Commission.

Section 11 requires the Agency to promulgate standards for hazardous waste recycling practices as necessary to protect public health and the environment.

Section 12 emphasizes that in the solid waste planning process, adequate provision should be given to both resource recovery and recycling technologies, and that these decisions remain at the local level.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GRAMM TO THE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAMM to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 3, strike out line 22 and all that follows down through line 16 on page 7 and substitute:

The Administrator shall, not later than three years after the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Reauthorization Act of 1982, complete a study and submit a report to the Congress concerning whether the provisions of regulations promulgated under this Act respecting hazardous waste generated by small generators in quantities of 1,000 kilograms or less per calendar month should be modified with respect to any class or category of hazardous waste.

"(2) The study required under this section shall include—

"(A) A profile of the generators, hazardous wastes, and waste management practices subject to such provisions;

"(B) an assessment of the hazards associated with such wastes and practices; and

"(C) an analysis of the regulatory alternatives to the exemption of such wastes from the standards under this subtitle, including an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of such alternatives.

"(3) At intervals of not more than one year, and not more than two years, after the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Reauthorization Act of 1982, the Administrator shall submit an interim report to the Congress setting forth a detailed statement of the status of the study required under this subsection.".

Mr. GRAMM (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. GRAMM was allowed to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM) is recognized for a total of 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Chairman, I would like first to begin by talking about how RCRA works today, about the cutoff in terms of the size of the generator.

I would like to talk about the restrictions imposed on the small generator under existing law and under existing regulations issued by the Environmental Protection Agency.

I would like to talk about the mountain of paperwork that they are currently exempt from under existing regulations at EPA.

I would like to talk about the confusion that exists concerning scientific data and its evaluation concerning the small generators, and I would like to argue for an amendment that sets up a study to get the facts before we begin the legislative process.

Currently under RCRA, we impose a mountain of regulations and redtape, and I believe rightly so, on those generators that produce more than 1,000 kilograms of hazardous waste a month. There are about 75,000 of those generators and, according to EPA, they generate about 99 percent of all the hazardous waste generated in the country.

Small generators that generate less than 1,000 kilograms per month are not burdened with the restrictions imposed under RCRA in terms of full reporting. It does not follow, however, that they do not face restrictions in the way that they dispose of hazardous wastes.

The existence of small and large generators, according to EPA, basically breaks down as follows:

Those that generate more than 1,000 kilograms a month make up about 9 percent of the total generators nationwide and they generate about 99 percent of the waste. Those that generate less than 1,000 kilograms per month compose about 91 percent of the generators and they generate about 1 percent of the waste.

Small generators are not exempt from regulations. Under existing procedures at EPA, they must determine if the waste they generate is classified as hazardous under RCRA. If the waste is so classified, they then must dispose of it either at an authorized hazardous waste management facility or at a facility approved by a State to receive municipal or industrial wastes.

Small generators are subject to penalties if they do not comply with existing regulations.

I think it is also important to note that we are talking about hazardous waste, not acutely hazardous waste. Under existing procedures, acutely hazardous waste under RCRA is regulated and the full RCRA requirements are imposed on anyone who generates more than 1 kilogram of acutely hazardous waste.

Finally, the small generator is currently subject to regulation by the States which have the power under RCRA and under EPA regulations to go far beyond those regulations imposed by EPA.

Now, what is the small generator exempt from if he is not exempt from regulations concerning the deposition of hazardous waste?

He is exempt from an avalanche of paperwork—paperwork from cradle to grave, a paper trail in multiple copies, all signed, all returned, all reported, all kept for at least 3 years; storage permits if he holds the waste for over 90 days, labeling, ID numbers, manifests, and logs.

Under the Carter administration, EPA considered whether to lower the cutoff point for RCRA compliance from 1,000 to 100 kilogram generations per month. They rejected that proposal at least until 1986 for two reasons: First, the enormous number of small generators in the country, and second, the costs that the restrictions would impose on small business.

I think it is important to note that EPA has the power to lower the exclusion to 100 kilograms per month if and when they find it feasible to do so. H.R. 6307, however, mandates that the administration take action that was not taken under the Carter administration and that has not been taken under the Reagan administration.

What our amendment to this substitute does is, quite simply, seek to get the facts. It seeks a study by the Environmental Protection Agency to generate a profile of those hazardous waste generators that produce between 1,000 and 100 kilograms per month. It seeks a study of their waste management practices under existing procedure. It seeks a study of the hazardous waste associated with those practices.

It asks for an analysis of regulatory alternatives to full RCRA or partial RCRA implementation. And finally, and I think most importantly, it mandates an analysis of the cost effectiveness of various alternatives.

It mandates that EPA report to the Congress at the end of 1 year, 2 years, and in a final study at the end of 3 years the results of this study and the answers to the questions posed in this substitute.

We do face genuine uncertainties. When the Office of Technology Assessment testified before the Florio subcommittee, they testified that 91 percent of small generators generated around 10 percent of the hazardous waste generated in the country. When they submitted their testimony in writing, they reduced that percentage to 6 percent. EPA concludes that the 91 percent currently exempt from RCRA generate less than 1 percent of the hazardous waste.

I would submit to this body that it behooves us, if we are going to impose regulations on hundreds of thousands of small businesses, that we do it knowing what the facts are; that we get data to allow us to determine: First, is there a problem; second, what the extent of the problem is; and third, what options we have in trying to deal with it.

I think it is also important to note that the Environmental Protection Agency supports the amendment that I offer with my colleague on the full committee, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY).

I read from a letter to the Honorable THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR., dated August 1, from Mrs. Anne Gorsuch:

> The Environmental Protection Agency supports the amendment introduced by Representative Phil Gramm.
> Mr. Gramm's substitute is a far more considered and careful approach to addressing the small quantity generator issue than section 3 of H.R. 6307. It would permit a careful assessment of what wastes from which small quantity generators should be regulated and how these wastes might best be controlled. It fits in well with the Agency's plans to analyze these issues in detail during the next few years.
> Further abrupt and across-the-board regulation of a huge number of additional generators of hazardous waste is likely to encourage illegal disposal practices. The result could have a serious detrimental net impact on the environment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to note that we are talking about a considerable amount of money in costs imposed on small business under the proposal made in H.R. 6307.

I have here a letter from the International Fabricators Institute, the trade association of the American dry cleaners, which indicates that their studies show that the full implementation of RCRA would impose a cost of $4,200 per laundry in the country, an amount roughly equivalent to the net profit after taxes earned by the family laundry last year.

I think it is also important, Mr. Chairman, to note that we are talking about support from American small business. We are not talking about an amendment that is going to benefit the petroleum industry or the chemical industry. We have had 72 trade, professional, and educational groups endorse this amendment, and I am not talking about just the Chamber of Commerce or the National Association of Manufacturers; I am talking about the American Hospital Association, the American Retail Federation, the Association of American Railroads, the Automobile Service Council, the Launderers, the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges, who would be affected and would bear the burden of costs from the adoption of H.R. 6307 unamended, the Association of Jesuit Colleges and Universities, the National Association of University and Land Grant Colleges, the National Odd Jobbers Council.

Mr. Chairman, we have proposed change in the amendment that is offered in the nature of a substitute. I have met with representatives of those groups who have endorsed my amendment. They do not believe that this substitute basically deals with the concerns of small business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. GRAMM was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Chairman, I believe that we have here a compromise between existing law and practice under the Carter administration and the Reagan administration and a proposal made by the committee. It is a compromise that proposes a study to get the facts and, on the basis of those facts, to have EPA either act on its own or be mandated to act by the Congress.

I ask my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FLORIO was allowed to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) is recognized for a total of 10 minutes.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, we have perhaps the most important element to date on this matter in this amendment.

The small generator loophole was the most serious deficiency in the existing RCRA system. Present EPA regulations, by the way, in opposition to the clear legislative language of the statute, have been drawn in such a way as to unequivocally exempt 92 percent of the Nation's hazardous waste generators from virtually all hazardous waste controls on the basis that they are small generators.

The net effect of this exemption is to explicitly allow generators of up to 2,200 pounds per month—that is, over a ton of hazardous waste per month—to dispose of their hazardous wastes into solid waste landfills or local dumps.

I distinguish between hazardous waste landfills and solid waste landfills that are not capable nor prepared to accept these types of materials.

These facilities are not designed to contain hazardous wastes, are incapable of protecting ground water supplies, and are the leading cause of the Nation's abandoned and leaking dumpsite problems.

According to EPA's own data, over 50 percent of the priority Superfund sites are such solid waste landfills or local dumps that have previously accepted hazardous waste materials.

The Office of Technology Assessment, the independent bipartisan arm of the Congress, estimates that this exemption allows up to 2.7 million tons, or 6 billion pounds per year of hazardous waste to be disposed of in sanitary solid waste landfills. This amount of waste is equivalent to 6.6 percent of the total waste stream in this Nation.

The Battelle Institute, a study that was also undertaken by EPA, has issued a similar estimate. They say it is 7 percent of the solid waste stream that goes under this exemption. The OTA report also states that "the scope and severity of the generation of hazardous wastes by small generators were greatly underestimated by the EPA."

While the gentleman from Texas emphasizes EPA's estimate, which has been criticized by OTA, is 1 percent of the national waste stream, the exact percentage, in my opinion, is irrelevant. Whatever percentage is put into the equation, we are still talking about billions of pounds of hazardous wastes potentially being put into our drinking water supplies.

Moreover, EPA in May of 1980 committed to a lowering of the small generator exemption based upon the very 1 percent estimate that the gentleman now refers to as the basis for his proposal of inaction.

The only thing that has really changed is EPA's policy on this very important issue. EPA now believes that the exemption is not a significant problem, despite the overwhelming additional evidence to the contrary.

EPA has even denied the waste disposal industry's petition to close this loophole. The agency also asserts that its previous study of the small generator exemption is sufficient, yet they support this amendment which does nothing more than to study the problem for an additional 3 years.

This is really a classic example of a calculated policy of inaction, groping around for a justification.

Earlier this year the public and the Congress were outraged, and appropriately so, when EPA lifted the ban on the disposal of containerized liquid hazardous wastes into hazardous waste landfills, that is, landfills that are supposed to be prepared to accept those materials.

Other provisions of this legislation deal with needed restrictions on the types of wastes that can be placed into hazardous waste landfills. However, unless similar restrictions are placed on hazardous waste disposal at solid waste landfills, the environmental consequences will be disastrous. This is because 92 percent of the hazardous waste generators can now freely dispose, under this exemption, of their hazardous wastes at local dumps, which are totally unsuited for receiving this type of material.

Consider the irony of the following situation: The current small generator exemption of 12 tons per year translates roughly into a volume of 60 drums. If a nonexempt big generator were to dispose of a load of 60 drums into a sanitary solid waste landfill, there would be public outrage. However, if a small generator, as defined by EPA, disposed of 60 drums of the same material, it is legal, although the fact of the matter is that the harm to the environment would be indistinguishable.

In devising a remedy for this serious loophole, the committee examined the report and the recommendations of OTA and the policies of 20 individual States that have already restricted or totally eliminated the small generator exemption.

I am going to, for a specific purpose, read the list of the States: Arkansas, California, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, and Washington. Parenthetically, I note that the State of Texas Department of Health is on the verge of lowering its own small generator exemption, according to information that we have from the Association of State and Territorial Solid Waste Management Officials.

I took the time to read this list for a very important reason: I do not know how any Congressperson from any of those States can support the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and then go home to his constituents and say that "We in our State have removed this exemption.

□ 1500

But I voted against making this a national standard such that State X, which is immediately adjacent to us, allows these 12 tons per year to be dumped in their landfill, infiltrating into the aquifer that knows nothing about State boundaries, which is now polluting our water."

This is a totally indefensible position. In addition, the Ashland Chemical Co., is already operating a small generator and waste collection and treatment service in 34 of its 60 major markets, many of which are in States that already restrict this loophole.

Let me deal finally with one of the arguments that I know is superfically very persuasive, the question about small business and the impact on small business of removing this loophole. The argument is that this is somehow antismall business. That is pure nonsense. I would ask any of the Congresspersons from those States that have already taken this action if they have had a whole lot of small business people beating down their doors, prior to the initial consideration of H.R. 6307, saying that retail cleaners are going out of business, gasoline stations are going out of business, because these 20 States have already taken that action. The answer is, they have not.

The reasoning is, we are not talking about "mom and pop" retail operations generating 12 tons a month of dioxin, of PCB's, or phosgene, or phenol. We are not talking about small businesses, average neighborhood stores. We are talking about relatively large generators of these wastes. Now is the time to act on this matter, and not to sanction, as the gentleman's amendment would, a fourth study on this issue, one that would take 3 years to boot.

The committee provision steers a moderate course based upon the experience of the States by lowering the level of the exemption within a 2-year period to one-tenth of a ton per month, while reducing the administrative and managerial requirements prior to disposal.

I would strongly urge support of the bill as presented, and opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman. I rise in support of the amendment. There are many provisions of this legislation that I believe serve important environmental needs, and the Committee on Energy and Commerce is to be complimented for supporting many improvements in the legislation. Unfortunately, the provision before us on small generators creates more problems than it solves. By agreeing to the Gramm amendment, we will be able to answer some of the remaining questions on the extent of this problem.

Others will discuss in greater length the difficulties the provision presents to thousands of small retail and service establishments across the country. There will also be discussion, with widely differing claims by opponents and proponents of the provision, of the volumes of material involved. In fact, the potential problems with the existing provision were discussed in the report of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. Although not an issue we could act on within the scope of our referral, the difficulties with the provision that came out during the public works hearings were important enough to be detailed in the report.

I would like to make just a couple of related points. First, the goal of this legislation is to protect the health of the American people and prevent abuse of waste disposal practices. The Committee on Energy and Commerce is to be commended for their efforts toward this goal. Everything reasonable should be done to go after the illegal dumper and those disposing of large volumes of material. The provision on small generators diverts us from this effort. We are all too aware of the fiscal limitations of the Federal Government, local and State governments, as well as private industry and the public. Let us put forth the funds and effort toward the major and illicit pollutors, rather than spending limited resources on creating additional bureaucratic redtape for the small businessman.

Second, there is still disagreement over the scope of the problem. There are claims that small generators may contribute anywhere from 1 to 10 percent of hazardous waste. When there is such a wide range of uncertainty, and so many thousands of companies affected, we had better make sure. The Gramm amendment does exactly this, by directing EPA to study and report on the scope of the problem and means for addressing it.

I want to close by again complimenting the Committee on Energy and Commerce for being willing to modify several provisions to improve the legislation. This small generator provision deserves similar modification. The changes made in the substitute offered today do not address the problem as well as the amendment. With the Gramm amendment language, I believe the legislation goes a long way toward meeting the Nation's environmental protection needs by improving the existing legislation without creating new bureaucratic complexities.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise to speak against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Gramm amendment. During the district work period, I used that opportunity to go into my congressional district and to talk to small generators. I visited an industrial laundry employing 100 minority personnel, jobs that we want to save and keep in our community. I went to another small generator in my district that processes metal finishings, again an employer of 50 or 60 people, many of them women and other minorities, status people. There are jobs that both my mayor and I want to keep.

They raised substantial questions in terms of the disposal of hazardous and toxic wastes as contained in our original proposal, but the arguments that they raised about their own concerns I believe have been dealt with in the Florio substitute: The reduction of paperwork, the different form of storage, the whole range of other items that the chairman of the committee has outlined I believe substantially reduces their concerns.

However, one of the things that emerged, whether one talks to the community or whether one talks to the businessmen and women involved, was an issue that they want legislation on this matter now. They tell me they cannot organize themselves and make the appropriate investments or even seek those kinds of mechanisms if they do not know what the rules of the game are; whether it is the community that is affected by the potential of hazardous waste or the businessperson who wants to be a good corporate citizen, they want to know what the rules of the game are and they do not need another EPA study.

Right down the street from one of the manufacturers of hazardous and toxic wastes was a little landfill called Monument Street Landfill. It is in my district, and it has been used to improperly dispose of hazardous and toxic wastes. Much of the material that we are concerned with has come from small generators. These are called small generators; they have been unnoticed, unmonitored, and unregulated, and have caused in my own community substantial concern about pollution and poison, so much so that the people of that community organized to take their case to the Governor of the State of Maryland in order to have some type of resolution done. Because of the accumulation of the disposal of small generation we know might constitute a danger in that community, and if the studies indicate what we fear, we might even have to apply to Superfund for it, not because there is one big dirty that dumped in Monument Street, but because there were a lot of little dirties over a number of years. They have said to the people of the community, "Don't worry, it won't hurt a little bit."

Now, we are afraid it is going to hurt a lot. Rather than be engaged in Superfund cleanup, I believe that an ounce of prevention here and now in the regulation of the small generator issue will save us a lot of heartbreak and community concern in the future.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. MIKULSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I certainly support what the gentlewoman has just said. During the recess a small generator of toxic waste in my district, who had gone bankrupt, sold some of the facilities that he had. The people who bought some of these facilities decided to open up a tank and find out what was in it. They turned one valve, and the fumes that came out nearly knocked them out. They managed to get away, but a toxic cloud of such magnitude ensued that the police had to evacuate 20 city blocks of a residential area.

□ 1510

Afterward when the toxic gas cloud had been dissipated by the wind so the people could come back to their homes the authorities found almost a hundred barrels of various types of toxic waste that had been accumulated over a period of time and stored on this man's property. EPA granted $50,000 in Superfund money to help clean it up because the generator was bankrupt and the city had no funds for that purpose.

The 100 kilograms of waste of some degree of toxicity might be enough to poison a whole city. So even the 100-kilogram limit is a compromise.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly commend the gentleman for introducing this 100-kilogram limit, and I concur in the statement the gentlewoman from Maryland (Ms. MIKULSKI) has just made.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there have been statements made to the effect that the bill before us merely fine tunes the basic RCRA law and that it represents a "delicate balance" between environmental and economic interests. That is simply not true. The bills as reported represent a major and even radical departure from the original act and from common respect for administrative and judicial decisions. In many ways it turns back the clock on the kind of reasonable regulatory reform that many of us have been working so hard to achieve.

We should recognize that the carefully crafted regulations which would be totally overturned without the pending amendment were not written by the much-maligned Reagan EPA, but by the Carter EPA which some of our colleagues hold up as a shining example of environmental sensitivity and concern.

The chairman of the subcommittee reporting the bill has charged that the EPA has now abandoned a commitment to regulate small generators within 2 to 5 years. Yet I have a copy of a letter from the EPA Assistant Administrator to the Speaker stating the Agency's intention to come up with a regulatory scheme for small generators within 3 years. Those plans fit very well with the pending amendments as offered by my colleague from Texas and myself.

So the question before us is whether we are to put the EPA in a legislative straitjacket or whether we are going to let reason and normal procedure prevail to come up with a workable approach to the problem of regulating small generators of hazardous waste.

If section 3 passes in its present form, a regulatory scheme designed for large manufacturers would be inflexibly applied to thousands of smaller businesses in vastly different circumstances. By any account, most of the waste generated is now fully regulated. The EPA says 99 percent, the OTA says 93.4 percent in their preliminary study. That is an important difference, but we need to nail it down to see the magitude of the problem. Our amendment would allow us to do that while continuing to regulate far over 90 percent of all hazardous wastes.

What kinds of effects would section 3 have if passed? According to the EPA 130,000 small businesses would be added to the program, tripling its present work load. Some proponents of section 3 have claimed that 700,000 businesses would be added. It is hard to believe that the supporters of a clean environment would choose to divert the EPA's resources from the 60,000 companies that produce over 90 percent of our waste to 10 times as many who cause less that one-twentieth of the problem.

EPA estimates that the businesses and groups that would be affected include: 56,000 gas stations, 14,000 auto repair garages, 6,000 dry cleaners and 2,000 hospitals as well as most high schools and virtually every college and university in the Nation.

Several of the Members of this body from time to time express a concern for small businesses. Well, there is nothing worse you could do for a small business than to add a minimum of $3,000 every year to their costs, yet that is what section 3 would do.

Finally, some proponents of section 3 have raised concerns about small quantities of toxic wastes. Yet the EPA already has a 1-kilogram limit for highly toxic wastes. I even read about threats of Kepone dumping in open landfills. Well, let me assure my colleagues speaking from the State that made Kepone a household word, it is no longer manufactured in the United States and its use has been banned for many years.

In short, section 3 represents a bludgeon approach against untold numbers of small businessmen and schools to solve a problem the magnitude of which we are not certain, but which, certainly, could be addressed in a more humane and cost-effective way.

I urge my colleagues to support the pending amendment.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the Gramm amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I had not planned to get up and speak today, but I sat here throughout the debate listening to those who spoke for and against the various amendments, and it brought me back to about a month or so ago to a hearing that was held in New York City by the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

At that hearing, Mr. Chairman, the General Accounting Office was asked to estimate how many illegal toxic dumps there might be in this country, and the answer was 50,000. Now, if that answer is anywhere close to a ball park figure, if we were to appropriate all the money that we spend on defense each year, we would not have enough money to clean up the mess—the dangerous mess, I might add—that is occurring in this country.

We are not going to cure this problem by having more studies. We in this House are going to have to look at this problem seriously, knowing that almost every neighborhood in this country in almost every congressional district is being impacted by illegal toxic dumps that are poisoning the people and perhaps even taking the lives of many of our citizens.

So when we have on one hand the question of paperwork that is being created by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT) and, on the other hand, the serious question of public health, I think the decision is easy.

I do not want to see the matter studied any more, Mr. Chairman. I think it has been studied enough. I think we have to stop the dumping that is going on. I think the initial bill, with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT) will do the job, and I urge my colleagues to oppose the Gramm amendment.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise just to correct a few of the points that have been made. One is the question, to put it in perspective, of the small quantity generator. We are talking about 12 tons a year qualifying as a small quantity generator by which someone is able to just randomly dump into a solid waste landfill, and that goes effectively unregulated. I think that is a serious point.

The question was asked, and the point was raised by one of the supporters of the Gramm amendment that we are talking about imposing upon the smaller people the full scope of RCRA regulations. We are not. We are specifically directing EPA to put together a second tier of regulations designed to take into account the unique problems associated with generating smaller amounts.

What we are saying is that they cannot dump it anywhere, but EPA has the discretion to come up with a lesser regulatory system. The provision in the bill is clear and unequivocal on this point. EPA has stated that that is what they committed to do prior to their change of policy.

I think it is also important to note that I heard someone say that by passage of this provision, that is, by nonpassage of the Gramm amendment, we are encouraging illegal dumping. I find this both specious and disingenious because what is happening now is that the equivalent of midnight dumping is taking place under full regulatory sanction. It is legal but inappropriate; it is legal but hazardous to the environment and the public health, and, therefore, we are going to try to prohibit that.

Does that make it illegal? I suppose, yes; it does.

□ 1520

But if you follow the logic of the proposal or suggestion about illegal dumping you might conclude that if we did not have a law against murder and we passed a law against murder one would say by virtue of passing that law we have converted ordinary citizens into lawbreakers; therefore, we should not have the law and we would have no lawbreakers.

I suppose we could get rid of crime by just repealing all of the criminal statutes and then we would have no violations of the Criminal Code.

I am stating that this is a serious environmental health problem. We are talking about massive amounts of waste. When you are talking about a few billion pounds versus a multiple of a billion pounds going into drinking water supplies, you are talking about a serious problem, a serious loophole that should be plugged.

Therefore I ask that we reject the Gramm amendment and go forward trying to plug these loopholes.

It is important to note that this country generates close to 100 million tons of hazardous wastes and 40 million tons of hazardous waste is regulated. About 40 million tons of hazardous wastes per year go through these loopholes. It is not regulated and is just scattered across the country.

This cannot continue.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I yield to the gentlewoman from Rhode Island.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. I would just like to point out in the State I represent, the State of Rhode Island, we have no exemptions whatsoever for any amount of hazardous waste that is generated. Yet my district is the home of numerous small jewelry industries and chemical manufacturing plants.

We have a situation in the State of Rhode Island where we have the State department of environmental management implementing these laws and industry working hand in hand because industry has come to realize that it is only by following the laws of disposing of hazardous wastes that we are able to protect: No. 1, the jobs within our State and, No. 2, the public health.

So we have an example that is already working which is the kind of example that I think lends credence to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentlewoman for that contribution. I think it is very important that she be in a position, and I know she is, to verify the fact that even though you go far beyond what EPA has done, we do not have dry cleaners closing, we do not have gas stations going out of business. All of these horror stories that are being talked about are merely the figments of someone's imagination.

I thank the gentlewoman and would like to insert in the RECORD at this time a factsheet on the "small generator" issue, and a partial list of the bill's endorsers.

"SMALL GENERATOR" FACTSHEET

PROBLEM

Present EPA regulations exempt so called "small generators" from virtually all requirements to properly manage and dispose of their wastes. A "small generator" is defined as anyone who generates up to one ton (100 kilograms) per month. 700,000 or 92% of the hazardous waste generators in the country presently qualify for this exemption (45 FR 33120).

This exemption means that 92% of the generators are not required to manifest their waste, keep any records, and most importantly are specifically allowed to dispose of their hazardous wastes at solid waste landfills and municipal dumps. These landfills and dumps are frequently nothing more than open pits which are incapable of containing hazardous wastes (particularly solvents). They have none of the design and monitoring safeguards for the protection of groundwater as would be found at a hazardous waste treatment or disposal facility.

In fact, according to EPA's own data submitted to the Congress, a majority of the priority sites that have been identified for cleanup under the "Superfund" program are solid waste facilities or municipal dumps that accepted hazardous wastes.

The Office of Technology Assessment (OTA), an independent, bi-partisan arm of the Congress, estimates that this exemption allows up to 2.7 million tons (6.0 billion pounds) of hazardous waste to be disposed of into sanitary landfills. This volume of waste is equal to 6.6% of the national hazardous waste stream.

REMEDY

The bill and its clarifying floor amendment will: lower the exemption level from one ton/month (1,000 kilograms) to one-tenth of that amount (100 kilograms); extend the provision's effective date to two years after enactment of the bill and concurrently provide self-implementing variances from administrative and managerial requirements prior to disposal; (i.e., extend the permissible storage period so that these generators could dispose of their hazardous waste only twice a year) and require that such generators dispose of their hazardous wastes at hazardous waste treatment or disposal facilities, not solid waste facilities or municipal dumps.

BASIS FOR COMMITTEE APPROACH

20 States had undertaken similar, or more stringent action to restrict this loophole including: Arkansas, California, Guam, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, and Washington.

In May, 1980 the EPA committed to reduce the exemption to 100 kilograms/month, the level sought by the provision. Moreover, EPA's commitment was based on its estimates that the volume of exempt wastes amounted to 1 percent of the national waste stream (45 FR 33103).

The OTA Report concluded that, "the scope and severity of the generation of hazardous wastes from small generators were greatly underestimated by the EPA." OTA goes on to recommend the precise remedy that is contained in H.R. 6307.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6307 and in opposition to all weakening amendments. Rhode Islanders are acutely sensitive to the threat that hazardous wastes pose to the public health, and with good reason—our State has the unfortunate distinction of having 3 of the 114 worst dumpsites in the Nation.

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act was established to protect the public safety by regulating the generation, transportation, and storage of hazardous wastes. H.R. 6307 would strengthen the act and help us make hazardous dumpsites—threatening our neighborhoods and destroying valuable residential property—a thing of the past.

I would particularly like to express my support of the provision in H.R. 6307 that would extend RCRA safety standards to companies generating between 200 and 2,000 pounds of hazardous wastes per month, which are now exempt under current law. I know that some have argued that small businesses would be subjected to an unreasonable burden of regulation by this requirement. I would ask that Members consider three points.

First, H.R. 6307 reduces the reporting burden for small businesses by allowing them to batch hazardous wastes for twice a year disposal. This is a reasonable compromise worked out by members of the committee, and it deserves our support.

Second, Members may be interested to know that my State of Rhode Island provides no exemption whatsoever from regulation for any amount of hazardous wastes. Whether you generate 10 pounds or 1,000, under Rhode Island law you are liable for the safe handling and disposal of hazardous wastes.

Has this forced our small businesses to shut down, or at least driven them out of the State? In fact, it has had no such effect.

Rhode Island is home to hundreds of small jewelry manufacturers and to large and small chemical processing firms. Both industries, which provide valuable employment in our State, have developed a positive working relationship with Rhode Island's Department of Environmental Managment. In fact, the State reports no complaints. It seems that both industries are working responsibly under State laws to control a problem that everybody in Rhode Island—no matter where they are employed—recognizes as serious.

Finally, although the amount of hazardous waste that would be covered by the new requirement in H.R. 6307 may seem small—somewhere between 1 percent and 7 percent of the total volume, depending on whose statistics you care to believe—the consequences of exempting that volume of waste from any regulation can be very serious. After all, it only takes a few irresponsible individuals to create a dump site dangerous to the public's health, and requiring the expenditure of millions of dollars for decontamination. Existing law, without the modification proposed by H.R. 6307, would exempt up to 6 billion pounds of hazardous waste from any effective Federal regulation. Can we really afford a loophole of that size when the public's health is at stake? I hope not.

Two amendments that will be offered to H.R. 6307 today deserve special notice. The first would increase the criminal penalties for the violation of statutes pertaining to the safe handling and disposal of hazardous wastes. I strongly urge the adoption of this amendment. If the criminals who play with the public's health for profit do not think we are serious about cracking down on hazardous waste violations, it is time they learned.

The second amendment would make it virtually impossible for States, cities, and private citizens to sue the EPA for nonenforcement of hazardous waste statutes. This amendment needlessly restricts the individual's and State's rights, and deserves to be defeated. If a citizen or State contends that an agency is trying to sabotage a law through administrative means, the courts should be available to resolve the dispute. That is a basic right that we should be protecting, not trying to weaken.

I ask my colleagues to support H.R. 6307, and to reject all weakening amendments.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there have been arguments already made here with respect to the economic impact that these proposed changes in law are going to have on these small generators. I will not argue that fact at this time.

Most of these generators are small businesses, schools, dry cleaners, hospitals, retailers, gasoline stations, and so forth.

I must concede that bringing them under RCRA is going to mean a tremendous economic hardship. It is going to mean time-consuming paper work requirements, sophisticated testing procedures and so forth.

But I want to talk for just a moment, if I could, about the problem that this is going to bring to the agency itself that has been charged with the responsibility and the duty of regulating under the law.

The Environmental Protection Agency in a letter to Members of Congress has said that the lowering of the small generator exclusion to 100 kilograms per month would substantially dilute its efforts to insure that waste produced by large generators is handled and disposed of properly.

I do not think that is what we want to occur as a result of the amendments that are being considered here today. We must face the fact that the large generators account for 95 percent-plus of the hazardous waste generated annually in this country.

When we consider that fact then this statement by the EPA is not a statement that we would dismiss lightly.

The gentleman from New Jersey was talking about the argument that was made about this amendment passing and thus encouraging illegal disposal practices. I think what the gentleman was referring to who made that argument is that we are going to be giving the EPA such a tremendous regulatory burden that many of the activities here are going to escape whatever regulatory scheme the EPA may come up with.

What the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM) is suggesting is a more constructive and sensible way to approach this small generator problem, and that is let us step back from it for just a moderate period of time and let us take a look at it; let us study and determine the feasibility and the methods of regulating these small generators.

He would require a report to Congress on this study prior to the issuing of standards.

I might point out in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that the EPA already has the authority to regulate under the law these small generators. They have not chosen to do so.

I might point out that should the EPA choose under the Administrative Procedures Act to regulate small generators, it would seem to me that the small generators at least would have more ample opportunity to come forward in a rulemaking process, to be heard, to state their side of the case as to how such a regulatory scheme should be designed and to bring whatever knowledge they have to bear on the particular problem.

It seems to me that would be a far better way to approach this problem than the language that is in the bill. That is why I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM).

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM), and would like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL), who just spoke.

The small business community is overburdened by regulation. If there is a problem here, we need to take a look at it and study it.

As a very strong exponent of the small business community I would indicate one more time that the small business community had little or no opportunity to express itself in regard to this matter.

We support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM). We will have a considerable opportunity to study the issue and treat it in the way that it should be treated.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I would indeed.

Mr. GRAMM. I thank my colleague from Florida for yielding.

I would like to answer two points that have been raised in the debate.

First is the point about State action, that somehow if one's State has taken or contemplates taking action to set different standards for that State than the Nation mandates, that somehow that binds the Member of Congress in question to vote for imposing the State standards as Federal standards. That is a fallacious argument. I reject that argument and, quite frankly, I, too, have done a survey of the States which have imposed restrictions beyond the national standard. Exactly what one would expect to be the case is the case.

Most States that have in fact set more stringent standards have done so to meet specific State needs and in the process have carefully crafted exemptions which vary greatly from State to State.

Second, the points raised about the deserted dump site in Ohio and the question raised about illegal dump sites are interesting but irrelevant.

□ 1530

What we are talking about here is how we are going to deal with waste generated by laundries, by filling stations, by colleges, and by garages, and whether or not we are going to put on them the very heavy burden of RCRA. That is the issue, and it has nothing to do with existing waste sites that came into existence in the past, before RCRA was ever law, and now pose problems which we are trying to clean up.

Mr. IRELAND. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Chairman, I would conclude by urging the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM).

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GRAMM) to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GRAMM) there were—ayes 11, noes 13.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I might demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman that his request comes too late.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER TO THE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 30, strike out lines 7 through 10.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, to get an appreciation for the amendment now pending, it would be helpful, I think, for us to talk a little about how the law of nuisance, the common law of nuisance, developed in our country during its 200-plus years of history.

The law of nuisance says that you cannot use your property in such a way so as to interfere with your neighbor on his own land.

□ 1600

The 50 States of the Union, through their own State court proceedings have developed this common law of nuisance. This is to be constrasted with the so-called Federal law of nuisance. Any lawyer in this Chamber will immediately recognize this case from law school: Erie Railroad against Tompkins, decided by the Supreme Court in 1938, established as a principle that there is no such thing as a Federal common law in this country; that we have State laws dealing with nuisance, but no Federal common law.

This distinction is important in understanding the amer dment that I am now describing to the Committee. In 1976, Congress adopted the predecessor to the authorization bill that is now pending before the Committee dealing with hazardous wastes, and properly so.

We set forth in over a thousand pages a systematic method of dealing with the disposal of hazardous wastes by the 60,000 polluters in this country to which it is applicable. If you are in the business of disposing of waste, the one thing you want to know with certainty in the law is what you must do. Why? Because it is not going to be very profitable for your business if, after investing in the means of disposing of waste, the ground rules are changed. It just is not fair. This concept of fairness is at the foundation of the reason why I am offering this amendment because it says very simply that in the enforcement of this area of the law, the ground rules will come from the Federal law which we have adopted, the 1,000 pages plus, and the regulations adopted, by the EPA, and we will permit recourse, in addition, to the Federal law, a so-called Federal common law of nuisance.

Now, why is this important? It is important for the reason that businesses, cities, counties, disposing of waste, want certainty in their systems. For example, with respect to the city of Milwaukee, the State of Illinois got after the city in the last few years and took it to court, attempting to require that the city of Milwaukee follow certain procedures for disposing of municipal waste in a manner that was beyond the requirements of the existing Federal law.

The U.S. Supreme Court in that case, Milwaukee against Illinois, handed down a decision which said, in effect: "No, State of Illinois, you may not pursue relief based on any Federal common law that you may be able to find in our law. You will rely, State of Illinois, on the existing Federal statute. There is no Federal common law of nuisance. Thus reaffirming the decision of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins of 1938."

Incidentally, if the State of Illinois had been successful in that litigation, it would have cost the city of Milwaukee about an additional $1 billion for disposing of the wastes of that community beyond what they have already spent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DANNEMEYER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, what this legislation before the Committee will now do is, in effect, repeal the principle of the decision of Milwaukee against Illinois by, in effect, establishing the groundwork for people who make a living in the environmental community to contest whether or not what a city or county or State or a business does in the way of waste disposal or what a business has done in the way of waste disposal, whether it is in compliance with the Federal common law.

The thrust of the amendment is merely to say that in this effort, we will rely on what Congress has adopted and what the EPA has adopted in the way of regulations.

A plaintiff may not resort to a Federal common law of nuisance as a means of expanding the happy hunting grounds of litigation which they seek to pursue.

This is a fair amendment. The provision that I seek to delete in this legislation was adopted in the final moments of the committee deliberation on the representation that it was a technical amendment. It was far more than technical. I think we should adopt the amendment which would establish a fair basis for anybody disposing of waste in this country to know what the ground rules are.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PORTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman suggesting that the Milwaukee against Illinois case arose under this provision of Federal law? I thought that was under the Clean Water Act.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, it was under the Clean Water Act; that is right.

Mr. PORTER. How would the gentleman's amendment affect that situation, the Milwaukee-Illinois situation, assuming the court had decided it the other way around?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Well, the amendment that I am offering is merely to make clear that in this act, that any litigant who seeks to go to court would be limited to the provisions of the Resource Conservation Recovery Act, not be able to resort to any Federal common law. That is the applicability of the decision of the Milwaukee against Illinois case. Its principle is affirmed.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, it would not have an effect on interstate water pollution, is that correct, that is, the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Is the gentleman referring to the amendment that I am offering?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I do refer to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DANNEMEYER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to say to the gentleman that it would have no effect, but I cannot think of one that I can relate to the gentleman right now. I am not saying none exists; but I cannot think of one. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois can.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, it would not affect the Milwaukee-Illinois situation, for example?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. It would not.

Mr. PORTER. The gentleman is using it as an example of common law that would be superseded.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. That is correct. That is exactly right.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Section 10 makes a simple technical change to clarify congressional intent, to spell out the rights of all parties to seek relief under State and Federal common law for problems caused by improper disposal of hazardous and solid wastes.

This provision, although it affects RCRA, in response to one of the previous questions, does have an impact upon the Clean Water Act in the sense that certainly RCRA and the Clean Water Act interact. Hence, we see the jurisdictional overlapping between the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Congress never intended that RCRA was designed to replace the Federal common law of nuisance. I wrote the provision of the law, and I can authoritatively assert that that was not the intention.

□ 1610

EPA's regulation could not possibly cover all potential waste management problems. The use of the Federal common law of nuisance is especially essential in the interstate pollution cases where State principles probably would not apply beyond State boundaries.

The National Association of Attorneys General, the State law enforcement officers, vigorously support the need for section 10. It is an essential tool in their arsenal of enforcement mechanisms designed to prevent and prosecute illegal and unsafe dumping of wastes.

The attorney general's office of the State of New York testified before Congress that "the Federal common law is a necessary and basic element of our system of environmental law."

To vote for this amendment would contradict the policy of this House expressed just last month when it voted overwhelmingly to preserve a private right of action to challenge pesticide permits. EPA's own regulations issued in May 1980 state that "issuance of a permit does not authorize any injury to persons or property or invasion of other private rights, or an infringement of State or local laws or regulations."

EPA itself has recognized that there is a need to preserve other legal remedies. I would just call to the attention of the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) that he may be interested in knowing that the single largest source of air pollution in the Southern California Basin as reported to us by officials of the State is the BKK Landfill in West Covina. The emissions from this landfill are several times greater than even the Chevron Refinery. Yet, presently there are absolutely no air emission standards for hazardous waste landfills. This landfill is adjacent to large population centers, and without the common law remedy that will be precluded by the gentleman's amendment there potentially will be no remedy to deal with this particular problem.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Just so that I can get the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey straight, what the gentleman from New Jersey is proposing is that the body of law that is contained in RCRA is not the exclusive law, but someone can go into any one of the 400 Federal district courts around the country and attempt to have judge-made standards implemented by that particular court as a way of developing another body of law which may or may not be synchronized with RCRA?

Mr. FLORIO. That is not what I am advocating. What I am advocating is that there be a remedy and access to the courts to utilize the fully established body of Federal common law which is recognized throughout the courts of the United States.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. In the case of Milwaukee against Illinois, which the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) referred to, there the district court decided that the Clean Water Act was not the exclusive law that applied in this particular lawsuit, and the judge thereupon ordered a remedy that was separate and apart from the Clean Air Act, that required one community to spend over a billion dollars to have its effluents six times purer than the effluent that was admitted by the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed that decision, saying that the Clean Air Act was the exclusive remedy.

Does the gentleman realize that by renewing the Federal common law there may be as many as 401 separate bodies of law that arise out of section 10; one passed by Congress and 400 that are established by each Federal district court around the Nation.

Mr. FLORIO. The gentleman has talked about the Clean Air Act. That is not what we are dealing with today. The clear intention of the RCRA was that the Federal common law shall be an alternate remedy, and we are attempting to make that abundantly clear, that is to be distinguished from the situation in the Clean Air Act.

Section 10 makes a simple technical change to clarify congressional intent of the rights of all parties to seek relief under law for problems caused by improper disposal of hazardous and solid waste are preserved.

This provision effects RCRA only, and was congressional intent.

Congress never intended RCRA to displace the Federal common law of nuisance. RPA's regulation could not possibly cover all potential waste management problems.

The use of the Federal common law of nuisance is especially essential in interstate pollution cases where State principles probably would not apply.

The National Association of Attorneys General vigorously support the need for section 10. It is an essential tool in their arsenal of enforcement mechanisms to prevent illegal and unsafe dumping of wastes.

The attorney general's office of the State of New York testified before Congress that:

The federal common law is a necessary and basic element of our system of environmental law.

To vote for this amendment would contradict the policy that this House expressed just last month when it voted overwhelmingly to preserve a private right of action to challenge pesticide permits.

EPA's own regulations issued in May 1980 state that "issuance of a permit does not authorize any injury to persons or property or invasion of other private rights, or an infringement of State or local laws or regulations." EPA itself has recognized that there is a need to preserve other legal remedies.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to delete section 10 from H.R. 6307.

Section 10 is a misguided effort to reverse the Supreme Court's argument in Milwaukee against Illinois in dealing with wastes covered by this act, when a reversal is neither necessary nor in the best interest of the environment. Adoption of section 10 would lead to greater confusion in an area where clarity and certainty are needed if the health and environment of this country is to be protected. It would be a serious and costly mistake for all concerned: businesses, property taxpayers, local governments, and environmentalists.

The Supreme Court, in Milwaukee against Illinois, did no more than apply a long established doctrine concerning the separation of powers between the Congress and the judiciary. The Court held that when an act of Congress, and the regulations issued under it, are so comprehensive, so as to occupy the field, there is no need or room for judge-made standards. Courts may not, therefore, interpose judge-made standards if the Congress has spoken.

Judge-made standards are just that, judge-made standards, even though they are embraced within a body of law which is referred to as the Federal common law. Federal common law is ad hoc. It is the aggregation of a body of individual judges' decisions responding to a series of individual problems. It is not a planned, cohesive, overall studied and consistent approach.

Section 10 would abrogate the planned and consistent statutory scheme of RCRA by permitting a Federal judge, under the guise of Federal common law, to impose different requirements than those found in the act and its regulations. In essence, section 10 would permit the courts to overrule Congress.

Thus, two sets of standard-making bodies would be established by section 10, Congress and the EPA on the one hand, and any one of the over 400 Federal judges on the other. To permit Federal judges, who lack the technical expertise in pollution issues, to take a crack at writing his or her own standards, would destroy the uniformity and certainty of the system. This would be catastrophic for all concerned: Businesses, property taxpayers, local governments, and environmentalists.

Businesses would be subject to different standards based entirely upon their location. A business located in a district where the Federal judge applied a lenient standard would obtain an economic advantage over its competitor, located in a district where the judge applied a strict standard, because the latter would have to pass along the higher compliance costs to their customers. Inconsistencies in standards could also lead to court shopping by businesses seeking to expand in regulatory favorable jurisdictions.

Local governments, after incurring million of dollars in designing and constructing pollution abatement facilities, would be forced to alter these facilities to conform to a judge's standard. Property taxpayers would have to bear the cost of this inefficiency. In the case of the city of Milwaukee, the local property taxpayers would have had to pay an additional $1 billion in taxes for the court-ordered improvements, which would not have been eligible for Federal aid since the EPA has ruled that the court-mandated standards were unnecessary and excessive.

Finally, environmentalists should also be concerned, for the litigation that section 10 invites, will not only delay but also kill badly needed pollution abatement projects.

If the proponents of section 10 desire stricter standards, they should seek enactment of those standards by the Congress, rather than giving each of the over 400 Federal judges a crack at drafting judge-made common law standards.

I, therefore, urge support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to the argument raised by my friend from Illinois (Mr. PORTER) in his colloquy with the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER).

□ 1620

I think that this would have an impact on Milwaukee versus Illinois and the Clean Water Act if substances that are controlled by RCRA find their way into a municipal pollution abatement treatment and end up having to be treated pursuant to the standards that the Clean Water Act imposes upon the municipality.

In response to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) I do believe that the lower court's decision in imposing a different body of law in Milwaukee versus Illinois will open a Pandora's box to different standards in different districts, with forum shopping either by environmentalists or by businessmen to secure the judge who is the most favorable to their own particular viewpoint, as well as causing delay in making the necessary improvement that protracted litigation requires.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of the amendment.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have been impressed by the arguments proposed by the able Members, both for and against the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER). I do not have the legal expertise to engage in debate with them over the effects of this particular amendment offered by the gentleman from California, and I merely want to offer a few comments based upon my own general experience with this kind of problem.

Many references have been made to the case of Illinois against Milwaukee. I think everyone is aware of the fact that this case was decided under the Clean Water Act, but perhaps some of the Members are not aware of the fact that there is a very real differences between the Clean Water Act and RCRA.

There is a much longer and more elaborate and detailed history of regulation of water in this country than there is of solid waste. While I have not researched it in preparation for this discussion, I know that regulation of the water supply, and pollution of the water supply in this country goes back more than 50 years, perhaps much longer than that, whereas regulation under RCRA is a relativley new field.

Now, what is the relevance of this? Basically, it would support the action of the judge in Illinois against Milwaukee in contending that there is a fully developed and very explicit set of standards under the Clean Water Act which would mitigate against use of the common law in making a decision on a matter involving water. Such is not the case with regard with solid waste disposal. We are not clear about all of the effects of improper practices in this field.

The gentleman from New Jersey made reference to a very well-known toxic waste dump in southern California, the BKK dump, which has features that affect the environment there in many different ways, and I personally am knowledgeable of other similar dumps which are operated in accordance with the provisions of RCRA and the appropriate State and local laws and yet which still create tremendous nuisance damages throughout the surrounding environment. I can take the Members to some of these and they can observe them, and I do not think there would be any question but what a legally operated dump can still create serious problems for which there need to be remedies.

Now, we had some discussion, as the gentleman from New Jersey again mentioned, of the appropriateness of various remedies under a similar act, FIFRA, just a few weeks ago, and this House by an overwhelming vote acted to adopt the principle that there should be private rights of action for damages which were not contemplated or spelled out in the act and which would be available to those who were affronted.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on this point?

Mr. BROWN of California. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I supported the amendment to allow a private right of action under FIFRA.

Mr. BROWN of California. And we appreciate that.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. And we were successful in that. But I believe there is an essential difference between that amendment which allowed a private right of action under an established body of law that was passed by the Congress and this issue under RCRA which allows the judge in effect to go either above or below the body of law which was passed by the Congress and adopt his own standards for better or for worse.

Now, I certainly would have no objection to allowing a FIFRA type private right of action under this bill where an individual citizen could go in and sue to get the enforcement of the protections of RCRA. But that is not what we are talking about here. We are in effect turning a blank check over to the Federal judges. Perhaps the gentleman has more confidence in what they would come up with than I do. Even the trial judge in the Milwaukee versus Illinois case said he really did not know the technicalities of what he was talking about.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. BROWN) has expired.

(On request of Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BROWN of California was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) for his contribution. It is obvious that he has made a detailed study of this matter, and I think his points are very reasonable.

I do not agree with the conclusions that the gentleman has reached on this matter because, as I perceive it, what the gentleman is seeking to do is to limit the recourse available under a very new act in which there is a relatively limited amount of details in the law and in the regulations, as compared, for example, with the Clean Water Act under which the ruling in Milwaukee against Illinois was made.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of California. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. BROWN) has very succinctly stated the case for opposition to this amendment.

We are talking about a relatively new regulatory system in which all the potential problems have not yet even been divined, much less been appropriately regulated. We, therefore, are asking that there be some residual authority on the part of the State officials, and I think it is very significant that the State attorneys general, the chief law enforcement officials of the States have specifically asked that this section be preserved so they can have the maximum number of tools for dealing with the problem of illegal dumping of toxic wastes.

To support the gentleman's amendment is to take away one of those potential tools that those law enforcement officials need, they think—and I believe that they do need it—in fighting illegal dumpers and dumping of hazardous toxic waste.

So, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his clarification.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) for his comments.

I think the time may come—and it may be relatively soon—when we will have fully developed and well codified principles of law in this field just as we have in the water field, and it might be unnecessary to have recourse to the common law, in which case I would be happy to see that time develop and I might even be willing to support an amendment such as the gentleman from California is offering at this time.

However, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the time is now, and I, therefore, am constrained to object to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER).

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER).

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Water Resources Subcommittee of Public Works and Transportation, I am very familiar with the problems associated with the Federal common law provision in section 10 of H.R. 6307.

Our committee has heard from representatives in industry and local sewer agencies of the severe negative impact that this provision will have on our Nation's cities.

In a recent Supreme Court decision concerning the Clean Water Act, the Court, in Milwaukee against Illinois, held that the comprehensive nature of the act preempted any Federal common law remedy that might have been available. The issue raised in section 10 with respect to the Solid Waste Disposal Act was considered in a pollution control context last year when I was a member of the conference committee on the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1981. The conferees agreed not to include the common law provision.

Section 10 would allow litigants to bring suit against owners and operators of hazardous waste facilities in Federal courts even though those operators may be operating in full compliance with the law and regulations. These owners and operators of hazardous waste disposal facilities that are in compliance with the law and regulations should not be subjected to the threat of Federal common law actions.

In its committee report, the Public Works and Transportation Committee expressed the deep concerns regarding section 10. In July, the Water Resources Subcommittee heard overwhelming testimony opposing the Federal common law provision during hearings on the reauthorization of the Clean Water Act.

In the final analysis, this amendment will prevent undue delays to our hazardous waste management program. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment and continue the progress in achieving a comprehensive and sound hazardous waste program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. DANNEMEYER) there were—ayes 15, noes 21.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will now record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Chappie for, with Mr. Pursell against.

Mr. Philip M. Crane for, with Mr. Craig against.

Mrs. BOUQUARD changed her vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FITHIAN TO THE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITHIAN to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 32, after line 7, insert:

HAZARDOUS WASTE FACILITIES OWNED AND OPERATED BY STATES OR POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS

SEC. 12. Section 104(c)(3)(C)(ii) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by striking out "owned" and substituting "owned and operated".

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment.

There are dump sites in the country which are owned and operated by municipalities, by counties, by States, and in many cases for profit. Under the present law, the cleanup of any disaster or any threat to health would under those conditions be split 50 percent Federal and 50 percent State or local, as it should be.

There is a second category of dump sites around the country, however, which do not fall in that frame of reference.

What I propose to do is clarify what I believe the committees of original jurisdiction intended when the Superfund law was drafted, for it seems clear to me that if a city or a county leases out—as one would do in an industrial park—leases land and then a private entity operates the dump site at a profit and subsequently, as in the case of the four dump sites which I cite in my discussion here, if they then operate it at a profit, go broke as in the case of Seymour, Ind., and disappear, they are leaving a city or a State tabbed with a 50-percent cleanup cost which was not the original intention of the law.

It is true that before the original passage of this act, that perhaps most of those operations were no violation of law nor were they violations of regulations because none existed. I think it is clear, however, that we should distinguish between a city or a county which operates a dump site at a profit and intentionally and now knowingly uses bad procedures and those which were not in any way knowingly at fault.

It is clear that we have dump sites in this category. We have located four. Our Committee on Government Operations had a hearing at one of the sites in Seymour, Ind. We believe sincerely that the EPA should have already moved to eliminate the threat to health.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITHIAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

□ 1700

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would say that I support this amendment as fully in accord with the intent of the legislation, the so-called Superfund, and I think it is a highly desirable piece of legislation.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITHIAN. I would be happy to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HAMILTON).

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me express my appreciation to the gentleman from Indiana for offering this amendment and the initiative that the gentleman has displayed in bringing it as an amendment to this bill.

As I understand it, the State now pays 50 percent of the cleanup costs if the site is owned by the State or a subdivision of the State. Under the amendment of the gentleman, the State would pay 50 percent if the site is owned and operated by the State or a subdivision, but the State would pay 10 percent of the cost if the site was owned but not operated by the State or subdivision thereof; is that correct?

Mr. FITHIAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HAMILTON. I think it is a very important amendment. It is the only way that I know that we can clean up the site at Seymour, Ind., at the present time. We have a very serious hazardous waste problem in that community now. It has stopped all economic development for a period of several years.

The State has not been able, or at least has been unwilling, to pick up its share of the tab; so is the case with the county and the city itself, and unless this amendment is adopted, I think it is unlikely that that site will be cleaned up. I am sure the same thing is true in a number of other sites in the country.

I commend the gentleman and I support his amendment.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITHIAN. I would be happy to yield to the ranking Member.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I am a little confused by the import of the amendment.

Is it a fact that under this amendment you would in effect have two classifications of municipal dumps, those municipal dump sites that are owned by the municipality and those dump sites that are owned and operated by a municipality?

Mr. FITHIAN. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. LENT. Under this amendment, if a municipality were to lease out, either at a profit or without a profit, the operation of the dump site to an independent operator, it could be relieved of much of the burden of the cost of a Superfund cleanup; is that not the case?

Mr. FITHIAN. Well, I will say to the gentleman, as the gentleman well knows, that we are now operating in an era when, thanks to the work of the gentleman and the gentleman from New Jersey, where regulations are being promulgated, this House and the other body have worked on it and we are operating in quite a different era.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FITHIAN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. FITHIAN. But many of the dump sites which we are now having problems with were created 20 or 30 years ago, long before RCRA, long before we had any body of either law or regulation to take care of that, and it is that kind of retroactive activity that we are trying to get at here.

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITHIAN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I totally agree with the chairman of the subcommittee, the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Indiana. In fact, during the discussions on the bill, the Superfund legislation, it was pointed out to me in discussions with the chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO), that definitely a site like the Gratiot County landfill, which was owned by the county and licensed by the State, but run by a private concern, was included in the intent of the legislation.

So I fully agree with the amendment of the gentleman and support his efforts.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITHIAN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if this amendment would permit land owned by a State or municipality on which hazardous waste was deposited by an entity other than that State or municipality, to qualify for a 90-percent share of cleanup costs under the Superfund program?

Mr. FITHIAN. That is correct.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Would it also specify that if the States or municipalities owned and operated these Superfund sites, they would qualify for a payment of only 50 percent of their costs?

Mr. FITHIAN. That is correct.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. FITHIAN. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. LENT. If there are two municipalities side by side, they each own a dump site; one municipality leases that dump site out to an operator, the other municipality operates the dump site itself through its own employees: Is not the effect of this amendment to place a higher burden of financial responsibility on the part of that municipality which both owns and operates the dump site?

Mr. FITHIAN. Well, I think it is clear that if a municipality, now that the regulations are laid out, cuts corners, operates at a profit and then expects the Federal Government to clean up 90 percent of their city dump, that is not what RCRA was designed for in the first place; so clearly, there should be a distinction.

What we are trying to do here is to get at those dump sites which have been developed over the years when there were no regulations. We have seen it in at least four cases in the United States where that is the case; the company has then gone broke. It is not there. The State does not have the money.

The fundamental question at issue in this amendment is whether or not we are going to proceed with cleaning up the dump sites. That is the fundamental issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FITHIAN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. FITHIAN. I would simply say to my friend, who has worked long on this legislation, that my amendment has the support of the National League of Cities and the Governors of Michigan and New York, in States in which dump sites similar to the one at Seymour, Ind., is located. It clarifies and it confirms what I believe to have been the original intent of the law, and it has been confirmed by my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan.

I would urge support of this amendment.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise to state my opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am very sympathetic to the plight of my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana, with respect to this particular site that he is concerned about in his own State; but I did want to point out that this amendment pertains to a statute that is not presently under consideration. This applies, this amendment applies to the Superfund legislation, not the RCRA legislation.

This is a subject where we have had absolutely no hearings. We do not know with any degree of certainty what the impact of this amendment will be. We do not know how many of these sites that are owned, but not operated by municpality or a State, may exist. There may be scores of them. There may be hundreds of them.

Perhaps, most importantly, the effect of this amendment if it is adopted will be to dissipate the available funds in the Superfund and make less funds available for cleanup of other sites, privately owned sites, sites where no owner can be found or if the owner can be found, where the owner is insolvent.

Now, one of the gentlemen who spoke earlier mentioned the GAO. The GAO estimates that there may be as many as 50,000 illegal hazardous dump sites in this country; so I would say to my colleagues, before you vote "yes" on this amendment, you had better realize that it could have the effect of delaying the date on which some other dump site in your district or State will be eligible for cleanup under this Superfund program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. FITHIAN) to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RINALDO TO THE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RINALDO to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 33, after line 7, insert:

CRIMINAL PENALTIES

SEC. 12. (a) Subsection (d) of section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "two years" in each place it appears and substituting "five years".

(b) Subsection (e) of section 3008 of such Act is amended by striking out "2 years" and substituting "five years" and by striking out "5 years" and substituting "ten years".

Mr. RINALDO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will strengthen the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act's criminal penalties for the illegal disposal of hazardous wastes.

Many of us know from problems in our districts the serious danger posed by illegal disposal of hazardous wastes to the public health and environment. We all know about Love Canal. In my district, the name Chemical Control calls forth the same dangers from improper disposal of hazardous wastes. I believe RCRA's criminal penalties should be strengthened and brought into line with other Federal felony penalties. Thus, the amendment increases the law's maximum felony penalty from the present 2 years to 5 years, which is, typically, the maximum Federal felony penalty. In addition, the amendment changes to 10 years from 5 years the maximum penalty for a violation that places another person in danger of death, provided the circumstances manifest an extreme indifference to human life.

We know from the experiences of Love Canal, Chemical Control and other now infamous names that felony violations of RCRA are more serious than many other crimes and should carry the same penalty.

This amendment has been endorsed by leading environmental groups, including the Environmental Defense Fund, the Sierra Club, and the Natural Resources Defense Council. It will improve the deterrent value of the law and thereby safeguard the public health. I urge its adoption to make the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act a more effective means of curbing the illegal disposal of hazardous wastes.

□ 1710

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RINALDO. I would be glad to yield to my friend, the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have worked with the gentleman on this amendment. It is a desirable amendment and I would accept it.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RINALDO) to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER TO THE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 30, after line 6, insert:

ATTORNEY'S FEES

SEC. 11. Section 7002(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "to any party" and substituting in lieu thereof "to the prevailing or substantially prevailing party".

Renumber the following section accordingly.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed this amendment with the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT) and I would now offer a unanimous-consent request to modify it as follows, and it would then be acceptable, and it would be acceptable to the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) as well.

Page 30, after line 6, insert:

SEC. 11. Section 7003(e) is amended by inserting the following after the first sentence: "Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to affect the power of any court to award costs or fees under any other authority of law."

With that provision, making that unanimous-consent request——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would insist that the gentleman submit the modification to the Clerk for its perusal.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I would make that unanimous-consent request and then the gentleman's amendment, as so amended, is fine, desirable, and I think it is a healthy addition to this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, after line 6, insert:

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 11. Section 7003(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting the following after the first sentence: "Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to affect the power of any court to award costs or fees under any other authority of law."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) to modify the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER)?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, we have examined the amendment. If the gentleman has no objection to the modification to the language of his amendment, it is certainly agreeable to the minority.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the language.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER), as modified, to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The amendment, as modified, to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO)?

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I do so to take this opportunity to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

I serve as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, which has joint jurisdiction in certain areas with the subcommittee that has presented this bill.

There is one area and one problem that recently has come to our attention that I would like to get some opinion and view of the distinguished subcommittee chairman on, and that is this: The Environmental Protection Agency, which has the responsibility of identifying certain sites which contain hazardous and toxic wastes, has the responsibility of trying to identify the generators of that material in these abandoned sites and require them, rather than the fund and the taxpayers, to pay for the cleanup. They created the problem; they have the responsibility of paying for it. Yet, based on preliminary information, it appears that the Environmental Protection Agency is not vigorously pursuing these types of identifications followup, and in many instances are letting the large generators string them along for periods of time, and in many instances end up with sweetheart-type settlements rather than full responsibility.

I wonder if the chairman of the subcommittee has any information or view on this problem.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVITAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct with regard to the responsibilities under the law. EPA, for any moneys that are paid out of this fund, is charged with the responsibility of pursuing those who cause the problem. As a matter of fact, Congress provided an easier standard for that pursuit, strict liability. EPA is charged with going after those people.

The gentleman is probably making reference to what it is I have been seeing in the newspaper, where, as EPA comes upon a site and finds a number of generators and it appears that some of the wealthier generators are allowed to enter into settlement contracts, thereby absolving them from any further responsibility, EPA then goes and expends its money and the residual number of generators that are left that EPA can pursue under strict liability may not have the wherewithal to provide for reimbursement, the result being that the fund is depleted.

So I am very concerned about that apparent initiative that is being pursued by EPA. It is my intention and my committee's intention to pursue and look into this practice that appears to be followed by EPA.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me so that I may engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee?

Mr. LEVITAS. Let me complete this one comment, and I would then be happy to yield to the gentleman.

I appreciate the chairman's response. I think it is a very, very serious problem because I think the American people, the American taxpayers and the American public may get jerked around to a very expensive tune if EPA does not vigorously go after the people who have created the problem and make those responsible pay for it.

Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee with respect to section 3 of the substitute, am I correct in my understanding that for purposes of satisfying waste identification, manifesting and labeling requirements, that it would be sufficient to make such identification on the basis of process identification such as dry cleaning solvents and metal plating wastes?

Mr. FLORIO. Yes, the gentleman is correct in his understanding. Generators may even make presumptions that their wastes are hazardous and treat them accordingly, thereby alleviating any requirement to test the waste. However, generators are responsible for knowing whether or not they are hazardous waste generators.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I have a question with respect to section 11, the recycling provision of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, is this provision intended to apply to recyclers who do not deal with hazardous waste?

Mr. FLORIO. The answer is no.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO), as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the Energy and Commerce Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The Energy and Commerce Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PRICE) having assumed the Chair, Mr. MOAKLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6307) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1983 and 1984, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 545, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

□ 1720

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 317, nays 32, not voting 83, as follows:

Mr. CARMAN changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mrs. BOUQUARD, Mr. MOORE, and Mr. SILJANDER changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DIRECTING CLERK OF THE HOUSE TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 6307, RESOURCE CONSERVATION AND RECOVERY REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1982

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 6307, the Clerk be authorized to correct section numbers, punctuation, page and line numbers, and cross-references and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, referring to rollcall No. 311, the vote on H.R. 6307, the bill which just passed the House, I was unavoidably detained and could not be here in order to cast my vote in favor of it.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 1409, AUTHORIZING ENLARGEMENT OF BUFFALO BILL DAM AND RESERVOIR IN WYOMING

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1409) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain modifications of the existing Buffalo Bill Dam and Reservoir, Shoshone project, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program, Wyoming, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment to the House amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment to the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona? The Chair hears none and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. UDALL, KAZEN, PHILLIP BURTON, SEIBERLING, MILLER of California, COELHO, LUJAN, CLAUSEN, and PASHAYAN.

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 6068, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1983

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 6068) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, for the intelligence community staff, for the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and disability system, to authorize supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1982 for the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of August 19, 1982.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. BOLAND) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. ROBINSON) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. BOLAND).

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this House has spent long hours in the consideration of next year's Defense budget. Issues resolved in the authorization process will be revisited in the Defense appropriation bill. There has been—and will be—full and lengthy debate on the state of the national defense—with one significant exception.

That exception, of course, is the intelligence budget, which is part of the overall Defense budget, but not publicly identified. It too has been the subject of congressional scrutiny and debate—but within the executive sessions of the Intelligence and Appropriations Committees. The procedures established by the Congress for this consideration require this closed door approach. They are essential to protect the viability of intelligence sources and methods. At the same time, however, such consideration does not occur in a vacuum.

President Reagan campaigned for office on a platform of rebuilding the intelligence community. Adm. Bob Inman, the former Deputy Director of Central Intelligence, recently characterized as "marginal" U.S. intelligence capabilities directed against a host of Third World and economic issues. While each of these positions is subject to qualification, they indicate real concern in the executive branch.

That concern has led to intelligence reappraisals not unlike those directed at the larger Defense Establishment. It has led to requests for a larger intelligence budget. More importantly, however, it has led to the beginnings of a planning process that can look ahead in 5-year spans instead of the traditional year-by-year approach.

The Congress has been receptive to many of the improvements developed in the process—both last year and in this year's intelligence authorization conference report. This year the intelligence committees have not adopted all of the budget proposals put forth for fiscal year 1983. Nonetheless, the committees encourage the forward looking aspects of intelligence planning and budgeting. While the committees will continue to require the provision of budget detail as in the past, they see the real value of a comprehensive, multiyear approach to intelligence community enhancement. The advantages of this system will increase as budgets are squeezed in the outyears and necessary adjustments are made.

Mr. Speaker, there is significant real growth in intelligence funding authorized by this conference report. If the intelligence community sticks to its future plans and commitments, the fiscal year 1983 intelligence budget can contribute significantly to improvements in intelligence capabilities. The Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence has played a role in bringing this comprehensive approach into being. We wish to see it retain and enhance its credibility in the future.

Mr. Speaker, the disposition of all budgetary matters at issue in conference are contained in the classified annex to the joint statement. The annex is available to all Members of the House during business hours. I urge Members to take the opportunity to review it.

Besides budgetary matters. The conference report retains the provisions of the House bill with the following three exceptions.

The House conferees accepted a Senate provision empowering the Director of Central Intelligence to authorize additional civilian personnel in fiscal year 1982 above the limit set by the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1982 when he finds it necessary to the performance of important intelligence functions. This authority will be used to hire new employees in several critically important fields.

The House conferees accepted a Senate provision exempting the CIA from the Brooks Act, which provides for uniform Government coordination of purchases of advanced data processing equipment, maintenance and repair. The exemption is identical to that approved by the Congress last year for all Department of Defense intelligence ADP purchases.

Last, the conferees agreed on a modified version of provisions extending a retirement equity to former spouses of certain CIA employees. Although different in drafting style, the House and Senate versions were very similar. The conferees did agree to two Senate provisions which were not in the House bill. Coverage is provided to qualifying ex-spouses of CIA employees even if the employee eventually retires from another Federal agency, and any lump sum disbursement in lieu of retirement benefits made to retiring CIA employees requires the concurrence of the employee's spouse.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report makes important improvements in legislation and in intelligence funding. It deserves the approval of the House and that of the President. I urge its adoption.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 6068.

It would authorize appropriations and establish personnel end strengths for the intelligence activities of the United States and is the result of many months of exhaustive examination of the intelligence needs of our Government.

With regard to the tactical intelligence activities of the Department of Defense covered in title I, conferees from both the Intelligence and Armed Services Committees worked together to resolve differences and where there is overlapping jursidiction, funding authorized by this bill is fully consistent with that provided in the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1983.

The Chairman has summarized the major differences between the remaining six titles of this report and the original House bill. I will not repeat them. Details of all of these matters are contained in the classified schedule of authorizations and a classified annex to the joint explanatory statement. These documents have been available for review by Members in the committee offices in the Capitol.

I have participated in consideration of every item contained in the conference report and I fully support it. Intelligence continues to receive the strong bipartisan support it needs and deserves.

This is not to say there were not some disagreements as to the proper resolution of some issues at conference. I can say, however, the conference recommendation is a compromise which I believe represents a fair and balanced reconciliation of the two authorization bills. Moreover, while slightly below the President's request, it provides for real growth in intelligence funding over last year's levels and some modest increases in personnel needed to support the intelligence programs and activities essential to our national security and foreign policy.

I urge Members of the House to adopt this conference report.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ).

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the distinguished chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise only to raise a question that, for some reason or other, has been agitated. I have had some inquiries.

As I understand it, the original 1947 Security Act provided very explicitly that intelligence activities, particularly the Central Intelligence Agency, would not in any way provide domestic jurisdiction. Does that still hold true? Or does that in any way change or modify by virtue of this legislation?

Mr. BOLAND. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman raises a good question. Let me indicate to the gentleman what he says is in the 1947 statute is still there—that is, that the CIA shall have "no police, subpena, law-enforcement powers or internal security functions"—and whatever action this committee has taken does not change that provision of the National Security Act at all.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the distinguished chairman.

● Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join Chairman PRICE in urging that the intelligence activities conference report be adopted. The Armed Services Committee and the Intelligence Committee have worked closely to insure that both the Defense authorization bill and the intelligence authorization bill reflect consistent actions on matters of shared jurisdiction.

I, too, would like to congratulate the Intelligence Committee, its staff, Chairman BOLAND and Mr. ROBINSON, the ranking Republican member of the committee, for their excellent work on this most sensitive and critical piece of legislation.●

● Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 6068, the fiscal year 1982 intelligence activities authorization bill. As the membership is aware, the Armed Services Committees over matters pertaining to intelligence related activities. In this regard, I would like to note that the fiscal year 1983 Defense authorization bill and intelligence activities authorization bill are in conformity as they relate to intelligence related activities.

I would like to congratulate the Intelligence Committee, its staff and Chairman BOLAND and Mr. ROBINSON, the ranking Republican member of the committee, on another job well done and I urge that the conference report be adopted.●

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1983.

I would like to focus my remarks on one of the act's legislative provisions, title VI, which adopts for the CIA the same provisions concerning retirement and survivor benefits for spouses and former spouses of CIA officers who serve overseas as were established for their colleagues in the Foreign Service by the Foreign Service Act of 1980.

This provision was included in the authorization bill reported by the Intelligence Committee upon the unanimous recommendation of the members of the Subcommittee on Legislation—which I have the good fortune to chair.

The provision recognizes that CIA spouses who serve overseas do so under difficult and sometimes dangerous circumstances, perform valuable services for their country, contribute immensely to the success of the mission of the CIA officers to whom they are married—and, because of the unique circumstances of their service, are unable to acquire transferable job skills or vested pension rights of their own, and thus are often in financial peril when a divorce occurs after many years of marriage.

Too often, the financial difficulties are exacerbated by the spouse's unfamiliarity with State divorce laws and by the spouse's understandable reluctance, after years of CIA life, to reveal to a lawyer or judge all the circumstances which would aid in an equitable monetary settlement but which may involve classified information, or which may involve information which the employee spouse, for his own benefit, suggests should remain confidential.

Title VI attempts to bring some equity to this situation by treating CIA spouses similarly to Foreign Service spouses. It does this by establishing for the spouse a vested interest in the employee's retirement benefits by entitling the employee's former spouse to a pro rata share of the employee's retirement annuity, survivor's benefits, and lump-sum disbursements made from the retirement fund.

To qualify, the former spouse must have been married to the CIA employee for at least 10 years during the employee's CIA service and both parties must have served at least 5 years overseas.

To protect fully the interest of the employee, and to recognize that it is the local courts that should and do administer our domestic relations laws, title VI provides that the pro rata share it grants can be reviewed, modified, or rejected altogether by spousal agreement or by the State court granting the divorce.

As I noted when title VI passed the House last May, it will provide some assurance to dependent spouses who have served the CIA and their country well that they will not become impoverished in their retirement years following a divorce.

I urge adoption of the conference report.●

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

MOSCOW HELSINKI GROUP FORCED TO DISBAND

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to address the house for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I report the formal dissolution of the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group, announced this morning in Moscow by Elena Bonner, the wife of exiled Nobel Peace Prize laureate Andrei Sakharov.

Founded in May 1976 under the leadership of now imprisoned Prof. Yuri Orlov, the Moscow Public Group to Promote Observance of the Helsinki Agreements in the U.S.S.R., has come under seige since its inception. Referring to this cruel persecution of the monitors, Ms. Bonner cited the possible prosecution of 75-year-old group member Sofya Kalistratova as the reason for calling a final halt to the group's activities. Sofya Kalistratova, who suffers from a heart condition, was first informed by Soviet authorities on December 24, 1981, that she faces possible criminal charges of anti-Soviet slander. This Monday, she was again threatened with prosecution as part of an official campaign to pressure the three Moscow group members still at liberty into silence.

I deplore the Soviet repression which has forced an end to the noble work of the Moscow Helsinki Group. The Moscow group, however, lives on through its 200 documents—based on information from many Soviet citizens—which bear testimony to the Soviet people's desire to see their Government live up to its Helsinki human rights pledges. The Soviet Government has undertaken a systematic campaign of repression against the Moscow, Ukrainian, Lithuanian, Georgian, and Armenian Helsinki Groups: The 38 currently imprisoned members of these groups are serving a total of 355 years of imprisonment. Despite Soviet claims to have "wiped out" dissent in the U.S.S.R., I am confident that Soviet citizens will still speak out for their rights. We in the West will continue to defend their right to do so.

SOVIET VIOLATION OF HELSINKI ACCORDS

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Florida on bringing this issue to the forefront of this Congress and to the American people. I think it is instructive to consider the relationship between the Soviet Government and their own history of having signed the Helsinki accords and the fact that they have consistently violated these accords time and again with their own citizens and citizens of countries that are directly under their jurisdiction.

I think it is instructive for the American people to understand how the Soviet Union has treated the Helsinki accords because these are signed treaties, treaties perhaps equivalent to treaties which we would engage in with the Soviet Union, the subject of arms controls and that without incentives and for sure it is hard to find incentives for the Soviets to live up to their Helsinki responsibilities without incentives, arms control can be like the Helsinki accords violated at every turn.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. The gentleman is correct. Of course, the Helsinki accords are not formal treaties between nations. They are certainly formal commitments of principles to the people of the countries who sign the Helsinki accords.

The Soviets have made it quite clear they are not going to give their citizens, any of them, any rights under those accords.

Mr. RITTER. I thank the gentleman for his point.

UNCONVINCING OPPOSITION TO H.R. 5252

(Mr. LUKEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks, and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I would like to draw attention to a publication in which there is incorporated the remarks of one James Sheets of the Laborers International Union, as we resume our deliberations in the Committee on Energy and Commerce on the Clean Air Act amendments.

Mr. Sheets is one of two contributors to this publication, both of whom are labor union representatives. This emphasizes the fact that the Clean Air Act amendments are promoted primarily by those who are interested in jobs, whether they be on the labor or management side of the picture.

In the remarks, and I quote:

UNCONVINCING OPPOSITION TO H.R. 5252

(By James Sheets)

Both the intensity and the shrillness of opposition to H.R. 5252, proposed Clean Air Act amendments are, or should be, unconvincing to the public.

The nature of the bill, which is basically moderate, simply does not deserve the demagogic violence of reaction that has come from the environmental community.

Fortunately, the Auto Workers will address the complexities of Title II, the mobile source portions of the bill, so I will restrict my remarks here to the main elements of Title I and their effect on the construction of new stationary sources. Further, I will focus here on the two or three elements of Title I that have been most commented on by opponents of H.R. 5252. Examining the literature of opposition to the bill, it would seem that the key elements of opposition are against the extension of deadlines, the elimination of offsets in nonattainment areas, and the elimination of monitoring and modeling requirements in Prevention of Significant Deterioration (PSD) Class II and III Areas.

Much has been made of the so-called "unnecessary" extensions of deadlines in H.R. 5252. The argument itself is a canard since the bill, when passed, will not extend anyone's deadlines itself. Indeed, it is very specific that those areas that can meet the 1982 deadline for achievement of the National Ambient Air Quality Standards must do so. Instead, H.R. 5252 provides administrative means for extending deadlines in very specific areas where the magnitude of clean air problems has made it impossible to meet the 1982 date. In this element, H.R. 5252 squares exactly with the recommendations of the National Commission on Air Quality that uniform national deadlines be abandoned.

The original Clean Air Act and its 1977 successor were unrealistic on the question of deadlines in two regards. The designers of the bill underestimated the magnitude of air quality problems or, perhaps conversely, overestimated the resources society was willing to put into clean air. Those assumptions led them to set uniform deadlines of 1975 in the original bill and 1982 in the current Act. In simple fact, NCAQ and other objective observers have uniformly realized that there were a number of problem areas that were not amenable to such uniform deadlines and, indeed, some which would not, without the imposition of severe limitations, be able to meet the NAAQS within the foreseeable future.

The second fallacy was to write the Act so that states were the basic unit for judging compliance with the Act. Every state has both attainment and nonattainment areas, and the Environmental Protection Agency quickly realized in 1979 that it could not even administer the State Implementation Plan requirements on a state-wide basis. This led to a massive administrative amendment of the Act to allow the administrator to act on SIP's partially and conditionally, without specific authorization in the language of the Clean Air Act. Intransigent air problems in specific metropolitan areas will have to be met by site-specific actions. H.R. 5252 will allow planning on that basis.

Finally, the simple fact is that Congress must do something about the deadlines. If the Act is not amended by December 31, 1982, nonattainment areas will receive either relief from the deadlines or punishment for failure to meet them. It is doubtful that governors, mayors or congressmen are going to be willing to face the political prospect of widespread punishment. The real question is whether the relief should be in the form of general extensions of deadlines for a limited period, or an administrative procedure such as the one embodied in H.R. 5252.

Of the two, my choice would go to the administrative procedure. Congress has made the experiment of uniform deadlines twice now, and both times the experiment has failed. There is no reason to think a third attempt would be more successful, and there are more productive ways for Congress to spend its time than meeting every two or three years to debate a new and equally futile deadline for the Clean Air Act.

As an administrative tool, the idea of required offsets in nonattainment areas was another flawed notion in Clean Air Act administration. The flaws, in this case, were obscured for quite some time and, indeed, still are obscured in part by the delay in completion of the SIP process. The most important part of Clean Air Act administration, considering the number of sources involved, has always been the requirement for Reasonably Available Control Technology (RACT) on existing facilities. After all, existing facilities will always outnumber new ones by several orders of magnitude and, since most of them in this period of time were in operation prior to passage of the Clean Air Act, RACT obviously would attack the overwhelmingly greatest source of air pollution.

Unfortunately, the requirements of RACT depended in large part upon guidelines which were to be laid down in the state implementation plans. Since many states still do not have fully approved SIPs, their RACT requirements are, to some extent, speculative. However, most states have gone ahead with RACT regulation. As these regulations are implemented, they will quickly eat up any available supply of offsets.

But above all, as costly and inefficient as offsets are, they are not aimed at a significant air quality problem. In a number of states, studies show that the total contribution to air pollution inventories from new facilities—with installed Best Available Control Technology (BACT)—amounts to less than 1 percent of the total. Offsetting such emissions, sometimes at great cost, does not seem a significant contribution to the ultimate achievement of clear air.

The cost of this policy creates a situation directly opposed to other important policies of our economic society. Imposing a costly requirement such as offsets on new capital development can only increase the movement of our economy toward large units—to the detriment of our long-held policy of encouraging small business. There are enough tendencies toward economic concentration in this country without adding one through the Clean Air Act.

Elimination of Class II and III PSD areas was a basic recommendation, with some modifications, of the National Commission on Air Quality, and the reasons for that elimination seem quite sound.

PSD requirements arising from the Supreme Court's determination in Alabama Power v. Costle were, at best, a theoretical construct which experience has demonstrated to be unworkable. NCAQ's examination of PSD transactions found, with practically no exceptions, that the process of monitoring and modeling consumed a great deal of money and time, but did not produce any useful information to guide the permitting process. In fact, in the overwhelming majority of cases, permitting agencies merely fell back on BACT determinations which could have been made many months earlier and thousands of dollars cheaper.

The present PSD requirements of the Clean Air Act are a classic case of administrative overkill. So complex and demanding are these requirements for the administrators of the Act that few states have even attempted to win delegation of PSD authority. This flies in the face of the clear congressional intent to make the states partners in Clean Air Act administration. Not only that, it creates the ludicrous situation of making EPA—itself not a large federal agency—responsible for case-by-case determinations on economic decisions in something like 85 to 90 percent of the United States.

After 10 years experience, it has become clear that the protection and promotion of clean air has certain basic elements. Preservation of the National Ambient Air Quality Standards under federal jurisdiction is basic, as is the requirement that the Best Available Control Technology be installed on new and modified plants and that there be rigorous enforcement of the requirements of the Clean Air Act.

Leaving aside the question of what may be expected from this or subsequent Administrations, H.R. 5252 provides the legislative framework for a "lean and mean" Clean Air Act which will far better serve both our economy and the goals of clean air than the present administrative hogwallow of regulation for its own sweet sake.

BILL GREEN ON THE TAX BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, Congress recently completed action on the tax bill known as the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982. This legislation is projected to raise $98.3 billion in new tax revenues and reduce spending by $17.5 billion over the next

3 years. This was a difficult vote for me. The bill contained some tax provisions which I believe to be bad tax policy, because they discourage badly needed personal savings. In particular, I am disturbed about those provisions which mandate 10 percent withholding on interest and dividends, which I had voted against when it came up in the last Congress, and discourage contributions to pension funds, which have been a major source of investment capital. The bill also required spending cuts in the medicare and medicaid programs. In general, I believe that such spending reductions in social programs should not occur while the defense budget spirals upward uncontrollably.

However, with these serious reservations in mind, I did support the tax bill. Hanging over almost every action taken by Congress is an expanding Federal deficit, which is estimated to be in the range of $109 to $114 billion in fiscal year 1982 and which the Congressional Budget Office estimated September 1 to be $152 to $155 in each of the 1983-85 fiscal years. That deficit has a profound effect on interest rates, which have remained at record high levels over the past several years and which impede economic recovery from the current recession and stifle the growth of our economy. I might add, the large deficit was the reason given by Common Cause and the American Association of Retired Persons when both organizations urged me to support this bill. This tax bill will directly reduce the deficit by $115.8 billion over the next 3 years. There will be $98.3 billion in tax increases and $17.5 billion in spending cuts for medicare, medicaid, and other programs. By reducing the deficit, interest rates may come down, which in turn will reduce the deficit even further. The Office of Management and Budget estimates that for every 1 percent decrease in Treasury bill interest rates, which reduces the cost of Federal borrowing, budget outlays, and hence the Federal deficit, are reduced by $4 billion.

A major factor in my decision to support the tax bill was a real possibility that, if this bill were defeated, another would be drafted and presented to Congress which would almost certainly be worse. This is not idle speculation. The administration requests for reductions in medicaid and medicare were far higher than those contained in the tax bill. In all probability, an alternative tax bill would include an oil import fee that would be devastating to the Northeast section of the United States. I favored repealing the generous tax breaks granted oil companies last year. While this year's tax bill did not rid the tax code of those tax breaks, it did not impose this burdensome new tax on our region.

I should also add that, if this measure had been rejected and another submitted for a vote, several of the important and beneficial items which I supported and which were contained in last year's $749 billion tax cut, might have been repealed. In particular, I refer to the mass transit leasing provision which I got into last year's tax bill and is a major component in the Metropolitan Transportation Authority's subway car and bus purchase program—it will save the MTA approximately $500 million. There was a great deal of pressure to scrap this provision this year and I fought successfully to retain it. Had this bill gone down to defeat, another one almost certainly would have quickly been written, and the mass transit provision would have been a prime candidate for repeal.

A second concern was the third year of the personal income tax cut. Many Members of the House were on record as supporting the repeal of the final 10-percent tax cut that is scheduled to become effective July 1, 1983. I have stated publicly on numerous occasions that we need the full 25-percent tax cut in order to provide redress to middle-income taxpayers for the full effect of inflation which pushes them into higher brackets.

A further reason for supporting this year's bill was that it contains several sections that are good tax policy, which close loopholes and assist in collecting revenue. Individual income tax provisions totaled $6.5 billion ($18 billion if the withholding provision is included) while business tax provisions came to approximately $50 billion. Finally, specific tax issues that many New Yorkers were concerned about, such as tax policy toward restaurants and the public utility dividend reinvestment provision, were resolved in ways that were beneficial to New Yorkers.

HOUSE VOTE

On Thursday, August 19, the House approved the tax bill by a vote of 226 to 207. This was the only time the House had an opportunity to consider this tax bill. The Constitution requires that tax legislation originate in the House, where the Ways and Means Committee writes the bill, the full House acts upon that legislation, and it is then sent over to the Senate for consideration. Except for a minor tariff provision approved earlier by the House, this bill essentially originated in the Senate. The Senate Finance Committee wrote the legislation, the Senate adopted it and then sent it to the House. What should have occurred was an opportunity for the House Ways and Means Committee to consider the bill and alter it in any way it felt appropriate, and, of course, a chance for the full House to consider and amend the bill. If this had happened, it is quite possible that the House might have eliminated or drastically modified the interest and dividend withholding provision, or changed the medicaid and medicare provisions. However, in an unusual procedure, this bill bypassed consideration by the full House. By a vote of 208 to 197, the House voted to go directly to "conference" with the Senate. A "conference" is a meeting of the House and Senate committees with jurisdiction over the legislation to resolve differences between the House and Senate versions. In this case, the conference had to resolve differences between a minor tariff provision (the House version) and scores of major tax changes (the Senate version). I voted against going directly to conference because I thought it violated the spirit of sound legislative procedure, if not the letter of the Constitution. It denied the Members of the House their right to develop a bill which reflected their views.

When the House-Senate conference committee completed its work, there was another opportunity for House Members to change the bill. The guideline or rule under which the House was to consider the tax bill allowed for no amendments whatsoever. There was an attempt to change that rule so that amendments could be offered. Unfortunately, I was again on the losing side of a 220 to 210 vote to revise the rule, and, consequently, no amendments were allowed. From the debate that day, it was clear that an amendment to eliminate the interest and dividend withholding provision would have been offered if the rule had been changed.

MAJOR TAX PROVISIONS

The tax bill contains approximately 50 revenue provisions which will raise taxes and increase compliance as well as changes in the medicaid, medicare, aid to families with dependent children, SSI, and unemployment compensation programs. I want to take the opportunity to explain some of these elements of the bill.

MASS TRANSIT PROVISION

In the 1981 tax cut bill, I negotiated a provision which would assist the Metropolitan Transportation Authority (MTA) and other public mass transit agencies in their acquisition of new rolling stock. In the MTA's case, this provision allows it to save the taxpayers 25 percent of the cost of a subway car and 14 percent of the cost of a bus. Given that the MTA has a $7.2 billion capital improvement program planned for the next 5 years, one can see how this provision can mean $500 million in savings for the MTA.

The mass transit provision had been a part of the safe harbor leasing section of the 1981 tax bill. Safe harbor leasing as applied other than to mass transit had been criticized for various abuses and an effort was undertaken either to repeal or revise the law dramatically. While mass transit leasing had not been abused at all, there were critics of the provision, and it became a real possibility that this important section of the law might be repealed or changed so that it would be rendered useless to New York City. However, others and I were successful in urging retention of the mass transit leasing provision, while eliminating some of the abuses that had developed in safe harbor leasing. The fact that we were able to do this was a major reason for my support of the tax bill. As a practical matter, defeat of this bill would have made it impossible for the MTA to continue to use the mass transit provision, in view of Senator Dole's announcement that he favored repealing it retroactively. I had a phone call from the MTA on the day before the tax bill vote reinforcing this point.

10 PERCENT WITHHOLDING ON INTEREST AND DIVIDENDS

The bill requires withholding at a flat rate of 10 percent on payments to individuals of interest and dividends. This provision was put into the tax bill based on the proposition that some individuals were not paying their taxes on interest and dividends. I believe that the tax evasion problem is not large enough to warrant an imposition of a withholding tax and, in effect, penalizes those people who have paid their taxes religiously. Further, through information returns, the IRS has all the information it needs to determine who is an evader and should match interest and dividend statements with taxpayers returns. As mentioned earlier, I had voted against such a provision in the past.

This being said, the provision is now in the law, though it will not become effective until July 1, 1983. The law does provide for several exemptions. Persons with $150 or less in interest will be exempt, as will individuals with prior year tax liability of $600 or less—$1,000 on a joint return. This provision has a much more profound effect on those elderly persons who often depend on their interest and dividends for living expenses. For persons over 65 years of age, there is an exemption from this law if an individual's tax liability in the prior year was $1,500 or less—or $2,500 or less on a joint return. This is estimated to mean that a single person over 65 with an income of $13,323 or less—or a couple with an income of $22,214 or less—will be exempt. Social security need not be included when estimating this income. The Internal Revenue Service will make exemption forms available to file with those banks, corporations, and other institutions that issue interest and dividend payments.

PUBLIC UTILITY DIVIDEND REINVESTMENT PLAN

The 1981 tax cut bill added a provision which allows public utility corporations to set up reinvestment plans under which shareholders electing to receive distributions in the form of common stock, rather than money, may exclude from their income up to $750 per year or $1,500 in the case of a joint return. The Senate had repealed this provision. I felt that this abrupt repeal after only 1 year in effect was unfair to investors who had purchased public utility stocks and was therefore pleased when the conference committee dropped this provision from the tax bill.

RESTAURANT TIPS

This provision will require restaurants with more than 10 employees to take 8 percent of the restaurant's gross income and the restaurant must report for each employee a share of that amount under the employee's name to the Internal Revenue Service each year. The IRS would use the amount reported as a bench mark to measure the accuracy of the amount of tip income reported by the employee.

BUSINESS ENTERTAINMENT DEDUCTION

While the tips section of the tax bill will add to the recordkeeping and paperwork requirements of restaurants, it is far better than the Senate provision for which it was substituted, that would have limited deductions for business meals to 50 percent of the cost of food and beverages unless one was traveling away from home on business. That provision would have fallen unfairly and inequitably on New York City, which has thousands of restaurants that cater to a business clientele and would have cost New Yorkers many jobs, at a time when unemployment is very high. There is no question in my mind that the conference committee chose the better of the two alternatives from New York's point of view.

MEDICAL DEDUCTIONS

Under present law, a deduction is allowed for those itemizing their income taxes of one-half of health insurance premiums up to $150, medical expenses in excess of 3 percent of a taxpayer's adjusted gross income and for the cost of drugs in excess of 1 percent of a taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The tax bill eliminates, effective tax year 1983, the $150 health insurance deduction and raises the medical expense deduction to 5 percent. Beginning in tax year 1984, the 1-percent floor for drugs will be eliminated and drugs will be redefined to include only prescription drugs and insulin. The major change in this section is the 3-to-5 percent change. However, it should be noted that this is far better than the change from 3 to 10 percent that the Senate Finance Committee had approved. While not ideal, I certainly see this modification as less harmful than what the Senate Finance Committee had adopted.

EXCISE TAXES

The telephone excise tax is raised from 1 cent to 3 cents effective January 1, 1983, stays at that level for 3 years, and then drops to zero after 1985. The cigarette excise tax is doubled from 8 cents to 16 cents until October 1, 1985.

PENSIONS

The tax bill restricted deductions for contributions to corporate pension plans, while increasing the contribution limit on Keogh plans.

For corporate, defined contribution benefit plans the maximum limit on contributions would drop from $45,475 to $30,000. For defined benefit plans, the maximum would drop from $136,425 to $90,000. These provisions become effective after December 31, 1982. Under present law, reasonable loans from pension plans are permitted. Effective on loans made after August 13, 1982, loans will be limited to $10,000, plus those loans up to $50,000 that do not exceed half the present value of the employee's vested benefits. Repayment must be within 5 years.

The limit for deductions for those contributing to Keogh plans, that is, pension plans for the self-employed, is increased from $15,000 to $30,000 effective tax year 1984.

TAX LOOPHOLES

There are several tax loopholes or tax breaks that reform-minded Members of Congress have been attempting to end for some time. This bill addresses some of them and creates greater equality in our tax system. Among these changes, the bill repealed a tax break allowing oil and gas companies to shelter income through the use of credits and losses from foreign oil and gas extraction and reduced several business tax breaks by 15 percent including special deductions for mining exploration and development and for depletion for coal and iron ore reserves.

TAX COMPLIANCE

It has been stated many times that there are always certain taxpayers who fail to pay taxes or do not report all their income. The result of this is a higher deficit and ultimately the burden being carried by the honest taxpayer. This bill had added provisions which will beef up tax compliance through enforcement and collection procedures. The bill instituted or increased penalties for many situations, such as substantial understatement of taxes, for promoting abusive tax shelters, for aiding and abetting understatements of tax, for failure to furnish information returns to taxpayers, and for substantial underpayment of taxes. The bill also included a section on increased taxpayer rights, including increasing the amount of property exempt from levy; requiring prompt release of liens; extending the redemption period for real property; and reimbursing taxpayers for property wrongfully levied upon at fair market value.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

Because the Federal unemployment law was changed last year, New York does not qualify at the present time for the extended benefit program that provides additional weeks of unemployment compensation beyond the basic 26 weeks of benefits. With an unemployment rate of 9.7 percent in New York City, many people are exhausting their benefits. The tax bill provides 8 weeks of extended benefits to workers in New York who have exhausted their 26 weeks of unemployment benefits. I supported a revision in the law to make New Yorkers eligible for additional benefits and I am pleased that this provision is in the bill. It will become effective September 12, 1982.

SPENDING PROVISIONS

As mentioned above, this bill also contained changes in guidelines governing certain programs which were made in order to reduce the amount of funds which would be spent in these programs. I shall describe some of these important modifications. I would add that I consulted a number of interested parties—Mayor Koch, the Washington office of Governor Carey, the Greater New York Hospital Association, the Democratic chairman of the House Subcommittee on Health and the Environment—about the medicare and medicaid changes. I found they were willing to accept this tax bill because they felt that, were the bill disapproved and sent back for revisions, the result would have been a bill imposing hardship to a greater extent than this bill would.

MEDICARE

Changes in medicare advocated by the Senate of which I disapproved included a provision seeking to impose a copayment requirement for home health services. I was pleased that this provision was rejected by the bill's conferees, as the elimination of this provision made the bill more attractive to me.

Desirable parts of the bill included provisions which will provide medicare coverage of hospice services, and allow medicare beneficiaries to participate in health maintenance organizations (HMO's). Savings were also made through changes in reimbursement and other procedures affecting providers rather than program participants. While I realize this will impose hardship on some institutions, I am glad that medicare beneficiaries will be spared from drastic changes in their coverage plans.

One new provision may result in increases in premium costs. The new law links the increase in premium charges to the rise in health care costs rather than the rise in the cost of living. As you may know, health care costs have been increasing rapidly than the general inflation rate. While this change does concern me, I do feel that other suggested modifications which were rejected would have had significantly more adverse effects. I felt that I should settle for this because more harsh ones could have been offered and I was pleased that in some cases it extended coverage.

MEDICAID

The bill also included some changes in the medicaid program aimed at making savings. Unfortunately, the new law permits States to require that beneficiaries make copayments for services. However, I am pleased that it also allows for outpatient treatment of disabled children. It also permits states to place liens on the property of permanently institutionalized beneficiaries in order to recover medical incurred on behalf of the beneficiary.

AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

The tax bill included changes in the formula used to determine benefit amount in this program which will result in additional limitations on benefit amounts. It addition, the new law permits States—which administer the program—to impose a work requirement on program participants, and charges them an increased penalty for high error rates. Although I take issue with these reductions at a time military spending is escalating, again, had this bill been rejected, the bill written and offered to replace it would have almost certainly imposed more harsh changes in these vital human service programs.

SUMMARY

While I continue to have serious concerns about various provisions of the tax bill, on balance I believe Congress took the right action in approving this legislation. I would have preferred a bill that did not contain reductions in spending for social programs, though I believe this legislation will have a minimal effect on the recipient and I am convinced that, if this bill had been defeated, the alternative offered would have been much worse. The mass transit provision is a similar case. Approximately $500 million in savings to the MTA and taxpayers of New York City would likely have been placed in jeopardy if this bill had been defeated. The possibility of an oil import fee being imposed in a redrafted bill was a factor that I had to consider. The overriding need to reduce the deficit was an issue with which I was concerned. Any burden this tax bill imposes must be considered in light of what could have been and the benefits to New Yorkers in law that were preserved.●

NAVY SAYS CHAUFFEURS NOT NEEDED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, during the congressional recess just completed, I had the opportunity to spend some time visiting the naval headquarters of our Pacific Fleet in San Diego, Calif. While there were many interesting and satisfying aspects about the condition of the U.S. Navy's operations at Miramar Base and other naval installations there, the thing that impressed me the most was the fact that many of the top officers, including Adm. George M. Furlong, drove their own cars on official business. Maybe "no chauffeur" is not everything, but it certainly is something. What I saw of the Navy in San Diego tells me that it is a lean, tough organization. That is what we need more of these days throughout our entire Armed Forces.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, in the 6 years I have been privileged to serve in this House of Representatives, I have voted to correct the neglect of our Armed Forces during the previous decade. Nonetheless, I would like to see a leaner, tougher and less top-heavy national defense program for the United States. I think it might be a very good thing for all top Government officials, including admirals, generals, and Members of Congress, to cut back on the so-called perks as we rearm this country's defenses and rebuild confidence in America in other ways as well.●

THE 43D ANNIVERSARY OF THE INVASION OF POLAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the month of September marks the 43d anniversary of the invasion of the country of Poland, and the beginning of one of the most tragic and destructive wars in recent history—World War II.

Throughout history, Poland has served as a bulwark of Christian civilization in Europe, restraining the Tartars and the Turks as they plundered and pillaged across the continent. But in the fall of 1939, the Polish homeland was divided between two barbaric and greedy conquerors.

On September 1, 1939, the forces of Hitler broke across the Polish border from the west. Sixteen days after this initial Nazi attack, Stalin saw that the Poles were fighting against overwhelming odds, and gave orders for a treacherous assault from the east. Although the Poles fought courageously and heroically against these brutal forces of nazism and communism, they were unable to prevent Poland from becoming a nation without a state, a tyrannized and persecuted country, deprived of half of its territory and millions of its people.

Thousands of Polish troops forced to flee the country joined the Allied Forces, and as the regular army slowly disintegrated, an underground movement was formed, directed by the Polish Government-in-exile. Polish soldiers joined together with civilian men, and women, and children in the fighting and destroying of enemy planes, ammunition dumps, bridges, and other military installations.

The members of the resistance movement and the Polish populace refused to betray their national honor by collaborating with the enemy. Instead, some were forced to survive for months, or even years, in the forest and mountains, and 6 million Poles preferred self-respect and death to capitulation. Millions of Poles suffered deportation and imprisonment in labor camps in Soviet Siberia and in Germany. The Polish nation lost close to one-quarter of her population, and the beautiful capital city of Warsaw was leveled to the ground.

Even after the end of the war, there was no peace for Poland, as the Soviets continued to attempt to systematically destroy the culture, religion, and national identity of the Polish people. Nevertheless, the Communists have been unable to completely crush the spirit and pride of the Poles, for the struggle to achieve self-determination continues today.

The protests and demonstrations which followed the recent second anniversary of the founding of the independent labor union Solidarity clearly indicates that the Polish desire for human rights, human dignity, and liberty can survive and overcome every threat of the Communists and every act of violence. The dedicated men and women of Poland daily face a dismal existence under Communist-imposed martial law, but nevertheless continue their fight against this oppression in an effort to achieve self-determination.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to join with Polish Americans who reside in the 11th District I am honored to represent, and Poles all over this Nation, in their hopes and prayers for the day when the people of Poland can live in personal and economic freedom with the right to choose the course of their own national destiny.●

"TICONDEROGA" PASSES SEA TRIALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, there have been press reports recently questioning the seaworthiness of the Ticonderoga class of guided missile cruisers being made at Ingalls Shipyard in Pascagoula, Miss. I want to share two letters with my colleagues on this subject. One letter is from Mr. Leonard Erb, president of Ingalls Shipbuilding, which effectively refutes the erroneous statements made about this ship.

As Mr. Erb points out the Ticonderoga underwent the most extensive sea trials ever conducted and passed every test successfully.

The other letter was sent to Members of Congress from Chief of Naval Operations, Adm. James D. Watkins. In it he reaffirms the Navy's support for this ship and called the Ticonderoga a "superbly capable ship" and a "quality product."

I am happy to share these letters with my colleagues in order to present a true balance against the misinformation which was made public earlier about this ship:

INGALLS SHIPBUILDING,
Pascagoula, Miss., August 23, 1982.

Hon. G. V. MONTGOMERY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MONTGOMERY: While the news media last week was repeating in print the inaccurate information and conclusions of an S&I report on the Ticonderoga class of guided missile cruisers, Ingalls and the Navy had the ship at sea on scheduled trials. Without exception, the trials were the most extensive, most successful ever conducted for a first-of-a-kind surface war ship. And that, too, is the opinion of the Navy which was represented on the trials by Vice Admiral E. B. Fowler, Jr., Commander, Naval Sea Systems Command, Vice Admiral John D. Johnson, Jr., Commander, Naval Surface Forces, Atlantic Fleet, and Rear Admiral Wayne E. Meyer, the Navy's Aegis Shipbuilding Project Manager.

Before I tell you how well Ticonderoga performed at sea on this, her second trials (the first conducted in May), let me tell you what the ship "is not"—contrary to the conclusions of the S&I report and the newspaper headlines:

It is not overweight, unstable and in danger of capsizing.

It is not sluggish and unable to keep up with the carrier battle group she is built to protect.

It is not ineffectual.

Last week's trials, as well as those in May, proved the S&I report "wrong" on every major issue:

Ticonderoga met every objective and demonstrated, without question, the capability to carry out its mission.

It meets, or exceeds, the required endurance, speed, survivability and combat capability originally established over six years ago.

It is the most extensively armed surface ship in the U.S. Navy Fleet and has achieved battle force speeds in excess of 30 knots.

It is not overweight, although the ship has increased in size in response to Congressional direction to build a truly multi-mission cruiser. At 9,600 tons she has margin for growth.

During last week's trials, Ticonderoga underwent an unprecedented testing of her weapons suit—tests that are normally scheduled after a ship is commissioned. This early firing of weapons is in step with the Navy's long-standing emphasis to get the new ships operational and into the Fleet as quickly and as cheaply as possible. In fact, Ticonderoga will deliver to the Navy in November—in budget and well ahead of her original delivery date established four years ago.

The highlights of the recent trials were the weapon firings and the first at-sea testing of a completed Aegis combat system. A total of 13 Standard missiles were fired from the ship's MK 26 launchers, including 11 "test" missiles and two "active" missiles. During the "active" missile firings, the Navy crew aboard Ticonderoga fully employed the Aegis system against an "attacking target" launched and controlled from Eglin Air Force Base. The "target" was successfully detected and tracked by the Aegis system—then "destroyed" by the Aegis directed and guided SM-1 missiles. In both "active" firings, Ticonderoga's missiles passed within five feet of the "target"—well within the range necessary for a "sure kill." The results may well have set first firing records.

The weapons test also included firing of anti-surface missiles from the ship's Harpoon launchers; firing of 140 rounds from the ship's 5-inch guns; and the firing of the Phalanx close in weapons system, radar controlled gatling guns which fire at the rate of 3,000 rounds per minute.

Rear Admiral Meyer, who has directed the Aegis program for the Navy since its inception more than a decade ago, described the trials as "extraordinary."

The enclosed color photographs were taken during the missile firings. The black and white photograph demonstrates the ship's maneuverability and stability during high speed turns.

At daybreak tomorrow, we take Ticonderoga to sea again for more previously scheduled trials and testing. We expect her to pass these tests, too, with equally high marks, in preparation for her Navy acceptance trials shortly.

Your support of the Aegis program and our shipyard's participation as the builder of the Aegis ships has been and continues to be vitally important. I wanted you to have this report so that you would know the "facts" about Ticonderoga. And know, too, that your support has resulted in the construction of the world's most capable cruiser.

Sincerely,

LEONARD ERB, President.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you are aware, a number of magazine and newspaper articles have publicized a report by the House Appropriations Committee's Surveys and Investigations Staff which questions the safety, stability and combat capability of Ticonderoga (CG 47). I recognize the concern these articles have created and want to assure you that Ticonderoga is a safe, seaworthy battle group combatant.

It is apparent that the exchange of technical data with the investigators for the House Appropriations Committee's Surveys and Investigations Staff was deficient, thus not permitting them to correctly judge stability and mission effectiveness. Translation of highly technical data into overall performance criteria while maintaining a balanced perspective is difficult at best. However, the serious distortions of fact and conclusions resulting from the leak of this classified report to the press have been far more damaging than the report itself, thus creating erroneous impressions and serious allegations regarding the management of a very successful shipbuilding project. Therefore, I want to personally clarify some of the issues that have been raised regarding ship stability and mission capability.

Ticonderoga evolved from Spruance Class destroyer design. That design, by intent, had large displacement and stability margins for future use. Adapting the same hull to the more heavily armed Kidd Class DDG effectively utilized some of this margin. Ticonderoga, with her AEGIS Weapon System, continues this practice using an additional portion of the original Spruance margins. The utilization of this margin has been a conscious decision from the very start of CG 47 design. It was explicitly directed by my predecessors and endorsed by Congress. Careful and prudent naval architectural practices have permitted full realization of the combat potential of this hull. Ticonderoga will commission at 9600 tons displacement with 600 tons of service life margin. Well within her limiting displacement of 10,200 tons, she is both safe and stable, meets all speed and endurance requirements and still has some room for future expansion.

Ticonderoga was conceived, designed and built as a multimission capable ship and approved by Congress as such. She is fully capable of operating continuously with carrier battle groups and surface groups throughout the world in sea and weather conditions we design any major combatant to endure. In what we refer to as Battle Group capable ships, we design for and expect to achieve operational speeds of 30 knots or better; Ticonderoga has fully demonstrated speeds in excess of 30 knots on both of her sea trials. These trials have proved Ticonderoga to be a fully sea-worthy ship which is stable and responsive.

Allegations that we have done inadequate testing are preposterous. The Aegis cruiser is the most carefully considered and tested surface combatant ever built. Over 100,000 hours of successful land-based and at-sea testing of the Aegis Weapon System have been completed to date. Ticonderoga has completed two sea trials nearly six months prior to commissioning and has met or exceeded all operational requirements tested. She is well ahead of schedule and I can assure you she will deploy "war ready" in record time after her commissioning.

I am assured by Vice Admiral Fowler (Commander, Naval Sea Systems Command), Vice Admiral Johnson (Commander, Naval Surface Force, U.S. Atlantic Fleet) and Rear Admiral Meyer (Aegis Shipbuilding Project Manager), all of whom have sailed in her, that Ticonderoga is a superbly capable ship. It should be reiterated that the increase in displacement from 8,000 tons for the DD 963 Class to 9,200 tons for the DDG 993 Class and finally to 9,600 tons full load displacement for Ticonderoga has been a carefully planned and executed process. No rules of naval architecture have been breached nor has safety been sacrificed in building this ship. Ticonderoga is a quality product and her addition to the fleet will herald a new dimension in Battle Group Anti-Air Warfare capability.

I have sent identical letters to the other Committee Chairmen concerned and I am prepared to respond to any inquiries you may have.

Sincerely,

JAMES D. WATKINS,
Admiral, U.S. Navy.●

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK FINANCING NOTIFICATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. NEAL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. NEAL, Mr. Speaker, I am informing the House today of an Export-Import Bank proposal for a direct credit of $292.5 million for the purchase of U.S. goods and services to expand an oil refinery in Indonesia.

The Eximbank proposes to grant the loan to the Republic of Indonesia for use by Pertamina, the national oil and gas company.

The total refinery expansion will cost $1.18 billion, of which $450 million would be paid to U.S. suppliers. Eximbank's financing would cover 65 percent, or $292.5 million, of the U.S. purchases. International competition for contracts on this project has been intense. Japanese suppliers offered financing at 7.5 percent.

Fluor Corp. and UOP, Inc., will each supply one-half of the U.S. goods and services. It is estimated that 3,007,000 man-years of employment for these U.S. firms would be created by this transaction.

This Eximbank financing notification was referred to me as chairman of the Banking Committee's Subcommittee on International Trade, Investment, and Monetary Policy. Under section 2(b)(3)(i) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, the Eximbank must notify Congress of proposed loans or financial guarantees, or combinations thereof, of $100 million or more. Unless the Congress determines otherwise, the Eximbank may give final approval to the transaction after 25 days of continuous session of the Congress after notification.

I am submitting for the RECORD copies of the Eximbank proposal, including details about the Indonesian project and the financing arrangements. I would welcome any comments or questions my colleagues might have regarding this proposal. The Eximbank material follows:

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., August 11, 1982.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
The Speaker's Room, H-209, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to Section 2(b)(3)(i) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, Eximbank hereby submits a statement to the United States House of Representatives with respect to the following transaction involving U.S. exports to Indonesia.

A. DESCRIPTION OF TRANSACTION

1. Purpose

Eximbank is prepared to extend a direct credit in the amount of $292,500,000 to the Republic of Indonesia ("ROI") to assist in financing the export from the United States of U.S. goods and services for the expansion of an oil refinery located in the town of Cilacap on the southern coast of Java. In conjunction with this financing, it is contemplated that commercial banks will extend an additional credit of $90,000,000, which will not be guaranteed by Eximbank.

Pertamina, the national oil company of the ROI, presently operates the oil refinery at Cilacap with a processing capacity of 100,000 barrels per stream day. The expansion will increase the capacity of this refinery to 300,000 barrels per stream day, and will include a fuel oils plant, lube oil plant, tankage and ship loading and support facilities.

The total costs of the project are estimated at $1.182 billion, not including working capital and construction interest. Non-local costs are estimated at $740 million, which include U.S. costs of $450 million for financing under the proposed Eximbank Credit. Mechanical completion is scheduled for December of 1983.

2. Background

The expansion of the Cilacap refinery is one of the projects in a national plan to reduce or eliminate Indonesia's import of middle distillate fuels which it must now import from countries such as Singapore and Kuwait, despite its position as a major supplier of crude oil, because it lacks sufficient refining capacity. The ROI also plans to expand other refineries at Dumai and Balikpapan.

Suppliers from Japan, Germany, France and Spain have competed with U.S. suppliers for the procurement on this project. The Japanese government export credit agency offered financing at a rate of 7.5 percent per annum, the minimum consensus interest rate for Indonesia when bids were submitted in July, 1980.

In response to this competition Eximbank issued a letter of interest on February 13, 1980, to the U.S. firm competing for this business. Subsequently, Eximbank issued a Preliminary Commitment on March 2, 1982 to the ROI indicating that Eximbank was prepared to consider financing of U.S. goods and services for the project. The ROI has now filed its application for an Eximbank Credit to assist in financing U.S. procurement of approximately $450 million.

3. Identity of the parties

The Republic of Indonesia, acting through its Minister of Finance, will be the borrower and will issue its unconditional full faith and credit obligation to repay the Eximbank Credit.

Perusahaan Pertambangan Minyak dan Gas Bumi Negara (Pertamina) is a wholly owned state enterprise which was established in 1971 to operate and manage Indonesia's oil and gas industry. While not a party to the Eximbank financing, Pertamina will have responsibility for the construction and operation of the project.

4. Nature and use of goods and services

Fluor Eastern Inc., a subsidiary of the Fluor Corporation of Irvine, California, will be the major U.S. supplier for this project, and will furnish engineering, construction, procurement, and operational assistance valued at approximately one-half of the total U.S. costs. Technology for the fuels plant will be supplied by UOP Inc., of Des Plaines, Illinois.

The fuel oils plant will be designed to process Indonesian crude oil into fuel gas, liquefied petroleum gas, gasoline, naphtha, kerosene, diesel oil and industrial fuel oil. The lube oils plant will further process products from the existing refinery into lube oil base, fuel oil and bitumen.

B. EXPLANATION OF FINANCING

1. Reasons

The proposed Eximbank Credit of $292.5 million will facilitate the export of $450 million of U.S. goods and services. The favorable impact on U.S. employment resulting from these exports would not be possible without the Eximbank financing terms offered to meet intensive foreign competition.

Fluor has estimated its portion of the project will generate 3,000,000 man-hours of U.S. employment in California. Since the remainder of the procurement involves over 150 different U.S. suppliers, the resulting effect on employment in the United States can only be estimated. Using U.S. Department of Commerce data on employment impact, Eximbank estimates that this procurement has the potential for maintaining over 7,000 man-years of employment throughout the United States. Since the output of the project will be consumed in Indonesia and U.S. petroleum sales to Indonesia are minimal, no adverse impact on the United States economy is anticipated.

2. The financing plan

The total cost of U.S. goods and services to be exported from the United States for the project is estimated to be $450 million, which will be financed as follows:

	Amount	Percent of U.S. costs
Cash payment	$67,500,000	15
Eximbank credit	292,500,000	65
Private financing	90,000,000	20
Total	450,000,000	100

(a) Eximbank Charges

The Eximbank Credit will bear interest at the rate of 11 percent per annum, payable semiannually. There will be a commitment fee of 0.5 percent per annum charged on the undisbursed portion of the Eximbank Credit and a credit application fee of 2 percent of the amount of the Eximbank Credit.

(b) Repayment Terms

Indebtedness incurred by the ROI under the Eximbank Credit and the Private Financing will be repaid in 20 semiannual installments of principal beginning June 30, 1984. This date is six months after the estimated completion date of the project. The Private Financing will be repaid from the early installments and the Eximbank Credit will be repaid from the later installments.

Attached is additional information on Eximbank activity in and economic data on Indonesia.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. DRAPER III.

COMPETITIVE SHIPPING AND SHIPBUILDING REVITALIZATION ACT (H.R. 6979)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Louisiana (Mrs. BOGGS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to request that the following Members be added as cosponsors of the Competitive Shipping and Shipbuilding Revitalization Act (H.R. 6979): Representatives ADDABBO, APPLEGATE, BEVILL, CLAY, COELHO, DYMALLY, DYSON, ECKART, EDGAR, FRANK, LANTOS, MITCHELL of Maryland, MONTGOMERY, MOTTL, NELLIGAN, PEPPER, and SWIFT. These additional cosponsors bring to a current total of 37 the number of Members actively supporting this important legislation.

This support, as well as the strong support of industry and labor, indicate recognition that H.R. 6979 could provide a means for effective regeneration of the shipbuilding industrial base and the creation of a new U.S.-flag bulk cargo fleet, both of which would be unquestioned as national security assets.

The industrial asset represented by our domestic shipyards is threatened by a number of external forces which are presently eroding the capability of the U.S. shipbuilding community to support our military forces in time of national emergency.

A recent administration analysis of this situation concluded:

Shipyard capability to meet mobilization needs is the area of greatest concern . . . While there are great uncertainties over the course of future war, indicators of increased demand for mobilizable assets are apparent and argue against a drastic reduction in current shipyard capacity and capability. However, the general lack of demand for new commercial ships and recent contract awards by U.S. shipowners to foreign yards have increased the risk that some U.S. yards may be forced to close.

This administration study went on to conclude that a loss of even 10 percent of current shipyard capability would reduce the base to below the minimum required level for mobilization.

Against this background, H.R. 6979 is a clear expression of congressional concern with respect to the vitality and continued existence of critical U.S. shipyards and their ability to provide industrial support to the U.S. Navy and the Navy's auxiliary, the American Merchant Marine, in times of national emergency.

I would also like to call attention to expressions of support for the Shipbuilders Council of America and representatives of maritime labor unions for this legislation:

STATEMENT BY EDWIN M. HOOD, PRESIDENT, SHIPBUILDERS COUNCIL OF AMERICA, AUGUST 19, 1982

Until the question of cargo generation is answered, there can be no meaningful U.S. maritime policy. Nor can there by any substantive improvement in the quantum of shipping resources under sovereign jurisdiction available to serve U.S. national security and mercantile objectives.

Absent a rational method of cargo reservation, such as has been in effect in other major trading countries for some while, there can be no meaningful impetus for bulk shipping under the American flag. Nor can there be any stable demand for merchant ship construction in the United States by American workers. Nor can the U.S. shipbuilding industrial base and supporting infrastructure be preserved for national security as President Reagan has said is "vitally important to the Nation."

With the introduction on Thursday (Aug. 12) of legislation to promote the transport of bulk commodities in U.S.-flag, U.S.-built ships by Congresswomen LINDY BOGGS of Louisiana, and cosponsored by a bi-partisan group of 18 other Members of the House of Representatives, a start can be made toward a reasonable solution to the enduring dilemma of how to develop an effective U.S.-flag, U.S.-built bulk fleet in the national interest.

The members of the Shipbuilders Council of America applaud Mrs. BOGGS' action, as well as that of her cosponsors, and we unanimously endorse the concept on which H.R.-6979 has been formulated.

Over the last ten years, the U.S.-flag, U.S.-built bulk fleet declined by 50 percent: from 81 to 40 ships. Total tonnage carried continued to drop and is today hovering at slightly less than four percent. HR-6979 is intended to reverse this trend in an orderly fashion in a manner which will result in no cost to the public treasury.

To paraphrase President Reagan's assessment of the economic impact of the pending tax increase legislation, the price of any minimal increase (and they would be minimal) in delivered costs is "worth paying" in the national interest.

HR-6979 also imposes a challenge to reduce domestic shipbuilding costs. Given the continuity of a 158-ship program, as envisioned by the bill, and the opportunity for economies of scale that are possible through series construction, this requirement is attainable. The accomplishments of U.S. shipbuilders during the early phases of the program authorized by the Merchant Marine Act of 1970 can well be recalled in these respects.

As the Administration proceeds with its on-going development of maritime policy, Mrs. Boggs' bill could well provide a mechanism for answering the question of cargo generation from the standpoint of national security. It surely merits the consideration of the Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade. We commend her and her co-sponsors for their timely initiative and enthusiastically support HR-6979.

Frank Drozak, President of the Seafarers International Union of North America (SIU) and Ray McKay, President of District II, Marine Engineers Beneficial Association-American Maritime Officers, today commended the House of Representatives for its timely introduction last week (8/12/82) of H.R. 6979, legislation promoting American-flag bulk shipbuilding and ship operating more competitive with our foreign counterparts.

Frank Drozak and Ray McKay called the bill's introduction "an encouraging development." Drozak said that "'The Competitive Shipping and Shipbuilding Revitalization Act of 1982' provides the formula which the Administration, the Congress and the industry itself have been looking for as an answer to developing an American-flag bulk shipping capability without the need for taxpayer subsidy. Aside from the impetus that this bill, authored by Congresswoman Lindy Boggs of Louisiana and eighteen co-sponsors, would give to a shrinking American industry, the bill will be of tremendous value in providing a badly needed transportation asset for the defense of this country. The sponsors of this legislation obviously are concerned that foreign-flag shipping carries more than 96 percent of the bulk commodities of America's foreign trade."

"According to the bill's prescription, reduction of at least 15 percent in the costs of building and operating bulk vessels in the United States would qualify U.S. bottoms to carry a minimal percentage of our exports and imports beginning with five percent in the year 1983," explained Drozak, who is also President of the AFL-CIO's 8½ million member Maritime Trades Department (MTD).

"The provision for a one percent increase each year in that participation up to a maximum of 20 percent is a powerful incentive, it appears in our judgment, to all of the shipping community that would be involved—shipbuilding and ship operation, labor and management, as well as the support industries, such as steel, electronics, machinery, etc."

Both labor leaders agree that there is now a means whereby a concerted movement toward greater efficiency and lesser costs can be achieved in the American maritime industry. Such a development could not come at a more critical moment both in terms of the problems of the shipping industry and of the state of our national economy. With unemployment nationwide reaching alarming levels, the proposed legislation could create tens of thousands of jobs.

Drozak and McKay said "we are sure that the membership of our organizations who man American-flag shipping will heartily endorse making the sacrifices that will be necessary to make the proposed program a successful one. Likewise, we are confident that all American workers who would gain employment under the proposal will welcome the opportunity to once again have purposeful jobs."

Drozak and McKay concluded their joint release by stating that "President Reagan has on a number of occasions expressed concern over the cargo policies by foreign countries and their impact on the U.S. maritime industry. This bill appears to deal with some of that concern and at the same time satisfies the President's additional concerns over making the industry more cost-efficient and competitive. We sincerely hope that the President will find it possible to work with the appropriate Members of Congress to enact the proposed legislation into law."

It is important that this legislation be considered, not only because it would help achieve President Reagan's goals of an adequate shipbuilding base for national defense needs, but it will also insure a merchant fleet capable of carrying a fair portion of our Nation's trade.●

PESO DEVALUATION LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to restore the Small Business Administration's pre-1981 nonphysical disaster loan program and to make it specifically applicable to the type of economic dislocation now being experienced in the Southwest as a result of the Mexican peso devaluation.

This action is critically needed. The August 5 peso devaluation has brought as much economic devastation to this country as any recent natural disaster. The devaluation, which made U.S. goods nearly twice as expensive as Mexican goods sold along the border, has reduced the volume of sales for many businesses by as much as 50 percent. Heavy layoffs are being reported. Many small businesses will go bankrupt, particularly if their Mexican customers default on their obligations. We have a crisis on our hands. To meet that crisis, we should take appropriate action.

The Small Business Act Amendments of 1977 established a new nonphysical disaster loan program. The new program was designed to assist or help refinance the debts of small businesses located in areas subject to severe "economic dislocation." The conference report on that legislation stressed that loans should be made available to businesses suffering substantial economic injury due to a Mexican currency devaluation.

Last year, however, the President in his budget message to Congress requested the termination of the nonphysical disaster loan program. In congressional action, this body voted to restructure the nonphysical disaster program, while the other body voted to eliminate the program entirely. The final conference agreement accepted the restructuring provisions requested by this body, but barred any funding for the new program in fiscal years 1982, 1983, and 1984. Even if funded, however, the new nonphysical disaster loan program would not apply to economic dislocation arising from foreign currency devaluation.

The legislation that I am introducing today will reinstate the old, pre-1981 SBA nonphysical disaster loan program and make it specifically applicable to economic dislocation arising from a foreign currency devaluation. Under the terms of the bill I am introducing, small businesses in a qualified disaster area would be eligible for low-interest loans with rates as low as 8 percent, depending upon the availability of conventional financing. Businesses could borrow up to $100,000 and the payment of all interest and principal would be deferred for 1 year. The loans could be used for working capital and to pay financial obligations which the small business owner could have met had the disaster not occurred. Funding for the program would come from the existing revolving fund for SBA physical disaster loans and be subject to the availability of those funds. For fiscal year 1982, $640 million was appropriated for the SBA's physical disaster loan program. Through July 1 of this year, only $197 million of that amount has actually been used.

Let me add at this point that the $200 million "peso pack" unveiled by the Small Business Administration on August 31 differs substantially from the legislation that I am introducing today. The "peso pack" offers qualifying small businesses regular SBA direct loans and SBA loan guarantees. Businesses applying for such loans can expect to pay an interest rate as high as 14¾ percent or higher, depending on the prime rate. Also, payment of principal and interest on regular SBA business loans is generally deferred only 3 months. Because of these requirements, many hard-hit businesses will not seek and many will not qualify for SBA's "peso pack."

What is needed in this instance is disaster aid, not the type of SBA business loan that is given in the ordinary course of business. I urge my colleagues to assist in the swift passage of this legislation.●

INSIGHT/OUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, over the last months, national debate has arisen and is now increasing concerning the freedom of our scientific institutions to freely generate and exchange the results of scientific inquiry.

While it is easy to suggest that, in the name of national security, our basic freedoms should be compromised, this suggestion contains within it the seeds of the destruction of freedom and democracy as we know them.

The following article by Dr. Robert Rosenzweig, vice president of Stanford University, is a clear exposition of the issue, and I commend it to my colleagues in the House.

[From the Stanford magazine, Summer 1982]

Insight/Out

(By Robert M. Rosenzweig)

There is a great deal of quite understandable concern abroad these days about the fact that the United States no longer enjoys the wide margin of superiority in science and technology that was ours for more than a quarter of a century following World War II. Many people, myself included, believe that to lose this advantage over our adversaries would be a very substantial threat to our national security. It is, therefore, critically important that we understand the sources of our advantage and adopt policies to preserve it.

The extraordinary dominance enjoyed by American science and technology at the close of the war was a product of the exhaustion of our enemies and our allies and of the unprecedented influx of brilliant scientific talent fleeing from the totalitarian regimes of Europe. The recovery of Japan and the leading powers of Europe was to be expected; renewed application of the talent and energy that exists in those places was bound to reduce our advantage. Yet we have managed to sustain the edge over a broad range of scientific areas despite energetic and determined competition.

What are the sources of our continuing strength? I suggest that there are five major elements.

1. Working with new technology is inherently risky, and we have an economic system than rewards risk taking. Centrally directed, highly bureaucratized economies, in contrast, are risk-averse.

2. Our educational system by and large makes it possible for talented people to go as far as their talents will take them. Comprehensive programs of student financial aid have enabled good students and good colleges to find one another. Thus, our pool of trained talent is large and diverse.

3. We have a tradition of higher education that connects it with the requirements of the society it serves while also protecting it from distortion by those same requirements. It is a tradition that is especially relevant to the health of science and technology, as shown by examples as diverse as the role of the Land Grant colleges and universities in the growth of American agriculture, the importance of the links between such universities as MIT and Stanford and the electronics and computer industries, and the emerging set of connections between universities and industry in the field of biotechnoloy.

4. In this country we link fundamental research and research training. They are done in the same place—universities—and by the same people—faculty and graduate students. Thus research is refreshed by the best young minds, and they in turn are trained by the best of our senior people.

5. We have a scientific structure that puts a high value on the free communication of scientific results. This means that intellectual talent is quickly and accurately assessed and that good results can be rapidly confirmed and quickly become the platform for further work.

In an effort to maintain our superiority, there is a call for strong efforts to stop technology leakage. Yet I believe any solution that does damage to the sources of our strength will produce results far worse than the problem it purports to solve. Let us look at two alleged causes of leakage.

The first is found in the exchange programs between the Soviet Union and the United States. It is true that the Russians derive more tangible benefits from them than we do, but while we have little to gain from their science and technology, we have much to lose from ignorance of Russian institutions, processes, motives, and purposes.

The balance must be struck by the government, which negotiates all exchange agreements. Currently, the State Department must approve the program of study of a Russian scientist before he can be assigned to an American university. If the program is sensitive, or closely connected to sensitive work, the remedy is to veto the application.

In the recent controversy involving Stanford, the State Department proposed to admit a Russian visitor and allow him to come to the University, but only if we would agree to prevent him from seeing and hearing things that are open to everyone else. That was bad policy. If work going on at Stanford is judged too sensitive to be exposed to a Russian visitor, the solution is to keep him away. Once an individual is admitted for study, the institution at which he is working should not be asked to become less open, more secretive.

The general problem of the ready availability of the results of American scientific research through open literature is far more difficult to deal with. Our scientific literature is freely available, enabling others to profit from our work and perhaps narrow our margin of superiority. But if this very openness is also an important factor in maintaining our advantage, we would tamper with it only at our own peril.

Surprisingly, perhaps, there is very substantial agreement on that point. Even those who would like to shut down the flow of certain kinds of information are usually quick to say that they do not propose programs of government censorship or extensive new classification of research projects. More commonly, the call is for some kind of voluntary self-regulation, a system of prepublication screening of research results so that findings with potential military application can be kept out of circulation.

I seriously doubt that this is a solution of very wide applicability. My sense is that the more widely agreements of that sort were to be extended, the more difficult they would be to enforce, the more frustrating the failure to abide by them would be, and the closer we would therefore be to the next steps—required prescreening and government control over the decision to publish. I don't know anyone who wants that result.

Our national security, health, and prosperity will be served best by adherence to the principles and practices that have been our main sources of strength. It has always seemed risky to run an open society; perhaps that is why there are so few of them. But when citizens and leaders alike have been willing to take the risk, as ours have done throughout our history, the most marvelous engine of creativity is set in motion. That is our real advantage. Why would we want to give it away?●

OVERRIDE THE VETO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader has made a persuasive case for overriding the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill which was published today—September 8, 1982—in the Washington Post. I join the gentleman from Texas in the effort to override the President's veto.

His eloquently stated remarks point out that the issue is not spending, for the vetoed bill is under-budget. Congress is attempting to exercise its duty; setting national priorities within the funds budgeted. I commend his forceful logic to my colleagues and to the American people.

The article follows:

OVERRIDE THE VETO

(By JIM WRIGHT)

Congress should override President Reagan's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill.

A vote to override would provide funds sorely needed for education and older-American programs, obviate any disruption in orderly public services and restore a sense of balance to the tattered relationship between the executive and legislative branches of our government.

Ironically, a vote to override also would help Reagan fulfill his commitments to friendly nations in the Western Hemisphere. It might be the one means of salvaging his Caribbean Basin Initiative.

Contrary to presidential rhetoric, this bill is not a "budget-buster." In aggregate, it appropriates almost $2 billion less than the president officially requested for the particular items the bill covers.

It is a bipartisan bill embraced by legislators of both political parties who clearly understand the need for its provisions. In the Senate, Majority Leader Howard Baker, Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark Hatfield and Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici all urged Mr. Reagan to sign the bill. Rep. Silvio Conte, ranking House Republican on the Appropriations Committee, made his plea quite public. Experienced Republican lawmakers tried to explain that the old, shopworn shibboleth of "budget-busting" simply would not wash in this case.

Members presumably voted their convictions when they passed the bill with only a handful of dissenters. If they vote their personal convictions on the veto, it will be overridden.

Congress did add some $917 million that the president had not requested for such things as elderly employment, student loans, education for the handicapped and advances to state unemployment funds. But we reduced other programs by $2.8 billion below their budgeted figures.

It is disappointing that the president used this supplemental bill as an excuse to renew his war against Congress—and against the students, the handicapped and the elderly. If this veto is sustained, several hundred thousand young Americans will not be able to attend college this fall.

The veto and the president's shrill explanation for it are especially unfortunate following the conciliatory spirit that Congress exhibited on the tax bill last month, since they revive the spirit of confrontation and hostility that some of us had tried to put to rest.

What irony that only a week after the carefully choreographed embrace in the rose Garden and Reagan's high-sounding appeal for a show of "unity," he went out of his way to pick an unnecessary fight with Congress.

Some contend that the veto was a sop to his party's right wing, disaffected by the tax increases that its members' own excessive tax cutting of last year made necessary. Others, groping for an explanation, hark back to this revelation contained in the Atlantic Monthly story on David Stockman:

"Disappointed by events and confronted with potential failure, the Reagan White House was developing a new political strategy: wage war with Congress over the budget issues, and in 1982 blame the Democrats for whatever goes wrong."

Whatever the reasoning, the political advisers who won out on this highly political veto have done the president a disservice. Reagan would have done better to follow the advice of Secretary of State George Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who urged that he sign the bill.

As one who has worked hard to build effective bipartisan backing for the president's Caribbean Basin Initiative, I particularly regret the veto. I fear that it puts that program in jeopardy. Many of my colleagues are saying that if Reagan is unwilling to give needed help to the old, the poor and the handicapped in our own country, he scarcely can expect Congress to appropriate more money for such people in other countries.

If our hemispheric program should fall victim to a wounded sense of priorities and to the polarization exacerbated by this highly political veto, then that could be the greatest tragedy of all. Our friends in Latin America will not understand the political nuances. They will understand only that the United States went back on its word.

For all of these reasons the president, the Congress and the nation will be better served if the veto is overridden.●

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 6838

By Mrs. BYRON:

—Strike out all after line 3, page 2, of the bill as reported, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "be effective on or after the thirtieth day following the enactment of this subsection: Provided, however, That selected export controls may remain in effect if the President, within the aforesaid thirty day period, certifies to Congress that, after review by appropriate Executive Departments including the Department of Defense, there is a reasonable expectation that particular technologies transferred as a result of terminating the above-mentioned export controls could be used by the Soviet Union or the Soviet Union's treaty allies to produce or improve military hardware, related military systems, or military-related manufacturing processes."

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

DISABILITY REVIEW CREATES HARDSHIPS THROUGHOUT NATION

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, many of our colleagues have spoken out against the way the Department of Health and Human Services is conducting a congressionally mandated review of the social security disability program.

I have many constituents in my congressional district who have been unfairly and improperly dropped from the rolls of this important program. The Social Security Administration has been, to say the least, overzealous in their review of medical disability cases.

This fact was brought out in an article in yesterday's Washington Post. I think that all Members should be aware of this process. The article follows:

ELIGIBLE RECIPIENTS LOSING OUT—U.S. GETS TOUGH WITH DISABLED

(By Margaret Engel)

In 1973, after lupus, an incurable crippling disease, forced her to stop working as a nurse's attendant, Mary Williams of Capitol Heights began receiving $366 a month in disability payments from Social Security.

Last year, under a speeded-up review of disability recipients ordered by the Reagan administration, the payments to Williams were stopped, and she was told to get a job, despite the fact that three government doctors had said she was totally disabled.

In August, after Williams had struggled for a year to pay the $203 rent on the apartment she shares with her teen-age sons, an administrative law judge ruled that she was eligible for the payments after all.

Her experience was not unusual. Since federal officials tightened eligibility standards and began closer scrutiny of the $18 billion disability program in March 1981, 157,980 people nationwide have been dropped from the Social Security rolls.

Aimed at weeding out the undeserving, the new procedures have in many cases imposed an unnecessary burden on thousands of disabled people who do in fact meet the government's strict standards. According to figures compiled by the Senate Finance Committee, administrative judges have ruled in favor of recipients 67 percent of the time since the accelerated program began.

The review program has succeeded in trimming the rolls to fit its strict definition of disability, a standard that is much tougher than private disability insurance. "You must be unable to do any kind of work," noted Social Security spokesman John Trollinger. "It doesn't matter that you don't have any experience, or if there aren't any jobs there."

Dropping ineligible people from the program has saved the federal government $216 million for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, and a projected $458 million for next year, according to Social Security figures. But the savings have been offset by the huge volume of complaints from the disabled, advocacy groups and Capitol Hill.

Many of those who have been dropped suffer extreme hardships and are forced onto state welfare rolls. If they are over 65, they also lose Medicare reimbursement for their health care costs. And for some, the consequences are worse.

On Nov. 5, 1981, Herbert Tuttle, a father of three who was active in civic organizations, killed himself with a 16-gauge shotgun outside the Social Security office in Lansing, Mich., after learning that he was no longer eligible for benefits. His suicide note read, "They cut my Social Security. They are playing God."

One month later, Harold Holtz, 45, of Council Bluffs, Ind., shot himself in the head after a year of attempts to win Social Security disability benefits, after diabetes and triple bypass heart surgery forced him to give up his job driving a truck.

Those who wait for an appeals decision face nine or more months without income. "An immense amount of unjustified, needless, unconscionable suffering takes place during that year," said Sen. Carl Levin (D-Mich.), who is pushing an amendment to the debt ceiling bill that would slow down the rate of reviews and pay benefits until appeals are heard.

Many congressmen say the pain and confusion the reviews have caused isn't what they had in mind when they asked the Social Security Administration in 1980 to improve the monitoring of the disability income program, and its welfare sister, Supplemental Security Income.

The requests, contained in amendments to the Social Security Act, were aimed at paring down the growing cost of the disability insurance program, which was added to Social Security in 1956, and SSI, which took the place of state welfare programs for the disabled in 1972.

When the Reagan administration came into office, it moved the starting date of the program up nine months. It also ordered that eligibility standards then on the books be strictly enforced.

In doing so, it was seeking changes in a vast system that cost nearly $18 billion and had nearly 4.4 million beneficiaries in the fiscal year ending last March.

In order to process benefits, there are federally-funded reviewing offices in every state and 800 administrative law judges. Disability cases appealed beyond the Social Security system account for almost 16 percent of all civil cases filed.

The congressional mandate to better monitor the program has had unexpected results. For one thing, overloaded reviewers are throwing out about 47 percent of all cases examined—many more people than the 10 to 20 percent found by the Government Accounting Office and Social Security studies to be improperly receiving benefits. Critics say pressure to dispose of cases and a new emphasis on stricter standards are responsible. For their part, Social Security officials say most of the misunderstanding is over the program's tough standards.

What is clear is that the special state offices, called disability determination units, which are financed by the federal government to handle the reviews, have been overwhelmed with cases.

"We're struggling," said Roland Owens, assistant commissioner of rehabilitative services for Virginia. Since the closer scrutiny began, the federal government has sent Virginia 13,971 cases, compared to 2,897 reviews handled by the state in fiscal 1980. Forty-two percent of those reviewed under the tougher regulations were dropped.

In Maryland, 1,595 people have been dropped from the rolls, or 39 percent of the cases reviewed. In the District of Columbia, 357 people have lost benefits, or nearly 41 percent of those reviewed.

Most of these cases have their own sad stories of economic struggles and tangles with the bureaucracy over lost files and confusing notices.

In Fairfax, McDonald Huffman, 56, is considering bankruptcy as a solution to the financial woes he and his wife face. He had been receiving $444 a month in disability income but was notified in July that he was dropped because he was fit to work. A coal miner for most of his life, Huffman uses an oxygen tank at night to aid his breathing. He last worked for the county as a truck driver in 1973, until his supervisor said he could no longer take responsibility for Huffman's poor health. "I earned this money and it makes me mad to have to fight for it," Huffman said.

In Hyattsville, Robert Larkins, 47, and his wife, Alpha, had to move in with with their daughter's family into a two-bedroom apartment after his $354 disability checks simply stopped coming in August 1981. Larkins, who cannot read or write, worked as a laborer until his kneecap was removed following a work related accident in 1973.

"We just ain't got no home to live in," said Larkins, who also was informed in July that he owes the government $17,038 because his disability was "terminated" in 1978, although, he says, this was the first he or his Legal Services lawyer have ever heard of it.

Most of those dropped by the state agencies never see an examiner, but have their case decided by a review of their files, which often does not include pertinent medical information. Nonetheless, Social Security Administration officials say state examiners make mistakes in only 3 percent of the cases. When the decisions are reversed, explained Trollinger, it is usually because of additional medical data that's been assembled during a later appeal.

Recent revisions of the desk manual examiners use have made it more difficult to win benefits, too. Several advocacy groups claim state agencies are cracking down through internal, unpublished standards on those suffering mental disabilities and chronic pain. This suspicion has prompted lawsuits against the review program in nine states.

Nationwide, 29 percent of those dropped in the program's first year are mentally disabled, according to the U.S. House Select Committee on Aging. In Maryland, the state attorney general has filed a Freedom of Information request with the Social Security Administration to find out why the mentally disabled are being dropped from the rolls with much greater frequency.

"A staff member was told that only people who are literally climbing the walls can qualify for disability now on psychiatric claims," said Dr. Dennis Kutzer, a psychiatrist at the Springfield Hosptial in Sykesville, who said 72 percent of disability claims now are denied. Three years ago, the rate was about 30 percent. The denials are keeping patients in costly state mental hospitals, according to mental health experts. They say these patients cannot be released because they cannot support themselves without the federal disability income.

The uproar over the manner in which the disability caseload was trimmed has prompted some changes. The Social Security Administration already has scaled down the number of reviews it expects to send the states this year. And, in the next few weeks, Commissioner John Svahn will require that recipients be notified in person, rather than by letter, that their cases are going to be reviewed.●

DISTINGUISHED JOURNALIST HONORED BY VETERANS

HON. RONALD M. MOTTL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. MOTTL. Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the important contributions of a man with his pen to help those who have carried the sword for our Nation. Ronald J. Seman of Maple Heights, Ohio, a veteran of the Korean war, and longtime Cleveland communications specialist, has been named to receive the 1982 Americanism News Media Award of the Catholic War Veterans of the U.S.A. National Awards Committee Chairman Gus Gallo tells us Seman received the award during the CWV National Convention last month in Bal Harbour, Fla.

The award is given annually to a newspaper, radio, or television station or an individual in any of the three media for presenting an outstanding individual or continuing program supporting positive ideals of American tradition.

Seman was cited for his weekly veterans column in the Cleveland Press and for originating "The Cleveland Veteran" radio program which he hosts Sunday nights at 9:45 on WERE. The show went on the air August 12, 1979. It is the only continuing program on Cleveland radio which is devoted to veterans news and features. At Seman's request, entertainer Bob Hope recorded two promotional spots for the show. Hope appeared on the program on February 1, 1981.

Seman served 1 year, 1953, of his 4-year tour with the U.S. Air Force's 17th Bombardment Wing Light in Pusan, Korea. He is a public information specialist in the Public Affairs Office of the Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR) Cleveland.

Prior to joining the Federal Government, Seman was an administrative assistant to Cleveland Mayor Ralph J. Perk, 1973-1977; was manager of public relations for the American Society for Metals for 11 years; and was an announcer, news writer, and program director for KCVH, KSYD, and KWFT-TV, Wichita Falls, Tex. Also, WERE, WJMO, WCUY-FM, KYW-TV, Cleveland, and WEOL, Elyria from 1954 to 1962.

Seman is a 1959 graduate of Kent State University where he majored in speech-radio and minored in journalism. He is currently serving his second term as commander of the Cuyahoga Chapter, CWV; is a member of CWV Post 1812, Garfield Heights, Veterans of Foreign Wars "Stars & Stripes" Post 1415, Cleveland, and American Legion Post 309, Maple Heights.

He and his wife, Mary, are the parents of Mark, 19; Eve, 17; Kelly, 15, and David, 11. The family resides at 5536 Elmwood Ave. They are members of St. Wenceslas Parish.●

THE IMPORT PROBLEM

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, September 1, 1982, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE IMPORT PROBLEM

Hoosier workers and businessmen often express to me the view that the scales of foreign trade are weighted unfairly against the United States. Sometimes with anger in their voices, they cite surging imports as evidence for their belief. In 1981, we had the largest trade deficit in our history—more than $40 billion—some $18 billion of which was with Japan alone. Steel imports captured 20% of our market; imported automobiles grabbed 27.3%

The more I listen to these workers and businessmen, the more I share their frustration with the problem of imports. In part through our generosity, the countries that we defeated in World War II have become our major rivals in foreign trade. Japan and West Germany have invaded not only our overseas markets, but our domestic markets as well. They rely on us to defend them against their enemies, but while we devote more and more of our budget to defense, they use their resources both to subsidize civilian research and to boost exports. There is definitely something to the complaint that they protect their exporting industries while we still try to play the game by the rules of free trade. Hoosiers want to know why we support other nations in these ways, especially when our economy is in such need of assistance.

Although most of us feel strongly about the problem, we realize that we cannot just "slam the door" on imports. The world economy, of which the United States is an inseparable part, is much too complex for that. For one, much of our distress is due to interest rates which keep the value of the dollar up and the prices of imports low. We will make a good deal of progress against the trade deficit when interest rates come down. Also, America is a major exporter: we sell 40 percent of our farm production abroad; our exports of services were valued at $60 billion in 1981; one of every seven jobs in American manufacturing depends on the export sector; our foreign direct investment in other countries is triple that of all foreign companies here. We are vulnerable to retaliation if we crack down on imports. Moreover, if we take exports of services and foreign direct investment into account in assessing the impact of imports, we see that we are running a surplus, not a deficit, in our trading account. It is good for us to keep in mind that we do have an overall advantage. Then, too, the United States itself is not completely free of protectionism. Despite the fact that our markets are generally more open than others, we do protect chemical, textile, and some farm products. Finally, at least a few of the trading advantages enjoyed by other nations are due to a greater reliance on technology, a closer relationship between government and business, a simpler regulatory enviroment, or an increased emphasis on investment. If such explanations are valid, our case against imports is weakened.

Nonetheless, it is my impression that the system of trade is biased against the United States, sometimes in subtle ways and other times in ways that are not so subtle. I have the feeling that Hoosier workers and businessmen would not mind imports so much if they thought that the terms of competition were fair. They often tell me that they are prepared to compete head-to-head with anyone, provided that the rules are the same for everyone. The private sector can take important steps to better our trading position, and the government should help support that effort by doing the following things to ensure that we compete with other nations on a fair footing.

Large budget deficits and tight money have pushed interest rates up and kept the value of the dollar high. This makes imports cheap and exports expensive. We should alter the mix of fiscal and monetary policies so that interest rates fall.

Both in the Far East and in Western Europe, the United States carries more than its fair share of the burden of defense. This allows our allies to divert their resources to civilian and export sectors. We must demand from our allies a more equitable sharing of the burden of defense.

Export trading companies have figured in the expansion of export sectors in foreign countries. There are many small and medium-sized American firms which could compete worldwide if they had the expertise. We should legislate to encourage the formation of export trading companies.

Exports could be increased if we clarified our laws on foreign corrupt practices, cut taxes for Americans working abroad, and streamlined our export licensing procedures. We must trim costly and excessive legislative and administrative restrictions which we impose upon ourselves.

A larger lending authority is needed to counterbalance the aggressive, credit-based export strategies of other countries. We should increase the credit available to our exporters.

The United States has generally chosen to approach trade problems through bilateral talks, not by using the sanction-backed, international mechanisms that are available in cases of dispute. We must use these mechanisms as the need arises.

The United States does well in the export of services and in foreign direct investment. We should improve our advantage by bringing these aspects of trade under international procedures.

Trade policy influences and is influenced by foreign policy. We must give the President more power to make our trade and foreign policies more consistent and mutually supportive.

With direct subsidies and very low interest rates, other nations invade our markets. We must take a tough line against these unfair practices.

Standards, licenses, and special demands on companies are examples of non-tariff barriers which other nations use to exclude our exports. We should engage in hard-nosed bargaining to rid the trade system of such barriers.

Our import problem will recede, and our competitive edge will be maintained, if we insist on the same rules for all the players.●

AN ALTERNATIVE TO MASS AMNESTY FOR ILLEGAL ALIENS

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, many of us have grave reservations over the Immigration Reform and Control Act (S. 2222) as passed by the Senate recently. The House version of this legislation, H.R. 6514, offers no more reasonable approach to our immigration problems.

Frustration and outright opposition are growing over the "amnesty" provisions in this legislation, S. 2222 contained an amnesty provision which will provide eventual permanent residence for all illegal aliens who entered the United States prior to 1980. Those who entered between 1977 and 1980 will have to wait 3 years. H.R. 6514 also contains an amnesty provision which will provide permanent residence to illegal aliens who entered before 1980—although the wait for those who entered between 1978 and 1980 is only 2 years.

With the millions of illegal aliens in this country—estimates range from 3 to 10 million—I ask everyone to consider these points:

With nearly 11 million Americans out of work, and the attendant massive drain on Federal, State and local treasuries, can we afford to add to our work force and place an even greater burden on our social service programs?

Do we really want to set the dangerous precedent of such a liberal "legalization" policy, thereby encouraging more illegal immigration?

Have we considered that those allowed permanent residence will be bringing in their families, thereby compounding the numbers applying for residence?

What about those who have waited for years to gain permanent residence, legally—are we not rewarding those who violated the law, while ignoring those who abided by the law?

Today I have introduced an alternative to the amnesty provision of H.R. 6514—a registry date amendment—that would simply amend existing law, by updating current methods for granting legal status to certain types of deserving illegal immigrants. My proposal would allow permanent residence for illegal aliens who entered the country prior to January 1, 1973. Should H.R. 6514 be brought to the floor of the House prior to consideration of my proposal, I will be prepared to offer my alternative as an amendment to H.R. 6514.●

UNUSED INNER-CITY RICHES

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year I spoke of the need to stimulate inner-city economic revival and the possibilities of its success while recognizing the unique and many times significant costs associated with depressed urban areas. One possible method to stimulate new development is the enterprise zone concept of targeting Federal tax incentives to areas where the poor and unemployed are living.

Throughout the debate on urban America, there have been those who have stated that the problems of the inner city are too entrenched and that there may never be any real revival nor for that matter any successful Government programs to assist them in a return to the economic mainstream. I reject this viewpoint and believe that we must continuously seek new and additional avenues to assist the low- and moderate-income families of our Nation. I am an even more fervent believer that there can be economic success in our Nation's cities.

One entreprenuer that has served to maintain my faith is John Mariotta and his Welbilt Electronic Die Corp. located in the South Bronx. The following article from Nation's Business speaks to Mr. Mariotta's success and determination and I recommend it to my colleagues.

[From Nation's Business, February 1982]

TAPPING UNUSED RICHES IN THE SLUMS

(By Gerson Goodman)

The English language is not exactly the forte of John Mariotta, founder of the Welbilt Electronic Die Corporation in New York City's notorious South Bronx. Born of Puerto Rican immigrants, he had little chance to polish his verbal skills. Still, his business has an annual sales volume of $12 million.

But this is a success story not so much about Welbilt's owner as about Welbilt's workers—ghetto youths and hard-core unemployed who learned a trade and discovered the work ethic.

Mariotta was 36 when in 1965 he set up Welbilt, his fourth attempt to go into business. Fred Neuberger, now vice president and part owner, was the needed extra ingredient, Mariotta says. An experienced sales engineer, Neuberger brought Welbilt its first big contract, for air filter assemblies for Bell helicopters.

Today, the Welbilt plant stands like a beacon in a sea of residential and industrial deterioration. While remaking society's castoffs into operators capable of running the latest in computerized metalworking machinery, it has become a respected supplier of precision parts and assemblies to the armed forces and the defense industry. The firm has won increasingly larger private and government contracts.

Teaching the unskilled was not a matter of choice, since getting machinists to commute to Welbilt was—and still is—impossible. Job hunters quickly lost interest when they found out where the factory was.

"How are you going to make machinists out of semi-illiterates?" parts buyers for the big corporations would ask him, Mariotta recalls. But he has done it, motivating his workers with the homilies of a Benjamin Franklin rather than the formulas of a Ph.D. in labor relations. Among the doubters that are now convinced are General Electric and TSARCOM (Troop Support and Aviation Readiness Command).

Mariotta still interviews every job applicant, "I tell them, 'You got to work hard, You got to learn.'"

Once he is convinced an applicant can be counted on, he hires on the spot. No effort is made to check references. "What do I care about the past?" he demands. A note of intensity colors his voice. "What if he did commit a crime? Today, right now, he wants to work. That's the only thing that counts."

Mariotta's unorthodox procedures stem from this conviction: Most people abhor idleness. But language and educational deficiencies, not to mention prejudice in hiring, bar some from decent opportunities, he contends.

"Everyone is saying, 'What are we going to do about the South Bronx?'" Mariotta growls. "Everyone is saying, 'You can't teach those so-and-so's anything. You can't get them to come to work on time.' Well, it's not so. I say to them, 'Maybe we have no education, maybe our manners aren't up to par, but this is where it's at between you and me: If you're willing to work, I'll increase your salary.'"

Chico is a good example, Mariotta says. "One morning, in walks Chico with a cigar box under one arm. He says he is working in a hotel, washing dishes. In Mexico he was a mechanic, but here no one will hire him because he doesn't speak English. I ask him what's in the box. He shows me a mike, a 4-inch caliper, two C-clamps and a 6-inch rule. They are all brand-new. I say to myself, if he spent half a week's pay to buy tools, he must really want to learn. So I put him on. When he came to the shop the next morning, he didn't even know how to turn the saw on. But day after day, we stood beside him at the bench till he learned."

The plant, which has never been struck, was organized by the Teamsters in 1974 after peaceful negotiations. "Our relations with the union are extremely cordial," Neuberger observes. "The attitude here is so good that the pilferage and vandalism that plague other industrial enterprises are nearly nonexistent."

Workers who have become supervisors have seen Mariotta fulfill his promises. A bonus arrangement instituted in 1980 pays $1,000 each to first-line supervisors for every $1 million the plant ships. The incentive plan, which added $10,000 to each supervisor's income last year, has also fostered interdepartmental cooperation, Mariotta says.

What the kids he recruited from the streets would have become had there been no Welbilt is a thought that stokes Mariotta's contempt for the nation's multibillion-dollar welfare system. "Everyplace in the U.S. where there is a South Bronx, we have more unused riches than all the Arab oil countries put together," he argues. "Our riches are in our people who want to work. Let the businessmen and the government put factories here where the people are, and you'll see how fast those billions will shrink."●

DR. JAMES ARCHER SMITH

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, during our absence for the district work period, the city of Homestead, Fla., lost one of its most distinguished and beloved citizens. Dr. James Archer Smith passed away at the age of 91.

Dr. Smith was a general practitioner who came to Homestead in 1919 after serving as a frontline medic during World War I. During his long medical career he estimated that he delivered 3,500 of the 24,000 people living in the Homestead area. He was one of two staff doctors when a four-bed hospital opened in Homestead in 1940. The hospital, which today is the only city-owned hospital in the county, has grown to 120 beds and was named in his honor.

Dr. Smith was a pioneer in recognizing, and then working to meet, the medical needs of the community. He frequently treated patients knowing he would never be paid for his services and was eulogized by his friends for his love of mankind. According to his longtime friend and associate, Dr. Fred Vihlen,

He had a great fondness in his heart for the people who were down and out. People who had had hard times and had lived hard times.

He is survived by his wife, Gene; a brother, Marion; a son, James Archer Smith III, four grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. I extend my deepest sympathies to his family. An editorial in the South Dade News Leader summed up Dr. Smith's life when it stated, "They don't make 'em like that anymore."

DR. SMITH'S PASSING: THE END OF AN ERA

Today the Homestead community mourns the loss of a physician, a pioneer, a patriot—Dr. James Archer Smith.

He came to the fledgling town early in this century and stayed, not only to minister to the sick, but to contribute to the city's growth and well-being.

His greatest contribution, many say, was the founding of the city's hospital.

But Dr. Smith did much more than that. He would pack his medical bag in the middle of the night and tend to the ill and needy whenever and wherever—often without any hope of ever receiving any kind of pay in return.

Dr. Smith not only tended to the sick but he served on the volunteer fire department in the city's early years, was a member of the city council, founder and charter member of the Rotary Club, chief of staff at both the old Dade County Hospital and the hospital he founded.

At one time, most of the citizens of Homestead could claim he had brought them into the world.

During his long years, he was honored many times. In 1967, the Florida Academy of General Practice named him "Man of the Year" and during the Bicentennial in 1976, he was named one of Florida's 76 Patriots.

Dr. Smith's passing marked an end to the era of the "old family doctor."

They don't make 'em like that anymore.●

INEQUITY IN COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would correct an inequity created by the budget reconciliation bill. Under the terms of the fiscal year 1983 budget bill which is now law, Federal civilian and military retirees under the age of 62 will only be receiving half of a cost-of-living adjustment. In addition, rather than those cost-of-living increases being received as scheduled next spring, they are going to be delayed 1 month for the next 3 years. Military retirees who are holding Government jobs will have their compensation reduced by a dollar amount equal to the cost-of-living adjustment increases in their military retired pay. My legislation would repeal this language from the 1983 budget and treat military and Federal civilian retirees in an equitable manner.

These retirees should not be treated any differently than those individuals receiving social security benefits. The Federal Government has a contractual and moral obligation to provide these earned retirement benefits in a timely manner. There should be no reductions in the amount and the increase should not be delayed by 1 month.

Federal civilian and military retirees do not object to making their contribution to society but they have already been required to sacrifice more than any other group of citizens. Their well-thought-out plans for retirement have been severely disrupted. Living on a fixed income is difficult enough but having that amount reduced at a time when the cost of living is escalating makes maintaining a decent standard of living even more difficult.

Aside from the injustice the COLA changes have placed upon retirees, there are also serious ramifications for the Federal Government. These changes in retirement benefits will make it hard for the Federal Government to attract and retain qualified people to serve in the military or civil service. As taxpayers, we will all lose out by having less qualified individuals providing less service.

In the best interest in Government and as a matter of equity, I urge my colleagues to join in cosponsoring this most important legislation.●

THE LAW OF THE SEA TREATY

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my foreign affairs newsletter for August 1982 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE LAW OF THE SEA TREATY

When the United States voted against the Law of the Sea Treaty several weeks ago, the action hardly made a headline. Even though the treaty took more than a decade to complete and contained several important rules governing the uses of the seas, few Americans seemed worried about its rejection. Yet, the decision is a significant one for American foreign policy.

The seas have always been important in the scheme of things, and the ability of vessels to travel the seas freely has been of interest for hundreds of years. For the United States, one of the world's leading maritime powers, freedom of the seas is so vital that we fought wars to preserve it before our nation was a century old. Our trade depends heavily on the unimpeded movement of the merchant fleet. The value of our Navy would diminish if the seas were not open to our warships. History shows our strong commitment to the freedom of the seas—a commitment which we have honored in war and peace.

Since the 1700's, the only thing protecting the freedom of the seas has been its acceptance among nations. In this century that acceptance has been eroding. Many nations have different views of the seas and their uses. Oil and gas on the continental shelf and mineral-laden nodules on the seabed have caused conflict and may result in a division of the seas among the powerful nations.

In 1958 and 1960, the United Nations convened conferences to codify rules on the uses of the seas. The first conference produced agreements on the continental shelf, the high seas, and the conservation of marine wildlife. The second conference considered the width of territorial waters, but reached no agreement. The expansion of territorial waters (in some cases, up to 200 miles) and technological advances not anticipated by the 1958 agreement made further negotiations necessary, so the United Nations, with American support, again took up the question of the uses of the seas and called for a third conference. The conference convened in 1973 amid speculation that a consensus among nations could produce a treaty to cover all maritime activities. Presidents Nixon, Ford, and Carter pursued the negotiations with vigor. By the summer of 1980, all but three issues were decided. Tentative accords were reached on the width of territorial waters, passage through straits, responsibilities and rights of states in territorial waters, in economic resource zones, on the continental shelf, and on the high seas, conservation of fisheries, protection of the marine environment, marine research, and mining of minerals on the seabed. With regard to the last point, the treaty set up a body to regulate seabed mining so that the poor nations would have a role. The body would get its technology from the rich nations.

Critics of the treaty were found mainly among isolationists and among certain parts of the seabed mining industry. When President Reagan took office, however, these critics gained an influential ally. One of the President's first acts was to withdraw from the conference pending a full review of the American position. During the review, there was an intense battle within the bureaucracy between those who opposed the treaty outright and those who wanted certain changes, mainly in the provisions on seabed mining. In January of 1982, the President decided to return to the conference to pursue such changes.

The United States was unable to get all its changes at the 1982 session. Many delegates thought that the United States was inflexible in its view, pushing for changes but refusing to negotiate. Members of the American delegation said that their instructions, drafted largely by opponents of the treaty, were designed to prevent agreement. When a compromise was offered by some of our allies, we turned it down. The final session ended with the adoption of the treaty by 130 nations, but the United States, along with Israel, Venezuela, and Greece, cast negative votes. We said "no" despite some gains at the bargaining table, including the power to veto funding for national liberation movements and a guaranteed seat on the seabed mining authority. The President argued that the seabed mining provisions would not encourage investment and would not guarantee our access to minerals on the seabed. He hoped that other nations would recognize certain provisions as international law, not denying their benefits to the United States, but that the seabed mining provisions would not be accepted as international law because the United States, the major mining nation, would not follow them. He is now trying to get our friends to sign a separate "mini-treaty" on seabed mining.

Treaty supporters disagree. They think that the treaty protects our interests, and that we should try to change the provisions on seabed mining. They say that we will be unable to select the provisions of the treaty we like, and that we could lose our navigation rights. Since many of our friends appear unwilling to sign any mini-treaty, treaty supporters assert that we could jeopardize our own seabed mining industry and lose our assured access to minerals on the seabed.

I doubt that the Reagan Administration gave enough consideration to the implications of rejecting the treaty. Because the treaty also regulates territorial waters and navigation rights, treaty supporters are correct when they contend that any straits in the world could be closed to us in times of crisis. Also, any attempts by American companies to mine the seabed could be attacked by nations which have signed the treaty. These companies could then be forced to relocate abroad, and America could find itself with no means to reach minerals on the seabed. The President hopes to negotiate individual agreements if our interests are not adequately protected. The costs of such an approach could be high since we would be forced to make concessions to gain rights now protected under the treaty. Just as important, by rejecting the treaty we relinquish our leadership in the struggle to establish norms of behavior to guide nations.

The United States should not have given up on negotiations to change the treaty. I hope that we will reconsider sooner rather than later.●

KHJ RADIO—ON POLITICAL PROPAGANDA

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, we are all only too aware of the growing importance of money in our political campaign. In the last 10 years costs of campaigning has increased astronomically. This is true not only in regard to candidates, but also, in States like California, in regards to propositions placed before voters for their consideration.

I recently received a copy of an editorial from KHJ radio, a station in the Los Angeles area. I would like to share their brief comments with my colleagues. We seem to see more and more public issues where one side has little or no funding for their campaign and the other side has great sums to spend. This problem challenges our basic belief that in a free election each side will be heard. I offer this piece to my colleagues:

ON BEATING POLITICAL PROPAGANDA

It's unfortunate—but true—that an election is often won by the guy who puts on the best show. That is the power of political propaganda. Politicians know that the money they invest in TV and Radio ads will pay off at the polls. The unfortunate result is that an election can virtually be bought by big money concerns. But we can beat the political propaganda trap. We can focus on the issues and the candidates, as they impact on us, and not fall prey to the campaign shows they put on.

A good example is Proposition 11, an initiative that would require deposits on all beverage containers. It is an anti-litter measure, supported by environmental groups, who are now running their campaign in the red. There's no big money behind the measure, so chances are you won't see many commercials urging you to vote for it. But you will hear a lot from the no on 11 people, because they have got the money to make you hear them. Soft drink and beer producers are opposed to Prop 11 because it will cost them money, so they are forking over hefty contributions to defeat it. And it is tough not to be swayed by a flashy campaign. Catchy radio and TV ads are a powerful political tool, used to influence public opinion. But we urge our listeners to look at Proposition 11—and every other measure and candidate on the November ballot—objectively. Look at the issues and the candidates—how they will impact on you. He who yells the loudest usually gets heard, but we do not have to listen to the screamers.

Let us challenge ourselves to beat the political propaganda trap in this election. Vote in your own best interests, not because of a clever ad on radio or TV. Remember we will have to live with the measures and candidates that win this election long after the curtain goes down on the campaign shows of 1982.●

HANDICAPPED AWARENESS WEEK IN ALAMEDA, CALIF.

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, Mayor Chuck Corica has proclaimed September 5-11 as Handicapped Awareness Week, 1982. The theme this year is "Independence for the Handicapped." I applaud the Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped whose members have worked tirelessly to provide housing, resources and accessible facilities for disabled individuals in Alameda.

Their successes and progress is clearly evident in Alameda as the committee continues to meet the needs of the disabled and to make the entire city aware of the needs of the handicapped and to share their concerns and understand their priorities.

I join the citizens of Alameda in pausing to recognize Handicapped Awareness Week, 1982, and to offer my support and encouragement to the Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped as they continue to contribute to the well-being of the disabled.●

THE CLEAN AIR ACT IS WORKING

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report to the House that there is good news in the fight against air pollution. To put it simply, the Clear Air Act is beginning to work as designed.

Over the years, much has been made of the special air pollution problems of California, and the special leadership shown by the California State government, even while Ronald Reagan was Governor. Recently there was some doubt that California retained its commitment to cleaning up the air, as illustrated by the reluctance of the California State Legislature to enact an automobile inspection and maintenance program. As a representative of a typical southern California district dependent upon personal automobiles for virtually every transportation use, I am quite aware of the public resistance to a cumbersome inspection and maintenance program. But I am even more aware of the public demand for cleaner air, and its willingness to accept a new program to clean our air.

Now, at long last, the battle is over. California has an automobile emissions control program using inspection and maintenance. This victory for clean air doubly pleases me since the credit for its enactment goes to my good friend and my representative in the California State senate, Senator Robert Presley.

This was not the only good news in air pollution. The major air pollution control district in California has also finally adopted a new, more stringent stationary air pollution control program, which nicely supplements the new auto emission controls.

The only bad news for California's air is here in Washington. In spite of abundant evidence that the Federal Clean Air Act is working to clean up air everywhere, the House Energy and Commerce Committee still seems bent on repealing or delaying the good sections of the current law. Fortunately, the Senate Environment and Public Works does not have the same approach, and a growing number of House Members are having second thoughts on weakening this law.

The battle for clean air is not over. But it is starting to be won. The Congress should learn from the successes of the past, and follow the old adage, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it." Let's let the Clean Air Act continue working, unbroken.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to share an editorial from the Los Angeles Times which further describes the situation in California with my colleagues.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 2, 1982]

IT'S SAFE TO BREATHE AGAIN

The policy-makers and technicians who are responsible for cleaning up the air over Los Angeles are breathing more easily than they have in years. They can even chuckle when they talk about the future.

Why this rare level of levity among a group that seemed ready to throw in the crying towel a few years ago? The list of reasons is impressive.

For one thing, nature and smog policy finally seem to be moving in the same direction this year.

Smog controls that have been imposed at great cost over many years are starting to pay off in lower levels of pollution. There was a time recently when it looked as though the hard work had been in vain.

At the same time, there have been more cool, cloudy mornings this year than usual, along with fewer inversion layers to trap smog close to the ground.

The result has been fewer smog alerts than in any year to this date since the South Coast Air Quality Management District began keeping hourly smog readings 12 years ago. And there have been no second-stage alerts at all—the kind that force power plants to throttle back and commuters to double up in cars or take buses.

Next on the list is legislation that will require periodic inspections of automobiles, starting in 1984, to keep their smog-control devices working and their engines running cleaner.

Local smog officials have pleaded with the Legislature for such a law since the 1970's in another case that looked as though the hard work would be in vain.

But a bill, sponsored by Sen. Robert B. Presley (D-Riverside), requiring inspections every other year, was passed and sent to the governor late in the session.

The program will reduce pollution by something less than half as much as would annual inspections, but it is a place to start. If the program goes smoothly—as we expect it will—the Legislature may be persuaded to move to annual testing, which would reduce key pollutants by 20 percent to 30 percent.

Then there is a proposal to tighten controls on new polluters and on old polluters who expand their operations.

In recent years, hydrocarbons over Southern California have increased by 66 tons a day because small new businesses could start operating without pollution controls.

The air quality district staff wants to require all new operations, regardless of size, to install control devices and to keep pollution levels from rising by balancing new operations with cutbacks or shutdowns in old operations.

Business and industry are likely to protest the proposal. The public will have chances to protest the protests at public hearings in Los Angeles, Orange, San Bernardino and Riverside counties starting Sept. 13.

Another smile-provoking development for clean-air professionals is a new district plan to cut pollution by as much as half over the next five years. The plan calls for measures ranging from synchronized traffic lights to reduce emissions from idling cars to major reductions in refinery and power-plant pollution.

The cost would be steep—an estimated $475 million each year through 1987, with the oil industry bearing about half the total.

The cost of failing to keep reaching for cleaner air most likely would be higher—not only in human health but also in economic stability and growth for the region.

The smog specialists have good cause to feel jaunty this month, but their own computer models tell them that their best efforts will reduce smog only until 1993. After that, the air will get dirtier unless a second generation of smog-control techniques is brought to bear.

Finally, even Washington has given the clean-air managers a break. After months of bitter infighting in committee, Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-Los Angeles) turned back by a single vote an effort to weaken the federal Clean Air Act.

The result was a triumph only in that it is a stalemate that will prevent either Waxman and the environmentalists or a coalition of industry and the Reagan Administration from getting changes in the act for at least another year.

Granted that smog in Los Angeles can turn on you overnight, there is still an impressive amount of good news on clean air. And if the policymakers are breathing more easily, so can we all.●

NUCLEAR TEST BAN VERIFICATION

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, an article that appeared recently by columnist Jack Anderson is cause for grave concern. Mr. Anderson contends that secret documents and intelligence sources disclose that the United States does not have the capability to verify Soviet compliance with a nuclear test ban. As a result, the President had no choice but to cancel the talks with the Soviet Union and the British on a comprehensive nuclear testing ban in 1980.

I would like at this time to submit Mr. Anderson's disturbing article for the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 10, 1982]

U.S. CAN'T TELL IF RUSSIA CHEATS ON TEST BAN

(By Jack Anderson)

President Reagan decided at a July 19 National Security Council meeting that he didn't want to resume talks with the Soviet Union and the British on a comprehensive nuclear testing ban. The talks were suspended in 1980.

Secret documents and intelligence sources disclose the appalling reason for the president's decision: U.S. experts do not at present have adequate means to catch the Soviets in violations of a test ban.

Eight years ago the United States and Soviet Union agreed to limit underground nuclear tests—the only kind permitted—to 150 kilotons, or roughly 10 times the size of the Hiroshima bomb. The Threshold Test Ban Treaty was never ratified by the United States, but the 150-kiloton limit was observed by both powers.

Then, in 1978, U.S. scientists, unsure of their measurement system, secretly changed their methods of calibrating a kiloton, in effect doubling the size of permitted test explosions.

When the Soviets subsequently doubled the size of their blasts, intelligence experts were alarmed; they suspected a leak to the Kremlin at the highest levels.

Even with the new measuring method, the Soviets appear to have exceeded the 150-kiloton limit at least 11 times since 1978. One test—in September, 1980—was clocked at a likely size of 350 kilotons, according to my sources.

As recently as July 4, the Soviets set off a huge nuclear blast. It was estimated at a likely 260 kilotons, or at least 110 over the limit.

Reagan asked for the precise measurement of the Soviet explosion, so that he could lodge a vehement protest with the Kremlin. It was then that he learned such precision was impossible. A secret, highly technical Pentagon briefing disclosed that, in fact, the United States would not verify Soviet compliance with a test ban.

There was another, perhaps even more persuasive reason the president decided against a test ban treaty: U.S. scientists want to be able to test our nuclear weapons to make sure the stockpile is up to snuff.

A highly sensitive White House report shown to my associate Dale Van Atta states that the people in charge of U.S. nuclear weapons laboratories "insist that they must test up to approximately five kilotons in order to be able to verify performance of the weapons for stockpiling certification."

The report explains: "In the continued non-nuclear testing of weapons components, it turns out with some regularity that individual components fail or degrade. Even acceptable components may become unavailable as manufacturers shift product lines or go out of business."

This means that new components of different materials have to be used, and the resulting weapons may not work. As the report states:

"Developing weapons remains to a considerable extent an art rather than a science. Weapons designs which seem appropriate, based on computer models, fail to work as predicted when actually tested." In short, a test-ban treaty would leave the United States doubly in the dark—about the reliability of our own nuclear weapons and about any violations by the Soviet Union.●

JOHNNIE LEE WILLS CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

HON. JAMES R. JONES

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, Johnnie Lee Wills, a legend in the field of country music and one of the creators of the western swing music turned 70 this past Thursday, September 2. He and the music he loves are still going strong in his 49th year in our beautiful city of Tulsa, and he has become as much an institution in our community as he is the pantheon of country music heroes.

It all began many, many years ago with the "Light Crust Doughboys," a group of men in love with music and especially taken with a certain sound. That special sound, and many of those men, soon evolved into "Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys"—the greatest western swing band in the world.

In 1934, the Texas Playboys and their mainstay, Johnnie Lee Wills, moved to Tulsa to begin broadcasts on radio station KVOO from the Cain's Academy in downtown Tulsa. For 10 years, the Playboys were on the radio for 5 nights every week! Their music was, and is, loved by the people of Oklahoma and by many throughout the Nation.

Later, Johnnie Lee Wills spun off into his own group and recorded two classic hits: "Rag Mop" and "Peter Cottontail." In fact, "Rag Mop" remains the biggest country hit ever put out by Bullet Records

Johnnie Lee Wills still performs from time to time, and is now a very successful businessman in Tulsa. We are proud of him, and we are very honored to have him still sharing his wonderful music with us. As one publication noted: "Tulsa was Johnnie Lee Wills' town * * * and Cain's Academy was where the dancing action took place in Tulsa."

We are still Johnnie Lee Wills' town.●

CHINESE TENNIS STAR DESERVES ASYLUM IN UNITED STATES

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, an issue that has sports as well as political overtones is the case of Hu Na, the 19-year-old Chinese tennis star, who wishes to obtain asylum in the United States. Her story was carried in an editorial commentary which appeared in the August 17 Southtown Economist, serving suburban Chicago.

The editorial calls for the granting of political asylum, a point to which I completely concur. It should be noted that there is a growing number of defections from mainland China which is quiet testimony to the lack of utopia under that Communist government. The editorial follows:

CHINESE TENNIS STAR DESERVES ASYLUM IN U.S.

One of the prices communist governments pay for oppressing their citizenry is the embarrassment caused whenever some of them defect to free countries. The price is double high when the defector is an especially talented or prominent person enjoying the best that life has to offer in your standard workers' paradise.

Now that the People's Republic of China is beginning to permit carefully selected citizens to travel to Western Europe or the United States, it is beginning to suffer the defections that have long plagued the Soviet Union.

A case in point is Hu Na, the 19-year-old Chinese tennis star who disappeared recently from a hotel in Santa Clara, Calif., where she had been staying for an international tennis tournament. A week later, she turned up in San Francisco and asked for political asylum in the United States.

The State Department has taken her petition under study. Peking has reacted by demanding that she be handed over to Chinese officials for shipment home and, presumably, an appropriate spell of "re-education" in some labor camp.

International Tennis Federation officials, who seem to care less about the moral issues involved than about keeping China on the tennis circuit, are charging that Hu Na may have been "lured" into defecting by some talent-hungry professional sports promoter. Even if this is true, what of it?

Shouldn't young Hu Na, said to be a potential world class player, have the right to be compensated in full for her talent and achievement? No one considered packing Martina Navratilova back to Czechoslovakia when she defected in 1975.

Chinese officials are threatening to curtail cultural and sports exchanges with the United States unless Hu Na is returned. Let them. Hu Na deserves asylum in the United States, and the State Department should grant it forthwith.●

KATE PETRUSKA

HON. RONALD M. MOTTL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. MOTTL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues in the House, the achievements and enduring courage of Kate Petruska of my own hometown city of Parma, Ohio.

Born and raised in England, Kate served 3 years in the British Army during World War II in the Royal Corps of Signals with the Supreme Head of Allied Expeditionary Forces under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

She met her husband, John, while he was stationed in England and they were married 3 days before D-day, 1944. She became a U.S. citizen in 1950 and worked with PTA and church organizations while her children, David and Janice Kay, were growing up. Her husband became mayor of Parma in 1967 while her son was serving in Vietnam. Kate helped organize the Southwest Military Moms with the local Red Cross during this time. This was a group of mothers whose sons were fighting in Vietnam who were dedicated to helping support their morale in a variety of ways.

In 1976, she accepted the chairmanship of the Women's Health Day Committee in cooperation with the American Cancer Society Cuyahoga Unit and has served as such for 7 years. In this capacity, she organizes educational efforts to teach area women of the necessity of early detection of cancer.

Her daughter, Janice, was stricken with ovarian cancer and died at age 23 in 1978 after completing her second year of law school at Toledo University. Janice asked her mother to continue her efforts in the cause of cancer control.

Kate had a mastectomy of the right breast in 1981 after a biopsy revealed cancer, and she received several months of cobalt treatments. A malignant lymph node was also removed from the right clavicle and she was put on monthly chemotherapy treatments. In 1982, the left breast was removed.

She is presently serving on the board of directors of the American Cancer Society and the board of trustees of Parma Community General Hospital. She is also chairman of the health committee of the senior citizens advisory board. Other organizations to which she belongs are the Parma Women's Democratic Club, the Parma Democratic Club, the Parma Area Fine Arts Club, the Parma Junior Woman's League, and the Parma Historical Society.

Kate Petruska is a credit to her community of Parma, Ohio. Her voluntary contributions and years of service in the battle against cancer are to be commended. Her own family tragedy and personal fight against this disease have made her all the more committed to spurring the education and awareness of cancer to others. I am honored to have a woman of this caliber in my district and hometown. We need more outstanding citizens like Kate Petruska.●

A TRIBUTE TO SHANNON HUMPHREY

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inform Members of this body of the heroic actions of an Independence, Mo., high school senior, Shannon Humphrey.

Shannon Humphrey was on her way to the store when she saw a riding lawnmower overturn, pinning the rider underneath. With no thought for her own safety, she reacted immediately by pulling the man from underneath the lawn mower, just seconds before the mower exploded.

For her heroic actions, Miss Humphrey received several awards. She became only the second Missourian to ever receive the Kiwanis International Robert P. Connally Award. She received the key to the city, and Independence Mayor Barbara Potts even proclaimed a Shannon Humphrey Day in her honor. I join those who applaud Shannon Humphrey for her bravery and selfless actions and I want her to know how proud we are to have her as a Missourian.●

THE TAX BILL

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, August 25, 1982, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE TAX BILL

In his most politically surprising move to date, President Reagan has called on Congress to increase taxes.

The President's bill raises $99 billion in revenue in a host of ways, largely by increasing taxpayers' compliance with the law ($32 billion), raising excise taxes on tobacco, telephone use, and air travel ($19 billion), and scaling back major tax breaks recently created for big business ($48 billion). These provisions soften the impact of last year's massive tax cut and help moderate the excesses of that cut, which heavily favored large corporations and rich individuals. The bill also includes cuts in spending totaling more than $15 billion in welfare, medicare, medicaid, and other programs, and it provides an additional six to ten weeks of compensation for jobless workers whose benefits have run out.

This bill represents a very important turning point for the President in at least two senses. Mr. James Baker, a chief White House advisor, acknowledges that the President's economic program has not worked. The President in shifting away from the "supply-side" theory he advocated for the first 18 months of his term and has begun to drift back toward traditional economic thinking. Also, the President is pushing major legislation without the unified support of his party for the first time. In order to get the bill passed, he has had to reach out to the Democrats in ways he never tried before.

It is not conventional policy to raise taxes in a recession, but these are not conventional times. This bill, in effect, cancels only about one fourth of the 1981 tax cut. Taken together, the 1981 act and this bill leave taxes much lower than they otherwise would have been. The tax increases and spending reductions in the bill must be seen as a package intended to slash deficits by $130 billion over the next three years. Indeed, the main argument for the bill is that it is a constructive and necessary step forward in restricting unfair tax preferences and in dealing with our serious budgetary and economic problems. The added revenues and savings should help reduce deficits and relieve the pressure on interest rates; the new reforms should help make the tax code a little fairer.

Some people argue that a better way to deal with our fiscal problems is to cut spending. This argument, appealing as it is, overlooks the events of the last year. The President and Congress have persistently combed through the budget, looking for places to cut. Both are now having difficulty finding the room to cut any more. The events of the last year make it clear that even with additional and necessary cuts in spending, the sharply increased military expenditures make it impossible for the President and Congress to agree on spending cuts of sufficient magnitude to keep deficits in check—much less bring them down. I am aware that the passage of this bill does not relieve us of the responsibility to cut spending vigorously. Deficits simply cannot be controlled without further reductions in spending.

This tax bill followed a short and quite unconventional route to enactment. It never went through the time-consuming procedures which are part of the legislative process. According to the Constitution, measures raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. This bill was fashioned in the Senate, attached to an obscure House-passed revenue bill there, and then passed. The House, refusing to develop its own bill, moved to take the Senate's bill directly to a joint conference. The conferees generally ignored the rules and included provisions that had cleared neither chamber. Then the conferees sent the bill back to each chamber under rules that allowed only a single vote, up or down; votes on separate provisions were barred. I opposed this procedure from beginning to end even though it was supported by the leadership of both political parties. It violated the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution and denied House members an opportunity to work their will on specific provisions of the bill.

To enact a tax increase in an election year, the political and economic reasons for it must be compelling. My fear is that mounting deficits will keep interest rates high and will eventually wreck the economic recovery. Also, I am fearful that if present trends continue, the financial structure of the economy will crack. I think that the President is right when he says that the taxes are needed for lower interest rates, stronger economic recovery, and more jobs. His point, however, must not be overstated. No one should suggest that our economic troubles are over because of the bill. Rather, we should only suggest that these troubles will be lessened because of it.

Like any complex bill, this bill contains a number of provisions with which I do not agree. I would have voted against these provisions had I been given the opportunity to vote separately on them. Among the provisions in question are increased contributions for beneficiaries of medicare and medicaid, a "medicare tax" on federal employees, a disproportionate increase in the tax on tobacco, and withholding of tax on interest and dividends. However, because of the restrictive procedures of debate I was not permitted to vote on separate provisions of the bill, but only for or against the entire 723-page measure.

The popular vote, I suspect, was against the tax increase. In a bill with hundreds of provisions, it is always easy and tempting to seize on one, or even several, unpopular provisions to justify a vote against the bill. But as I thought more and more about the bill, I kept coming back to one central point: the massive deficits must come down if we are to make the economy healthy again. I might prefer other ways of getting deficits down (by cutting spending or raising some other taxes, for example), but in the real world those other ways were never really alternatives. The reality of the situation is that if deficits are going to come down, the bill must be enacted. So I voted "yes".●

SAN BERNARDINO COMMUNITY SERVICES DEPARTMENT—A TRACK RECORD OF EXCELLENCE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, in these times of fiscal restraint, creative programing and cost-effective initiatives are more than merely good administration, they are necessary. In the 36th Congressional District, we have an example of innovative programing in the San Bernardino County Community Services Department (CSD) that should be used as a role model for organizations seeking imagination and efficacy in administration.

The Community Services Department of San Bernardino County has been selected for national honors as a recipient of the National Association of Counties' (NACo) prestigious NACo Award for 1982, just recently announced.

CSD's transporation for seniors project and housing opportunities program were selected for 1982 NACo Awards. Furthermore, CSD has been awarded 10 NACo Awards in 5 years—a track record of excellence. It is for this reason that I commend CSD and its outstanding community action board. The members of the CSD Community Action Board are: Paul Treadway, chairman; Wanda Bethel; Camilla Herrera; George Gonzales; Venny Newman; Robbin Hawkins; Arturo Rios; Josephine Knopf; Dolores Kossman; James Hackleman; Dorothy Grant; Eloisa Zermeno; and John Jimenez.

I recommend the following article, which presents a more detailed account of the Community Services Department's achievements, to my colleagues. The article follows:

[From the El Chicano, July 29, 1982]

COMMUNITY SERVICES DEPARTMENT RECEIVES NATIONAL RECOGNITION

The National Association of Counties has announced its prestigious NACo Awards for 1982 and the Community Service Department (CSD) of San Bernardino County has been selected for national honors.

CSD's transportation for Seniors Project and Housing Opportunities Program received 1982 NACo Awards. "CSD has consistently received national recognition for creative programming and cost-effectiveness," stated Rodolfo H. Castro, Executive Director for the Community Service Department.

"The Transportation for Senior Projects provides for the unmet transportation needs of senior citizens, handicapped, and low-income clients in the largest county in the continental United States," states Herman Pena, Transportation Manager, for the award winning program. Sandra Brown, CSD Housing Coordinator, stated that her program provides service, advocacy and emergency housing assistance.

Pat Nickols, CSD Administrative Assistant, stated that Community Service Department has been awarded ten (10) NACo awards in five (5) years and they are: Housing Opportunities Program, Sandra Brown, Housing Coordinator (1982); Transportation for Seniors, Herman Pena, Transportation Manager (1982); Grassroots Women's Program, Sylvia Robles, Project Coordinator (1981); Mobil Home Energy Conservation, Kelly McQueen, Energy Program Manager (1981); Operation Alert, Polly Duncanson, Program Associate (1981); Roadrunner Transit Program, Susan Campos, Assistant Transportation Manager (1981); Ballet Folklorico de San Bernardino, Maria Juarez, Special Program Manager (1981); Access California, Jackie, McIntyre, Capabilities Coordinator (1979); Bon View Art Project (1979) and Energy Conservation Education, Dina Hunter, Program Manager (1978).

"A track record of excellence," stated Paul Treadway, CSD Board Chairman. John Jimenez, CSD Planning and Finance Committee Chairman, stated that the Mobile Home Energy Conservation Project awarded a NACo in 1981 also received the Presidential Energy Efficiency Award.●

TAXATION OF ANNUITIES

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, section 267 of H.R. 4961 materially tightens the taxation of all annuities, both variable and fixed, by providing in general that distributions prior to annuitization are treated as coming first from income rather than principal, loans are treated as distributions, and a penalty tax is imposed on premature distributions. These significant changes would prevent a variable annuity from being a substitute for a mutual fund investment.

However, the scope of an adverse ruling issued last year by IRS regarding variable annuities still has not been defined. In particular, the IRS should reconsider its attitude toward variable annuities and the investment management practices of annuity funds. A variable annuity should be treated as an annuity regardless of whether its investment manager is affiliated with the life insurance company issuing the annuity, whether its investment policy or assets are similar to those of a mutual fund, and whether its investment manager manages a mutual fund. The IRS should resolve these questions promptly in view of the substantial changes in section 267 of H.R. 4961.●

RICHARD P. CHRISTIANSEN

HON. JOHN H. ROUSSELOT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, the Nation's construction industry as well as his family and friends suffered a severe loss with the sudden and untimely death of Richard P. Christiansen of Arcadia, Calif.

He was respected throughout the field of industrial plant construction. Active in the affairs of the National Constructors Association, he was elected last year as its chairman. When his term ended early this year, he was appointed to head the association's policymaking group, the advisory committee.

Dick Christiansen joined the Jacobs organization in 1956 as a design engineer but his interests extended beyond the drawing board to encompass the complex world of men and machines where huge industrial process and manufacturing plants are constructed to meet the needs of the modern world.

His talents were recognized as he moved up from construction superintendent to construction manager and to vice president of construction for his company. He became president of Jacobs Constructors in 1976. His seniority within the Jacobs organization was second only to that of Joseph Jacobs, its founder and chairman.

He had a deep interest in the welfare of construction workers, carpenters, pipefitters, ironworkers, and all the other mechanics and laborers who came to work on projects of his company. He took a personal interest in developing project agreements with the building trades unions which spelled out jobsite working conditions. One international union, the United Association of Plumbers & Pipefitters, awarded him lifetime honorary membership. The California Central Labor Council chose him for the Council's Man-of-the-Year award, which was to have been presented to him at its forthcoming annual meeting.

Construction is a hazardous occupation and Dick Christiansen was concerned about the safety and health of the industry's workers. He played a role last year in eliminating Federal dual regulations for area projects located on the surface of mine property that are not considered mining activities. The jurisdictional change was from the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA). Since then MSHA has regained jurisdiction but Dick's efforts have built a strong base for our side when the matter is taken up by Congress again this year.

Dick Christiansen was a family man, devoted to his wife, Judith, and their two children. He was interested in his community and active in his church, Trinity Lutheran, in Arcadia.

He was respected in the construction industry as an achiever and as one who made it on his own. He will be missed.●

A TRIBUTE TO ROY WILKINS

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to one of the greatest civil rights leaders in our Nation's history, Mr. Roy Wilkins, who passed away 1 year ago today.

His life was an inspiration to all of us. Grandson of a Mississippi slave and son of a college graduate who was forced to earn a living tending a brick kiln. Roy Wilkins had the strength and determination to climb out of the ghetto and pursue social justice. He began his career as the crusading editor of a black weekly, the Call, in Kansas City, Mo. Within a few years he was asked to join the staff of NAACP. During his tenure of over 40 years with the organization, he led the drive to enact antilynching laws, set the legal process in motion in Brown against Board of Education, organized the historic 1963 march on Washington, and helped President Johnson develop the Civil Rights Act of 1964. On the occasion of his retirement he promised "As long as there is breath in my body, I shall be with you in this fight." The very spirit of his commitment is still with us today.

To truly honor his memory we must complete his work. To truly walk in his footsteps we must be unselfish, patient, and committed to nonviolence. Picking up his banner may not be easy but if we could follow in his footsteps we would accomplish much to be proud of. There is still work to be done. The present administration has not been moving toward the goal of equality for all. The memory of Roy Wilkins should be an encouragement for all of us to continue the fight and bring about lasting change in America.●

H.R. 5250—COPYRIGHT LAW PERTAINING TO HOME TELEVISION

HON. THOMAS S. FOLEY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, last December, I introduced H.R. 5250, a bill which would exempt from copyright law the recording of television programs in the privacy of the home so long as the recording is not made either directly or indirectly for commercial advantage. This measure would protect consumers from the potential burden of a royalty tax on the purchase of video recorders and blank recording tapes.

Throughout the country strong support has been building for a copyright exemption on the home use of video recorders, and numerous editorials have appeared in the past year which underscore the importance of this issue to the public. IS TAPING AT HOME ILLEGAL?

The Supreme Court has agreed to rule on a case involving the legality or illegality of home video-taping. An estimated five million Americans have video-taping equipment, and the outcome of the case could have far-reaching ramifications.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco ruled last October that video-cassette taping of copyrighted television programs violates copyright law, even when done at home for non-commercial use. On one side of this confrontation are the producers of taping equipment, and on the other side are the producers of movies and other television shows. If the lower court ruling is upheld, the effect of the decision could spread to audio tape-recorders, and ultimately to ordinary copying machines that most offices have.

Sony Corp. is one of the major defendants. It is a major producer of taping equipment. Also included as defendants are distributors such as Sears, Roebuck and Company. The movie companies would like the video-cassette manufacturers to be ordered to pay a copyright royalty for each machine or tape they sell or distribute.

This raises some interesting questions. Makers of video-tape machines have done nothing illegal. They are not taping the copyrighted shows. And yet they are being asked to pay the costs of copyright infringement by someone else who might decide to use their products in an illegal way.

This is a whole new concept. A manufacturer could be liable if one of his products is used illegally. General Motors could be liable for overtime parking tickets given to GM cars. Haig and Haig could be liable if someone is convicted for driving while under the influence (assuming he had been drinking Haig and Haig). Eastman Kodak would be liable if photographs were illegally taken in court.

Obviously, the reason for picking on the manufacturer is because of the difficulty of going after the real villain, sitting in his living room with his video recorder turned on. There is no question it's much simpler to go after the manufacturer, but that doesn't mean it is justified.

If it is illegal to record your favorite TV program, it is just as illegal to record music from your favorite radio station. Therefore, anyone making old-fashioned audio recorders is equally liable. And for that matter, so is anyone making copying machines that can copy copyrighted publications. As we move into the electronic age, it turns out that nearly everyone is guilty.

This is more a matter for Congress than for our already-clogged courts. What two consenting adults do, or what one consenting adult with a home video-recorder does in the privacy of a home ought not to be illegal or subject to some royalty payment to some Hollywood producer.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Oct. 28, 1981]

TV TAPE AND RED TAPE

When we read the other day of a court ruling which, if upheld, could possibly result in putting Sony Betamax salesmen in jail, we decided that something misfired in the judicial process. How could it be that manufacturers, retailers and users of videotape recorders could be in violation of federal copyright law any more than sellers of photocopiers or audiotape recorders?

The dichotomy is the result of poorly written law, inconsistent court decisions and the legal challenges presented by the rapid advance in technology. Last week's ruling by the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in California, which declared that home use of videotape recorders violates the copyrights on movies and television programs, shows that Congress and the courts have yet to come to grips fully with the conflict between the use of modern technology and established copyright monopolies.

The quintessential law of copyright and patents—is contained in the Constitution: "To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing, for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right of their respective writings and discoveries." The Supreme Court has said, "The economic philisophy behind the clause . . . is the conviction that encouragement of individual effort by personal gain is the best way to advance public welfare."

The intent of the law is to help advance the public good and not to safeguard self-aggrandizement. To this end, however, the law recognizes that some amount of economic monopoly must be afforded to writers, artists and scientists if the public good is to be well served. Who would devote so much time, energy and money to art and science if the fruits of these labors could be freely exploited by someone else for personal gain?

The copyright laws written by Congress have often been ill-suited to achieve these joint goals. As a result, the courts have created a doctrine of "fair use," which basically permits a limited infringement on "exclusive rights" to copyrighted material for private, non-commercial use. From 1955 to 1976, Congress worked on new copyright legislation in the hopes of clarifying some of these conflicts between the copyright holder's rights and the rights of the public to use the material. The unsatisfactory results of Congress's work is a copyright law that is even more confusing than before and that still fails to keep up with the advances of technology. For instance, a special exemption is given for the recording of sound broadcasts and recorded material at home by audio-tape recorders. But Congress did not even mention videotape recorders in the legislation.

The Sony case will probably end up in the Supreme Court. We would hope the judges would ignore much of the legalese that now engulfs copyright law and reflect instead on the intent embodied in the Constitution. The development of videotape recorders certainly contributed to the public welfare. It is doubtful that their use by millions of Americans at home will somehow adversely affect the development of science and the arts.

[From the San Jose News, Apr. 5, 1982]

DON'T TAX THE BETAMAX

Rep. Don Edwards, D-San Jose, thinks filmmakers and songwriters are getting a raw deal. Unfortunately, the consumer is going to get burned by the little scheme he's cooked up.

The issue is recordings and royalties. Edwards believes that the proliferation of videotape recorders, cassette tape players and other home electronic gear infringes on artists' copyrights. So he's introduced a bill, H.R. 5705, to make sure these artists get their fair share of the revenues.

But will it? Edwards obviously is responding to last October's U.S. Court of Appeals ruling that said private, home use of videotape (VTR) recorders constitutes a copyright violation. The so-called "Betamax Case" (named after Sony's popular videotape recorder) is on appeal at the U.S. Supreme Court.

The congressman, recognizing the broad—not to mention bizarre—legal implications of outlawing in-home VTR use, wants to exempt this practice from copyright laws. This is fine, and Edwards should have stopped here. Yet H.R. 5705 goes on to empower the little-known federal Copyright Royalty Tribunal to impose a special tax on the machines and blank videotapes. The tax would be reviewed and revised every five years.

That's one helluva way to grant a copyright exemption.

There are two major flaws in this approach. First, there's the knotty procedural problems of how to set the fee and how to divide royalty revenue equitably. Edwards apparently thinks that the government can reliably predict the number of VTRs that will be used to tape particular broadcasts.

Second, and more fundamentally, H.R. 5705 embodies the misguided notion that television and motion picture producers must be compensated a second time for their work.

When used for personal non-commercial purposes, VTRs merely save programs that already have been purchased by cable or network television. Rep. Stan Parris, R-Va., and Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., who have authored competing VTR legislation, correctly liken such recording to the more widespread practice of taping record albums and radio shows.

Congress granted approval to this type of in-home taping when it specifically exempted personal non-commercial audio recordings from copyright laws back in 1976. Logically, Parris and DeConcini have now introduced H.R. 4808 and S. 1758 to extend this exemption to the relatively new videotape market.

Unfortunately, Edwards hasn't gotten the message. He not only wants to grant a sweeping royalty windfall to TV and motion-picture producers, but is proposing repeal of the audio rule by slapping new taxes on tape recorders and blank tapes, too.

With predictable backing from the film, TV and recording industries, Edwards has attracted 45 co-sponsors for his bill. But the Parris and DeConcini measures, which have won broader support, are cleaner and more realistic approaches. With nearly 4 million VTRs in use today, home video recording falls under the "fair use" doctrine—that is, a common practice falling outside royalty and copyright laws. Congress should leave it at that.

Unless specific damages can be proved and until an equitable compensation mechanism comes along—we're not holding our breath on either count—Edwards and his supporters ought to forget about H.R. 5705.

[From the Sun-Times (Chicago, Ill.), June 17, 1982]

DON'T PRE-EMPT BETAMAX VERDICT

Since 1976, Universal City Studios and Sony have been arguing whether a moviemaker's rights are violated because Sony sells equipment that lets viewers tape TV programs off the air and watch them later.

The question isn't direct damages: Universal and the rest of the motion picture industry have never been able to show how they have suffered specific financial loss. Rather, they seem to be trying to cash in on a huge new sector of the entertainment market.

In the six years since the suit started, the annual value of video recorders shipped from Sony's and other companies' factories has gone from about $34 million to more than $1.6 billion. Some 3.5 million U.S. homes already have the machines, and sales this year are expected to exceed 1.5 million units.

Universal lost in U.S. District Court and won in the Court of Appeals, which said Sony could be liable for damages, or sales of recorders could be forbidden. Now the Supreme Court has agreed to hear the case, and a decision should come in about a year.

Meanwhile, the Motion Picture Association of America wants Congress to tax both video and audio machines, plus their tapes—even if they aren't used for off-the-air recording, and even though broadcasters have already paid for the right to distribute programs. Proceeds would be split among copyright-holders.

We see little merit in the royalty plan, and even less in Hollywood's push for Congress to short-circuit the court. Let it speak.

[From the West Palm Beach (Fla.) Post, Nov. 4, 1981]

HOME TAPING

A federal appeals court in San Francisco was unlucky enough to hear a civil suit involving the new electronic technology and consequently rendered an opinion which raised more questions than it answered.

The court held that manufacturers of home video recorders and people who sell them are liable for damages if people use the equipment to violate the copyright laws.

The issue was a claim by Universal Studios and Walt Disney Productions that their copyrighted television shows were infringed upon by Sony, by stores which retailed Sony's Betamax video recorders and by a man who bought a Betamax and taped shows off network television.

Copyright laws should be diligently enforced, of course, but we wonder if it makes sense to hold liable the makers of devices which anyone may use illegally. What about the makers of office copying machines, for example, if those machines are used to reproduce copyrighted book pages? Or, reducing the point to absurdity, are the makers of typewriters and pencils to be held liable for the misuse of their products?

The real concern, it seems here, should be with the person misusing the equipment, and the question then becomes whether the maker of television shows is entitled to a royalty for the taping and replaying of his product. If he is, then someone must face the obvious problem of monitoring the usage and collecting the fee.

It has been suggested that a practical approach to that problem would be a flat royalty imposed upon the manufacturer or retailer, which of course would be passed on to the buyer.

We wonder, however, if the producers of TV shows are entitled to even that much compensation. Copyright laws are supposed to protect artistic creators from the commercial or public exploitation of their product.

The ordinary user of a home video recorder has no commercial purpose in mind. He saves a program for his and his family's occasional perusal, and it's hard to see why he should be charged a royalty for the private, noncommercial usage of a program that has been offered for public view.

[From the Herald American (Boston, Mass.), Nov. 1, 1981]

IS "FAIR USE" UNFAIR?

Two years ago, a federal district judge in Los Angeles ruled that taping television shows on home videotape recorders is not an infringement of copyright laws. Recently, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled just the opposite.

Taping of televised movies and other programs is indeed unlawful, say the appellate judges. Moreover, they ruled that the manufacturers of videotape recorders are responsible for the infringement and should pay royalties to the owners of material recorded on the equipment they sell.

We think the district judge was right in the first place. Taping television shows for personal use is not substantially different from taping music from a radio. Congress and the courts have established in the past that audio recording in the home is a "fair use" of material otherwise protected by copyright.

The test, of course, is whether the tapes are used strictly for personal entertainment. If they were sold or exhibited in any commercial way it would be a clear infringement of copyright—but by the person using the tapes, not by the manufacturers of the equipment.

Old concepts of copyright protection are going to have to yield to advancing technology Video recorders are posing the same challenge to the entertainment industry that photocopiers have posed to the publishing industry. Policing the non-commercial reproduction of broadcast or published material under copyright is well nigh impossible, and an attempt to enforce copyright laws at that level would be at best a nuisance and at worst an infringement on personal freedom.

The videotape case, pitting producers of movies and television shows against equipment manufacturers, has been in the courts since 1976, and we probably have not heard the last of it. The manufacturers are expected to take the issue to the U.S. Supreme Court, where we can hope the "fair use" doctrine will be given broader interpretation than it received in the Court Appeals.

[From the Detroit (Mich.) News, Nov. 4, 1981]

HOME VIDEO RECORDERS

Life was once relatively simple for television producers. They hired actors, writers, and directors. They recruited sponsors and aired their shows.

Then along came syndication and endless reruns, and now video cassettes and home recording equipment. First the actors went on strike, claiming a piece of the new action. Then the writers did the same. After all, why settle for a flat payment when your work is going to be an ongoing source of revenue for the producer.

The studios vented their frustration in the only direction open to them—toward the perpetrators of this technological bonanza. They sued the manufacturers of home video equipment used to tape copyrighted television programs.

Univeral City Studios and Walt Disney Productions charged the use of a home video set to record a television show is an infringement of copyright, and as such should be prohibited.

Incredibly, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with them.

Those liable, said the court, are the manufacturer of the equipment, the distributor, the store that sells the equipment, and, yes, the consumer who tapes a favorite show for later viewing.

However, the court said it has no desire to put all those manufacturers, distributors, and appliance stores out of business. A better solution, said the court, would be for the producers and all of the above to make a deal in which the producers receive royalties for the sale of equipment designed to tape their shows.

The court based its ruling on a strict and technically accurate interpretation of existing copyright law. But is it a feasible plan? Can it be enforced? And is it really in the best interest of the entertainment industry?

If this use of home video recorders can be banned, what about tape recorders used to tape music from the radio? Will all recording devices be banned, or will consumers have to register their equipment with police and swear they won't use it to break the law?

Existing laws already effectively prohibit reproduction of broadcast materials for commercial purposes. It seems to us that home use is a very different thing. This is one case in which a court should be asked to enforce its own impractical ruling.●

BRIGANTINE "CENTURION" TO BE CHARTER VESSEL

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to authorize documentation of the vessel Centurion as a vessel of the United States, so that she may engage in coastal trade as a charter vessel. The Centurion is a 53-foot brigantine, built at New Smyrna Beach, Fla. Its construction was commissioned in 1937 to be, as close as possible, a replica of an 1812 American gunboat. The vessel was not completed by its builder, Thomas Langan, until 1946.

Subsequently it was sold to David Stern—then to Mr. J. H. Winfield of Canada who, in the next year, sailed it to the Caribbean. Although believed lost in a hurricane, the 74-year-old Canadian sailor successfully brought this vessel to Bermuda. Sold again in the next year to Murtaugh Guiness for local charter, it was sailed to Alexandria, Egypt—over 6,500 miles—by Mr. Richard de Graff-Hunter of Britain. For a time it was berthed in Beruit until its sale to Horace W. Fuller, an American citizen, who chartered the vessel around the Greek coast. It was then sold to another British citizen, John H. Millar. Mr. Millar then loaned the brigantine to the Royal Yacht Squadron, where she was used to train cadets for the 1976 tall ships worldwide exposition.

She was next sold, then donated, to the Chesapeake Maritime Museum in St. Michael's, Md. Mr. Joseph B. Simoncelli of Scranton, Pa., purchased this fine vessel from the museum and has spent over $70,000 refitting it in Cambridge, Md., and Newport, R.I. Mr. Simoncelli intends to employ a crew of three to charter the brigantine in coastal trade.

Adoption of this bill will result in no cost to the Federal Government, nor would it increase or affect Federal regulations in any way.●

PASTERNAK FAMILY HONORED

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, recently, the B'nai B'rith Foundation announced that the Pasternak family of St. Louis will be presented the B'nai B'rith Guardian of the Menorah Award for distinguished communal service. I am honored to take this opportunity to extend my deepest congratulations to the Pasternaks on this momentous occasion.

"Helping people has held us together," Samuel Pasternak once said in explanation of his family's devotion to each other and to the St. Louis Jewish community.

The Pasternak family—brothers Samuel and Joseph, and sisters Helen and Sylvia—have contributed a combined 300 years of service to their local Jewish community.

All four Pasternaks have engaged in an unusual range of philanthropy and communal service, giving generously of their time, energies, and resources. They are active in the St. Louis Jewish Community Centers Association, and endowed the Ida Pasternak Auditorium in memory of their mother. They sponsor the Faye Pasternak Margolies family life education program and the Harry and Faye Pasternak Margolies institute of family living—programs offered through the JCCA that present courses aimed at strengthening Jewish life and clarifying parental roles.

They have established the Sam Pasternak Foundation, which supports a number of worthy projects, including a camp scholarship program for underprivileged youth, music scholarships, a concert series and special transportation for the elderly that provides buses and cabs for those who might otherwise be homebound.

The Pasternaks also work on behalf of the young—they helped establish the Susan Jacobs Day Care Building; and the elderly—the Pasternaks were instrumental in securing the current physical facility of the Jewish Center for the Aged, and in founding its Special Gift Committee. In addition, they serve Parkview Towers, a facility for senior adults.

Their philanthropy has aided such diverse concerns as cancer research, educational programs of the Jewish Hospital, a symphony orchestra and the Shaare Emeth Temple in St. Louis.

The four will be publicly recognized for their contributions to St. Louis Jewry when B'nai B'rith International, the world's largest and oldest Jewish service organization, bestows upon them the Guardian of the Menorah Award for Distinguished Communal Service, on November 7, 1982, at a dinner in their honor at the Breckenridge Inn, Frontenac, Mo.●

REPEAL WITHHOLDING

HON. TOM HAGEDORN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to repeal the withholding of taxes on interest and dividends.

I have consistently opposed withholding taxes and I want to provide this House with the opportunity to vote separately on this issue. Two years ago this House overwhelmingly defeated withholding and the vote on the separate rule was close enough to warrant time for a debate on this singular provision.

I urge you to cosponsor this bill and join those of us who will not settle for a hastily drafted bill in which we had no voice. Listed below are just some of the reasons for opposing withholding:

A July 1981 IRS study documented that when the IRS has information reporting (as it does from 1099 forms for all bank accounts and dividend earnings) there is a taxpayer compliance rate of 96.7 percent. What we really need is greater information reporting on all sources of income that are currently exempt from the 1099 reporting process.

According to a nationwide survey by Behaviorial Research Corp., 70 percent of the American people oppose withholding and 50 percent say withholding will discourage them from making investments. When we compare the U.S. savings rate of 5.6 percent of income with other nation's such as West Germany's 14 percent and Japan's 24 percent, I believe we all agree it is ludicrous to discourage savings even further.

This provision will cost the law-abiding public $1 billion to implement and $1 billion annually to administer. This figure comes very close to the revenue it is expected to raise. What will the Government receive after banks and other institutions write off the high cost of compliance as a very real legitimate business expense?

In 1979, 77 percent of all tax returns filed were due a refund from the Treasury. Obviously, the additional withholding requirement will result in even greater overpayments. Treasury expects to raise $4.3 billion from withholding in fiscal year 1983. Only about $1.3 billion of that comes from increased compliance. The other $3 billion is, in reality, an interest-free loan from the American people to Uncle Sam.

To avoid overwithholding, this provision will force most of the 60 million dividend and interest recipients to file exemption certificates (an average of five or more per taxpayer) or to change their wage withholding or estimated payments. Over 90 percent of taxpayers 65 and over have income from interest or dividends and nearly all would qualify from exemptions. This is less Government regulation?

I believe these reasons barely scratch the surface. Above all, I believe we deserve the opportunity to vote on this issue. That is the least we can do for the 70 percent of the American public who do not support this proposal. I urge your consideration and cosponsorship.●

ENVIRONMENTAL SUCCESSES

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, September 8, 1982, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

ENVIRONMENTAL SUCCESSES

One of my biggest surprises in Congress this year has been the strength of environmental issues. As the year began, I thought that a combination of deregulation and changes in legislation would weaken substantially the effort to clean up and protect our air, water, and land. I thought that Congress would reverse the progress the nation had made toward cleaner air, purer water, and the conservation of wilderness during the 1970's. I now think the fight for a better environment will be a closer match than I had expected.

A few weeks ago, the environmentalists scored a series of impressive victories in Congress, victories which indicated that the environmental movement is by no means prepared to stand silently by and watch its accomplishments dismantled:

Cuts in environmental programs proposed by the President have met defeat in many committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and his proposals for less monitoring of the environment have been delayed, watered down, withdrawn, and rejected.

Both the House and the Senate are moving to require the spending of more funds for scientific research to identify the chemicals which endanger human health, to determine when concentrations of pollutants are hazardous, and to meet other needs.

The House voted by a far wider margin than anticipated, 340 to 58, to prohibit exploration for oil and natural gas in protected areas.

The House also voted overwhelmingly, 352 to 56, to extend federal legislation on pesticides for another two years, after defeating several weakening amendments, one of which would have kept states from enacting stricter standards.

During its consideration of bills extending the Clean Air Act, a House committee turned down an amendment on airborne pollutants which would have weakened the legislation significantly.

Despite objections from the administration, a Senate committee resoundingly approved its own version of the Clean Air Act, with provisions which really amount to mere "fine-tuning".

These developments in Congress are not the only ones which have changed the outlook for environmental protection. Decisions to be made in Congress in the next few weeks could likewise boost the environmental movement. For example, two environmentally controversial projects, the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway and the Clinch River Breeder Reactor, are in jeopardy despite repeated approval by Congress.

As I reflect on the sudden display of pro-environmental feeling in Congress, it occurs to me that I really should not have been surprised by it. Nothing out of the ordinary has really happened. Congressmen and Senators who have visited their constituencies recently realize that people from all parts of the political spectrum are worried about pollution of the air and water and are fearful that our remaining wilderness is not being managed properly. These people are willing to incur some additional cost and put up with a reasonable amount of government regulation to ensure that the environment is protected.

Politicians are paying attention to what their constituents are saying, not to what the experts are claiming about the lack of interest in environmental issues. The polls say that the pro-environmental vote could figure prominently in the upcoming election. In March of this year, a survey showed that 13% of all voters felt so strongly about environmental issues that a politician's stand on such issues could determine their vote. A survey released just a short time ago showed that 85% of all voters supported strict enforcement of laws on clean air and water; a mere 10% of the voters did not favor such enforcement.

As I see it, there are two principal factors which serve to explain the surge of support for environmental issues in Congress and the depth of pro-environmental sentiment among the people:

One factor is the perception that the Reagan Administration is unsympathetic toward the environment, especially as environmental policies are presented by the Secretary of the Interior, James Watt, and by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Anne Gorsuch. The pro-environmental consensus runs strong, deep, and wide in this country. It cuts across ideological, regional, and partisan lines. It is hardly surprising that Congress and the people have reacted vigorously, rallying to the defense of the environment in many areas. Many persons have simply misjudged the public's attitude on the environment: most Americans want clean air, pure water, and unspoiled wilderness, and they are unwilling to sacrifice them, even if protection costs a little more. They have never been persuaded—and it is not likely they could be convinced—that we cannot have both a clean environment and a growing economy. The public sees stewardship of air, water, and wilderness as an integral part of prosperity.

A second factor is positive change in the environmental movement itself. Environmental groups have always been well organized, but lately they have become sophisticated, effective players in the political arena. Armed with computerized data banks and other innovations available to the modern lobbyist, the environmentalists are now better able to compete head-to-head with older, more experienced groups in drafting legislation, rounding up votes, and forging coalitions. The environmental groups do not possess as much money as the lobbyists they often oppose, but as they continue to grow in experience they are wielding greater clout with members of Congress. Moreover, these groups have learned how to work at the grass roots and how to join forces—with hunters and fishermen, with state governments, and with proenvironmental businesses, unions, civic groups, and professional organizations—to reach mutually desired goals.●

H.R. 6957—STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE APPROPRIATIONS

HON. JIM SANTINI

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. SANTINI. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the House Travel and Tourism Caucus, I want to express my concern over the level of funding provided for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration in H.R. 6957.

The recommended $5 million will not even allow the USTTA to meet its mandate established by the National Tourism Policy Act just last year. That act made it national policy to work to bring more foreign tourists to the United States, thus increasing employment opportunities for Americans.

In examining which programs should be pruned during austere times, it behooves Members of Congress to look closely at costs and benefits. Attracting foreign visitors to the United States is a cost-effective enterprise for the Federal Government to undertake. For every dollar spent, studies have shown a return of more than $18 in revenue. Few other Government programs could show such a return on investment.

It is particularly surprising that the USTTA budget would be cut at a time of high unemployment. For a very small investment, growth in jobs can be great. If this Congress would, among other things provide the funding necessary for funding a complete marketing program in USTTA, perhaps we would not be forced to consider the need to expand unemployment benefits an extra 13 weeks.

As we continue in the budget process, I will be seeking support for additional funds for this administration. I am confident that additional funds will be authorized, and I hope that the members of the committee will agree to fund this essential program up to the authorized level.●

TRIBUTE TO THE CITY OF IRWINDALE, CALIF.

HON. JOHN H. ROUSSELOT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to the city of Irwindale, Calif., which will be celebrating its silver anniversity and the 173d year of independence of Mexico during the second weekend of September 1982. Many events are planned, ranging from an antique car parade to a traditional Mexican fiesta of mouth-watering tamales and music by a mariachi band. A costume contest will kick off the Saturday night activities, which will include dinner, dancing, and the crowning of the fiesta queen. The proud community of Irwindale has worked hard to make this the greatest fiesta of them all.

The silver anniversary celebrates Irwindale's day of incorporation 25 years ago on August 6, 1957. Irwindale became the 56th city in Los Angeles County. Known as the Jardin de Roca—Garden of Rocks—this community began a colorful history back in the 1850's when it was first settled by the families of Gregorio Fraijo and Fecundo Ayon. The land was a barren waste of rocks, sand, and jackrabbits but the families stayed there, raised their families and built their thriving community. Generation after generation have stayed on the land, and now there are seven generations of native Irwindale residents from some of these families.

Within the city limits flows the San Gabriel River, which for centuries built up large accumulations of rocks round and smooth from movement down the river. At first obstacles, the rocks later became a key asset to the area. When the age of the automobile arrived in southern California, so did the demand for roads and highways which require vast quantities of crushed rock and gravel. Huge rock crushers were built along the river and soon the industry flourished. Today, Irwindale provides Los Angeles County with two-thirds of its road construction material needs.

This is a proud moment for the city of Irwindale which has served its residents and the San Gabriel Valley with great success over the last 25 years. I would like to wish Irwindale the best of luck on its silver anniversay and I am sure Irwindale will continue its outstanding contribution to its residents and the entire Los Angeles County.●

A TRIBUTE TO W. KENNETH DAVIS

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to pay tribute to W. Kenneth Davis, Deputy Secretary, Department of Energy, for being selected to receive the American Association of Engineering Societies' National Engineering Award.

Mr. Davis has proven over many decades his continuing dedication and support to the engineering field. He has served as vice president of the National Academy of Engineering, president of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers, and was professor of engineering and applied sciences at UCLA. Mr. Davis is a world renowned chemical engineer who enjoys the support and respect of his peers, both in this country and in numerous foreign countries.

Mr. President, I find it most appropriate that AAES honor W. Kenneth Davis for his many professional accomplishments over many decades in the engineering field, and I too wish to congratulate the Deputy Secretary of Energy for this honor.●

RIGHTS—NOT ARMS—FOR SPACE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I will report extensively in the near future on my involvement with the United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Unispace) conducted in Vienna last month. I had the privilege of being a part of the U.S. delegation to Unispace, and had the opportunity to discuss a number of issues with delegates from other nations as well as to participate in the nongovernmental organization activities conducted at the same time as the U.N. Conference.

I have been vocal in the past about my concern for the increasing military emphasis placed on space activities. This was a major concern expressed by most nations participating in the conference although both the Soviet Union and the United States largely tried to avoid the issue. In fact, the United States was successful in keeping reference to the "militarization" of space out of the report, referring instead to the "arms race" in space. Although the military issue is of prime importance, there are many other significant issues which need to be discussed. These include access to geostationary orbits for communications satellites and right of prior consent for remote sensing of foreign nations. At this time I would like to submit an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor which does an excellent job of summarizing some of these other critical issues.

The article follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Aug. 26, 1982]

RIGHTS—NOT ARMS—IN SPACE

The United Nations space conference in Vienna was given little enough news coverage anyway. It is all the more unfortunate that so much of this pittance dwelt on the one topic of militarizing space—and the United States reluctance to deal with it. Urgent as this matter is, other ones of far-reaching significance should not be ignored. These include:

Fair access to the "geosynchronous" or "geostationary" orbit where communications satellites can remain over the same spot while the earth turns. As more and more satellites are lofted by the industrial countries, the developing countries worry that no good locations will be left for them. Technical improvements permit increased "crowding" without communications interference. But questions remain over the developing countries' rights to technology or to control of the space above them. The outer space treaty of 1967 states that the use of space shall be free and for the benefit of all countries "irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development."

Right of prior consent to protect against technological intrusion via space. Many governments are concerned by the ability of direct-broadcast satellites to beam propaganda to their people. What kind of safeguards should there or could there be? Would they be compatible with freedom of information?

Also there are the "remote sensing" capabilities of scrutinizing military installations or crops, minerals, and other national resources from space. Developing countries want their share of this potentially valuable knowledge. They want access to any data developed about themselves, so it cannot be exploited by others—such as someone offering to buy "worthless" land when he knows oil lies under it. At the same time they want to be able to obtain remote-sensing data about themselves without having it go to others without their consent.

Such issues were aired if not resolved in the course of the Vienna conference's acceptance of a report it had been called together to consider. The final version, including recommendations to the UN, will go to the General Assembly for consideration this fall. It is to be hoped the suggestions for more study do not result in inordinate delay.

Which brings us to the small but important part of the report dealing with military activity in space. Most of the nations present were concerned not only about the futuristic weaponry that has made headlines but the conventional arms that are a more immediate threat to the peaceful uses of space. The US wanted to keep such matters out of this report and address them in the UN disarmament committee. It succeeded in eliminating references to the "militarization" of space.

But by the end of the parley the US did go along with revised paragraphs in the report calling for action to prevent an "arms race" in space—and for strict adherence to the letter and spirit of the 1967 outer space treaty. This bans nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction from space.

A mere report, alas, will not stop either Washington or Moscow from diverting resources to development of laser and other space weapons, even though their military efficacy has been seriously questioned. But the degree of agreement could be a step toward the goal backed by many in Vienna: that of outlawing the "testing, stationing, and deployment" of all weapons in space.

Prudence requires the free world to maintain defenses against any eventuality. But there is no reason that the inhabitants of Planet Earth cannot agree to put space off limits to arms—and thus concentrate on solving the problems of technology and equity in its marvelous peaceful uses.●

TRIBUTE TO THRUSTON MORTON

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in paying tribute to our beloved former colleague, Thruston Morton, who passed away on August 14 in his home State of Kentucky.

Thruston Morton was a man who dedicated his life to public service, and whose conduct taught us all something about honor and integrity. When I entered Congress in 1949, Thruston Morton was in his second term as Congressman from Kentucky, and although we belonged to different political parties, we became fast friends. His conscientious manner as a member of the Education and Labor Committee won him the respect of his colleagues in the House. When he left Congress in 1952 he became Assistant Secretary of State in the Eisenhower administration and then went on to become national chairman of his party. He continued to serve the people of Kentucky and the Nation as U.S. Senator from 1956 to 1968.

I followed his career as a friend who admired his sense of compassion for the people he represented and his willingness to fight for principles.

Kentucky was rightly proud of its favorite son, and the Nation is grateful to him.

I am deeply saddened that he is gone, and I extend my sympathies to his wife, Belle Clay, and his family.●

BERTIL LENNART HANSON DAY

HON. WES WATKINS

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Bertil Lennart Hanson has served the State of Oklahoma in many ways since 1959, with loyalty and dedication as a professor and head of the political science department at my alma mater, Oklahoma State University in Stillwater, Okla.

Today, in honor of his birthday and in recognition of all his years of service and devotion to the State of Oklahoma, I am proud to announce that the Governor of Oklahoma has proclaimed September 8, 1982, as "Bertil Lennart Hanson Day," as declared in the following proclamation:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas Dr. Bertil Lennart Hanson has served the state of Oklahoma in many ways since 1959, with loyalty and dedication as professor and now as professor and head of the Political Science Department at Oklahoma State University in Stillwater; and

Whereas Dr. Hanson has gained a worldwide reputation for such scholarship as his profound analysis, "The Intellectual Foundations of Political Science" (Oslo, 1967), "The Efforts of American Legislatures to Solve Problems of Public Policy" (Rome, 1975), and the oft quoted "Harnessing the Guinness Effect" (London, 1982); and

Whereas Dr. Hanson has gained a national reputation for the scope and depth of his ideas including articles on "The Anthropic Principle" (1982), "The MVQ" (1977), "The Just Wage in America" (1976), "The Common Heresy of Muenzer and Marx" (1976) and monographs on Stockholm (1959), Nashville (1960) and Milwaukee (1961) governments, while his numerous and eclectic reviews have helped three generations of scholars do better next time; and

Whereas Dr. Hanson has contributed mightily to the understanding of Oklahoma government, publishing works on Oklahoma County Commissioners (1965), Direct Legislation (1966) and Tulsa Politics (1967); and

Whereas Dr. Hanson is remembered by two decades of students who, as leaders of government and business and scholars now well established, recall fondly his quiet humor, his easy good nature and his ability to express with drawings, ideas he could not convey with words;

Now, therefore, I, George Nigh, Governor of the State of Oklahoma do hereby proclaim September 8, 1982 as "Bertil Lennart Hanson Day" in the State of Oklahoma, in recognition of his achievements and contributions to educational leadership in his university and in Oklahoma.●

ARCHBISHOP JOSEPH LOUIS BERNARDIN OF CHICAGO

HON. ROBERT McCLORY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, the city of Waukegan and my 13th Congressional District of Illinois were honored last Sunday, September 5, by a pastoral visit to our area by the newly installed Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin of the Chicago Archdiocese of the Roman Catholic Church.

This warm and outgoing spiritual leader, who presides over more than 2¼ million members of the Catholic Church recognized early in his new role that the Lake County portion of the archdiocese merited equal recognition with that part which lies within Cook County.

Adorned in his clerical garments, Archbishop Bernardin gave consistent evidence of his warm, compassionate, and friendly personality. It was a mission of love which characterized his visit to the Immaculate Conception Church of Waukegan. His frequently outstretched arms in devotional gesture were at the same time an invitation to seek divine guidance and healing in our human lives and experiences.

Mr. Speaker, Archbishop Bernardin's special message to those of us who gathered in Waukegan's Immaculate Conception Church on Sunday encompasses both the humanity of his mission and the enlightened views on some public and social issues with which he as an ecclesiastical leader of the church is identified.

Mr. Speaker, Archbishop Bernardin received a commemorative plaque from Waugegan's Mayor William Morris, a remembrance from State Senator Adeline Geo-Karis, and many personal and private tributes from leading clerical and lay citizens who gathered to meet him. His welcome to Immaculate Conception Church was extended by Rev. John Quinn Corcoran, the church's pastor. I am pleased to attach to these remarks Archbishop Bernardin's eloquent and inspiring message:

HOMILY FOR THE 23RD SUNDAY OF ORDINARY TIME—IMMACULATE CONCEPTION CHURCH, WAUKEGAN

After I was appointed Archbishop of Chicago, I received many congratulatory letters. Many of them contained advice. A number of people, for example, reminded me that the Archdiocese includes two counties: not only Cook County but also Lake! "Don't forget us in Lake County," many of the people said. I took that advice to heart. Here I am. And I am delighted to be with you. Your warm welcome has already made me feel very much at home.

Today's scripture readings provide an excellent basis for our reflection on this first pastoral visit to Waukegan. In the first reading, Isaiah prophesied that when God's anointed servant, the Messiah, visited his people, "the eyes of the blind will be opened, the ears of the deaf will be cleared . . . the tongue of the dumb will sing."

Christ's healing of the deaf man, as recorded in the gospel by Mark, fulfills this prophecy. In an act that speaks more eloquently than words, Jesus is proclaiming that the one so long proclaimed by the prophets is here. In him, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of the carpenter, the very power of God is at work. God has visited his people. Let us reflect on this miracle for a moment to see what lessons it contains for us.

"Be opened," Jesus commands the deaf man. Deafness has closed the poor man to others; it has isolated him because of his inability to communicate normally. Deafness isolates its victims from others more than blindness. Deaf people see others talking and realize they are excluded. Jesus wants to free the deaf man from the prison in which his handicap has confined him. Jesus himself is the man of total openness: to God, and to those whom society in his day accepted only in subordinate roles or not at all: children, women, public sinners and social outcasts. Jesus come, as Isaiah said on another occasion, to proclaim "glad tidings to the lowly, liberty to the captives and comfort to all who mourn."

What Jesus said to the deaf man he is saying to us today: "Be opened!" How closed in we are much of the time: closed to God, closed to others, shut up in a prison of our own making, whose walls are self-fulfillment, whose guiding principle is the slogan: "Do your own thing." Most of the conflicts, divisions and wars in our world—between individuals, families, classes, groups and nations—are the result of people not being open. We tend to hear what we want to hear and no more; just enough to confirm our prejudices, then we stop listening altogther.

It is part of the good news of the gospel that there is One who can break through the walls which isolate us from one another and from God. His name is Jesus Christ. Jesus, the person of total openness, has the right, if anyone ever did, to command: "Be opened!" He won that right for all time on Calvary when—

For our sake be opened his arms on the cross,
He put an end to death
And revealed the resurrection.

The question we must constantly ask ourselves is why we are so often closed to the Lord; why we remain deaf to his many appeals to us. The basic reason, I think, is that we are not ready or willing to accept what he might tell us. Because we are afraid of the demands he might make, we pretend not to hear.

Fidelity to God's command, after all, is not always easy. Such fidelity means living a life of integrity, always telling the truth and being totally honest even when this causes us pain, inconvenience or embarrassment. It means working for justice and respecting the dignity and rights of others so that they may achieve their full God-given potential. It means working for peace, helping to develop a will on the part of all nations to reduce and ultimately to eliminate weapons capable of massive destruction, especially nuclear weapons. It means respecting the gift of life from the moment of conception until death. It means giving good example, especially to those who are younger than we, or those who look up to us. It means respecting the gift of our sexuality, using it as God intended so that it will be enobling and uplifting, not degrading.

It means giving a real priority to Jesus and his values, resisting to the best of our ability all the forces which would make a mockery of those values. It means communicating with the Lord in prayer each day, worshipping him throughout the eucharist and the other sacraments, together with our families and all the other members of the community to which we belong; and listening to the Word of God in which he reveals himself to us in so many wonderful ways. It means saying we are sorry and asking for forgiveness through the Sacrament of Reconciliation when we have sinned.

This is what openness to the Lord and fidelity to his will are all about. May we never be afraid to open up ourselves to him. Sure, he makes demands but the rewards of being open, of listening, are great. My experience—both in terms of my personal life and my ministry to others—tells me that there is nothing more frustrating and disillusioning than spiritual deafness, that unwillingness to listen to the Lord, to hear what he has to say, and then to incarnate it in our lives. I can tell you in a very personal way that it is only when I turn a deaf ear to Jesus that I begin to experience doubts, temptations, anxieties, difficulties of every kind. But when I open up to him—when I let him enter my mind and heart, my very being—everything changes: Then he gives me direction as well as strength and motivation to continue the struggle. He forgives me and wipes away the tears of discouragement and loneliness. He fills me with peace and joy.

I am so happy to be with you this morning. First of all, this visit provides me with an occasion to pay tribute to all the priests, religious and laity of the past and present who have cooperated in such a wonderful way to make this parish and this area a real community of faith. I thank you all and I also wish to acknowledge the presence of Congressman Robert McClory, Senator Adeline Geo-Karis, Mayor William Morris and other civic officials.

Another reason I am pleased to be here is that my presence enables me to express my solidarity with you. As your Archbishop, I want to be united with you, as together we go about the work of the Lord. We live in a world whose values often stand in contradiction to the values of the gospel. Today people are frequently unwilling to listen to the voice of Jesus and his Church.

Through all we say and do, we must help people to come to know Jesus better and to love him more. Through our own love and concern for people, through our understanding and compassion, through our desire to deal with them justly and fairly, we must make our Christian faith credible. Then people will begin to listen. Their deafness will disappear.

I simply want to assure you that I personally have a great respect and affection for you and that I pray each day that God will given you the grace and strength to live up to what he expects of all of us. All I ask in return is that you pray for me that I may be a good pastor—a good shepherd—both for you and for all the people of the archdiocese.●

PRICE CONTROLS ON "OLD" NATURAL GAS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to amend the Natural Gas Policy Act to eliminate the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's authority to increase ceiling prices of "old" natural gas. It is my fear that, by putting an end to vintaging at this time, serious and life-threatening results could occur to our elderly and low-income citizens. While the issue of natural gas supply is an important one, I have seen little evidence that putting an end to these price controls will dramatically increase supplies. Furthermore, I am not convinced that there is a demand for such an increase in natural gas supplies. Finally, no further incentives are needed to encourage production of this old gas—this is natural gas that has already been produced.

It is apparent to me that the Commission is searching for ways to thwart the intent of current natural gas legislation. If the Congress had intended for vintaging to be eliminated, legislation would have been enacted to accomplish it. It is vitally important that any changes in public law profit from the appropriate representation of our citizens through the legislative process.

I am hopeful that my colleagues will join me in this legislation to prohibit the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission from lifting the price controls on our old, inexpensive natural gas.●

U.S. FOREIGN AID BELOW OTHER NATIONS

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, the National Journal recently had an article about the U.S. foreign economic assistance relative to Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom.

We are behind every other nation in terms of percentage of gross national product with the exception of Italy which is just a fraction below us. And Italy has economic problems much more severe than ours.

But, interestingly, even Italy is increasing their assistance while we are cutting back.

The story is well worth reading and it contrasts with what we are doing in the military area.

And what does not make sense is that the chance of the Soviet Union moving their tanks across Central Europe is acknowledged by all as being a small fraction of 1 percent. But we cannot avoid recognizing that as a possibility and so we must be prepared militarily.

But the chance that Soviets will take advantage of poverty and misery and chaos in a developing, poor nation is almost 99 percent.

And yet we cut back on the much more likely threat and increase dramatically our assistance to the area where the threat is much less likely.

I am inserting the article in the RECORD at this point and urge my colleagues in the House and Senate to read it:

[From the National Journal, August 1982]

U.S. AID: IS IT GENEROUS OR STINGY?

There is more than one way to view U.S. development aid to Third World countries, and that is what lies beneath the disagreement between this side of the Atlantic and the other over the relative generosity or stinginess of the American aid performance.

U.S. policy makers are fond of pointing to total dollar contributions, in which the United States always ranks first, as the index of our aid effort toward the welfare and economic development of the Third World. But members of the European Community prefer their own yardstick, in terms of which the U.S. effort looks a good deal more modest: the portion of gross national product that goes to development aid. This year's annual data on official development assistance, from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), should provide for more conversation.

As usual, the United States ranks first among OECD member nations with a 1981 contribution of $5.8 billion. In share of GNP, however, it ranks second to last. Using either measure, the United States posted the biggest reduction in aid volume in 1981; its dollar contribution fell by almost a fifth, from $7.1 billion to $5.8 billion, and the share of gross national product it contributed fell by 26 per cent. Development assistance, as defined by the OECD, includes grants and concessionary loans by member countries to Third World nations for economic development and welfare, but not for military purposes.

	1981 (millions)	1981 GNP share (percent)	1980–81 change, GNP share (percent)
Australia	$649	0.41	−12
Austria	317	0.48	+108
Belgium	574	0.59	+16
Canada	1,187	0.43	+3
Denmark	405	0.73	−1
Finland	135	0.28	+26
France	4,022	0.71	+22
Germany	3,182	0.46	+6
Italy	670	0.19	+12
Japan	3,170	0.28	−11
Netherlands	1,510	1.08	+10
New Zealand	67	0.29	−11
Norway	467	0.82	−3
Sweden	916	0.83	+5
Switzerland	236	0.24	+3
United Kingdom	2,194	0.43	+21
United States	5,760	0.20	−26

Here is another way to look at the U.S. performance: as a dollar share of total development assistance. In 1981, the 17 countries gave $25 billion, of which the U.S. share was about a fourth. But in 1970, the U.S. share was double that: 46 percent, as the chart shows (in billions of 1981 dollars).

BORIS AND GEDI KUN

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to point out to my colleagues the plight of Boris and Gedi Kun, Soviet Jews who have been repressed by the totalitarian regime under which they are forced to live.

Gedi's parents and three sisters emigrated to Israel in 1973. At that time, Boris was employed as an aircraft engineer. He resigned from this position when he and Gedi applied for an exit visa to Israel, in order to avoid denial based on his secret work.

Upon receipt of their initial denial in 1974, Boris and Gedi were unable to obtain employment for 6 months. They have submitted numerous applications to emigrate from the Soviet Union and have been refused on each occasion.

Repression of Jews in the Soviet Union continues, 7 years after the completion of the Helsinki accords. And I feel we would be remiss in our duties were we to fail to bring this situation to the attention of the international community.●

STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF LAFALCE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 6307

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that this body today passed the bill H.R. 6307, the Resource and Recovery Reauthorization Act of 1982, for this measure contains a provision offered by my colleague, Mr. LAFALCE. As you know, section 5(d) of H.R. 6307 directs EPA to submit a report to the Congress identifying those hazardous wastes which may be unsuitable for landfill disposal. The LaFalce amendment will strengthen this provision on two counts.

First, the amendment requires that the report also identify hazardous wastes for which there exists one or more technologically feasible means of treatment, recovery, or disposal—including incineration, neutralization, fixation, chemical destruction, or any other means of thermal, chemical, physical or biological treatment, recovery, or disposal—other than land disposal which will protect human health and the environment.

Second, this amendment directs EPA to promulgate regulations respecting those hazardous wastes for which landfill disposal may not be protective of human health and the environment based upon the toxicity, mobility, persistence, or ability of the waste to bioaccumulate.

I speak to this issue because at present there are several landfills located in my district which have generated concern among local residents, township officials, the State department of environmental resources, and the Environmental Protection Agency. At least once a week my offices are contacted by frustrated people who do not know for sure if they can safely drink their water, or allow their children to drink it or what agency has jurisdiction to monitor it. I have heard of cases concerning sick infants, of dying cattle or cattle whose fur is falling out, and of property owners who finally sold their homes and moved when all of their well water was found to be contaminated.

Athough the landfills with which I am most acquainted are not permitted to accept hazardous waste—they are municipal, or sanitary landfills—my experience with them has educated me on the dangerous materials that society has "thrown away" for decades and that have endured in the environment, making household words of "Love Canal"—a problem Mr. LAFALCE is all too well familiar with.

What bothers me most about this situation is that Americans have the technology to treat our hazardous wastes. Landfilling, however, is still the cheapest method around for dealing with the hazardous waste that nobody wants in their backyard. I know of one study which reported that alternative hazardous waste treatment facilities are from 41 to 60 percent underused. Incinerators capable of handling 670,000 metric tons of waste annually are currently burning only 395,000 tons. Water treatment plants capable of detoxifying 4 million metric tons of waste a year are now treating only 2 million. And recycling plants that can handle 1 million metric tons of wastes a year are recycling only 400,000.

I favor the LaFalce amendment, because I believe that a strong Federal stand against landfills will encourage the development of the emerging alternative technology industry to deal with the disposal of hazardous wastes. I feel that this would be a positive step toward safeguarding the health of our children and grandchildren.

My father, who also served in this body, was a farmer. I learned from him early on that we reap what we sow. As one Ohio farmer has said, "If poisons are buried in our ground, we will reap a bitter harvest."●

AFGE VICE PRESIDENT URGES OVERRIDE

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Daniel Kearney, the first district national vice president of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE), wrote to me yesterday a very strong and thoughtful letter critical of the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill. This bill provides the needed funding for many necessary Government jobs for the remainder of this year. I join with Mr. Kearney and with the entire American Federation of Government Employees in strongly opposing this veto, in supporting its override, and in appealing to Government employees to continue their work which is unquestionably essential to the proper functioning of the activities of our Federal Government.

I agree wholeheartedly with Mr. Kearney's analysis of the harmful effects of this veto and I wish to share his letter with my colleagues.

The letter follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES,
September 7, 1982.

Hon. BARNEY FRANK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FRANK: Once again, thousands of Federal employees are being furloughed due to the Presidental veto of the Supplementary Appropriations Bill. In the span of less than one year due to budgetary constraints, agencies have been forced to furlough personnel. The President's intransigence in this area has created chaos. Again, agencies are choosing which employees to furlough and declaring some essential and others non-essential. The V.A. Hospitals, for instance, are finding it hard to select the kind of people that can be furloughed and not interrupt patient care. It is almost an impossible task, for if you furlough people in dietetics, meals will not be served on time and special diets will be neglected. Can the hospitals take a chance and furlough a refrigeration and air conditioning mechanic and hope that the systems will operate without difficulty? Those are terrible decisions to force on anyone.

The Coast Guard is already furloughing thousands of very vital maintenance people who provide for the safety of our fishing and maritime industries.

I could go on and on about many other agencies that are vital to the public. All this because a President did not get his way and who objects to the appropriation of 900 million dollars for vital social programs that affect the aged, poor and handicapped.

The public and the Congress should reflect on the irony of an Administration that objects to aid to the poor, but continually overlooks the gross mismanagement and cost overruns in military procurements which, if rectified, could more than pay the 900 million dollars he objects to. For example:

(a) The first trident submarine was delivered way behind schedule and the cost overruns were reported to be 600 million dollars.

(b) The Air Force's C5A program is running into a billion dollar overrun. The correction of defects and attention directed at the late delivery of these air craft, which the administration maintains are essential to our defense, would be a more appropriate area for cost savings.

(c) Just recently the press noted that the Navy was fighting with the manufacturer of the F18 because each plane had gone from an estimated price of 26 million to about 40 million and deliveries are delayed.

Total cost overruns on all defense procurement are not known to the public but it certainly will cost the taxpayer billions of dollars because of poor military management. Would that, President Reagan, speak out against defense department military management and welfare for the giant defense contractors? The silence of the Administration on cost overruns is deafening. I suppose some Generals and Admirals will be transferred to other billets without loss of pay or rank because of these overruns, but no one will face up to the fact that the Defense Department is unmanageable.

I am urging today that all Federal employees be declared essential and that the Congress immediately override the President's veto which affects so many working men and women. I am also asking every Federal employee to report for work regardless of the stories that he reads in the newspapers so that he may continue to serve the public for which he provides essential services. He or she should report for work even if the doors of the agencies are locked against them.

Respectfully yours,

DANIEL J. KEARNEY,
National Vice President.●

REMEMBER THE CONSTITUTION

HON. LARRY McDONALD

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of controversy has surrounded the constitutionality of the procedures used in drafting and considering the recently passed tax increase bill. I, for one, believe the tactics used were blatantly unconstitutional and, therefore, have joined with a number of my concerned colleagues in filing a lawsuit challenging these procedures.

Unfortunately and regrettably, this is just the most recent in a series of examples of constitutional abuse. To elaborate further, I would like to add the editorial which appeared in the Chattanooga News-Free Press of August 23, 1982, entitled "Remember the Constitution." I believe we all would be better off if we would take this title to heart a little more often and consistently.

The article follows:

[From the Chattanooga News-Free Press, Aug. 23, 1982]

REMEMBER THE CONSTITUTION

In recent years, the Constitution of the United States has taken a beating—and our freedom with it.

The Constitution provides the basic rules by which our country lives. Violate those rules and we run the risk of destroying the greatest system of government the world has ever seen.

The worst attacks upon the Constitution in recent years have come from those who have sworn to uphold it—public officials. And their depredations have been tolerated by the rest of us. We have seen the judicial branch of government usurp the powers of legislative and executive branches, and both of them have assumed powers they did not have or failed to exercise those they did.

The most recent example of constitutional abuse came last week with passage of President Ronald Reagan's new tax bill with strong support from a majority of Democrats and Republicans in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. There may be legitimate differences in judgment on the contents of the tax bill. But there really should be no differences about the procedure—it was clearly improper.

Look at what Article, I, Section 7, of the Constitution of the United States says: "All bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other bills."

Did the new tax bill originate in the House of Representatives? No, it didn't. There was no pretense about it. It originated in the Senate, probably because it was felt there was a friendlier atmosphere for it there. But that is no excuse. The Constitution says bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House.

The reason is simple. Because the members of the House are elected every two years and come from districts usually smaller than an entire state, they are closer to the people and more subject to the will of the people. The idea of the writers of the Constitution was to protect the people from undue taxes by having the representatives closest to the people start tax legislation in Congress.

It might be argued that it really doesn't make much difference, since the House majority voted for the new tax bill. But that's not the way the Constitution says it shall be done. We believe the Constitution was violated, and that's wrong.

Some have suggested they might file suit against the tax bill on procedural grounds. Others have commented and let it go at that. But every American should be concerned about every instance in which the rules of the Contitution are violated. That's how our system designed for liberty, justice and public order is eroded.●

SELECTIVE SERVICE REGISTRATION

HON. G. V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I wrote the following article to Ms. Meg Greenfield, editorial page editor of the Washington Post, on August 4. It concerned a column written earlier by Post columnist Colman McCarthy about Enten Eller's conscientious objection to war and his decision not to sign up with the Selective Service System, as the law requires.

I might point out that since then, Mr. Eller and Benjamin Sasway have both been convicted for failure to register with the Selective Service System.

Even though the Post did not print this article, it ran an editorial on August 20 entitled, "Conscience and Draft Registration," advocating the enforcement of the law in regard to draft registration. I also want to include this editorial for the benefit of my colleagues.

The points made in this editorial are similar to the ones I made in the article submitted to Ms. Greenfield.

LAW MUST BE OBEYED

(By Representative G. V. Montgomery)

Persons reading Colman McCarthy's recent article concerning Mr. Enten Eller and conscientious objection to war are entitled to further illumination on the subject inasmuch as there are several misleading statements in McCarthy's piece. Registration is a manifest responsibility of citizenship. Refusal to register can lead not only to fine and/or imprisonment but also to such civic disabilities as the inability to hold office or vote.

Can "all those responsible" take pride in an individual who knowingly commits a felony? I think not. Enter Eller's father (a board member of the Church of the Brethren and a professor of religion) registered with Selective Service during World War II and was subsequently classified as a conscientious objector. Thus it can be seen that the person who obeys the law is likewise protected by the law. It is resonable to speculate that if the younger Eller emulated his father by obeying the law and registering, he too would be classified as a conscientious objector IF the draft were ever resumed.

Senator Hatfield's proposal to permit an individual to register as a conscientious objector was wisely rejected by the Congress. The proper time to consider a conscientious objector application is at the time of classification, not registration. At that time, determination of a claim of conscientious objection would be made by a local Selective Service Board, comprised of civilians.

Provision for conscientious objector status is already an important part of the Military Selective Service Act. If a draft were ever resumed, every individual ordered to report for examination and induction would be given the opportunity to request postponement, deferment, exemption or conscientious objector status. Information supporting such a request would be presented to the local civilian board. The individual could be assisted in his presentation by counselors, family members, clergy or others. No individual would be drafted until he had been offered all of his appeal rights under the law.

McCarthy misinforms readers by stating "this use of fear is an odd way of recruiting an army" and by intimating that Selective Service would present Mr. Eller with the option of going to jail or going to the Army. All Selective Service asks is that Mr. Eller register as the majority of his peers (14 out of 15) have done. No one is trying to recruit Mr. Eller for military service. As McCarthy acknowledges, "there is no draft, no recruit shortage, no war . . ."

Mr. Eller may be commended for achieving a straight A average in school, for having short hair, for reading the Bible and for being polite to his elders. But no citizen can be permitted to decide which laws he will obey and which he will ignore. For a democracy to work, all laws have to be obeyed.

While more than 8 million men have already registered, there is a sizeable number who have not. I believe the majority of those who have not yet registered are either uninformed of the requirement or are unaware of the importance of registering within 30 days of their 18th birthday. I would hate to see their future blemished because they failed to register. Parents, clergy, educators and others who seek to instill good behavior and character in young men would do well to counsel them to register with Selective Service. Registration is a simple process that can be accomplished in a few minutes at any post office.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 20, 1982]

CONSCIENCE AND DRAFT REGISTRATION

You probably have been impressed, as we have, with the placid demeanor and obvious sincerity of Enten Eller, the 20-year-old student who on Monday became the first man convicted of violating the law requiring young men to register for the draft. Mr. Eller is a member of the Church of the Brethren, a group which has been in this country since 1723 and which believes in pacifism. "God has led me to this position," Mr. Eller said during his trial, and there is no doubt that his refusal to obey the law, as well as his refusal to make any legal defense of his conduct, arise from what American conscription law has long regarded as conscientious objection.

Nonetheless, we think it was proper for the government to bring this prosecution and that it is important to understand why. The law Mr. Eller was convicted of violating represents about the mildest intrusion on personal liberty a government interested in maintaining the possibility of conscription can make. Young men are required only to register, there is no draft and no other consequence, at least for the moment, of registering. Selective Service law in the past has provided for conscientious objector status, and while an argument can be made that the law in the past was not generous enough in granting such status, the fact is that for members of the Church of the Brethren, the granting of such status was automatic. Mr. Eller's father, a minister in that church, himself registered for the draft during World War II and then sought and was granted CO status. It is hard to resist the conclusion that Mr. Eller and others like him, who have publicized their refusal to obey the registration law, do so because it is the only military-related law around that they can disobey.

In these circumstances, the government has not merely the option but the responsibility to enforce a law which was passed in a democratic process, which is plainly within the constitutional powers of Congress and which, in fact, does not represent an assault on personal freedom. The situation is not much different, we think, from that which would arise if members of a religious sect refused to obey stop signs, because of a genuine religious conviction that such government commands were morally wrong. Even while we respect their religious beliefs, we will want to have enforced the law which they feel compelled to disobey.

The arguments that the draft registration law is unwise, that it somehow promotes war or unfairly violates civil liberties, should be—and have been—directed at the politically responsible officials. Congress passed this law, and perhaps Congress will choose to repeal it; there is an election this fall, and voters can make their views known. In the meantime, the law should be enforced, even against as personally appealing a defendant as Mr. Eller.●

FATHER ALFRED BOEDDEKER, O.F.M.

HON. PHILLIP BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, October 1, 1982, the American Irish Alliance will present its Fifth Annual Award for Outstanding Service to San Francisco to the Reverend Alfred Boeddeker, O.F.M.

Father Boeddeker, a Franciscan priest for more than 55 years, is the founder of St. Anthony's Dining Room which provides more than 1,200 free meals daily to the poor of San Francisco.

It is fitting that as part of San Francisco's observance of the 800th anniversary of the birth of Francis of Assisi, a member of the Franciscan community, who lives to the fullest the rule of the gentle Francis, should be so honored by his fellow citizens.

It has been said by Franciscan Cardinal Paulo Arns of Brazil "that Francis called the men and women of his time to form communities with the poor so that injustice and poverty would be overcome." Father Boeddeker has spent his entire adult life in selfless work with the poor, the sick, and the helpless. He has indeed formed communities with the poor and spent the riches of his talents to fight injustice and poverty.

Father Boeddeker received the robes of the Franciscan Order in 1921 at St. Elizabeth Friary in Oakland, Calif. He was ordained to the priesthood on June 11, 1927. He has served at a variety of assignments in the intervening years before his appointment as pastor of St. Boniface Parish, San Francisco, in 1949.

1928–30: First assignment: Assistant pastor, Old Mission Santa Barbara; pastor, St. Rafael Church, Goleta, a small church serving a large area near Santa Barbara; Parishioners mainly laboring men and families, Mexican; took immediate, active interest in welfare work, built social hall, secured recreation areas serving children, mostly Mexican and black. Chaplain—General Hospital, Santa Barbara, Calif.

1930–33: Graduate studies—Rome, the Antonianum University. Specialized in canon law and theology. Diploma: Lector generalis.

1933–48: Teacher at Franciscan Theologate, Santa Barbara, Calif. Dean of studies, Franciscan Province of Santa Barbara; in charge of Houses of Study on Pacific Coast: Santa Barbara, San Luis Rey, San Miguel. Member of Provincial Council, 1946–49.

1948–50: Graduate studies resumed—University of California. Specialized: Japanese, Chinese, Russian languages, Chinese history, political science. (Superiors intended to send him to Hankow, China to establish a Catholic University.) Special assignment: Restoration of historic Mission San Antonio de Padua near King City, Calif.

1949 to present: Appointed pastor of St. Boniface Parish, San Francisco. German National Parish for San Francisco area, and a sizeable residential parish. Congregation made up of "inner city" residents, mostly apartment and hotel dwellers, senior citizens, tourists, shoppers, downtown workers of virtually every race and nationality represented. Established "St. Boniface Credit Union" for parishioners.

Founder and executive director: "St. Anthony Charities"—including: St. Anthony Dining Room—1,200 or more free meals daily for the poor; St. Anthony Clinic—free medical services for persons without other care; St. Anthony Employment Service—nearly 1,000 jobs annually—free; Seton Hall (home for men), dining room workers—35 in city—free; St. Anthony Farms in Sonoma County—renewing lives of 40 men and providing meat and produce for the dining room—free; St. Anthony Thrift Shop—to assist low income persons.

Founder and director: Madonna Residence for elderly women of low income—1055 Pine Street, San Francisco. Foreign Student Center—social, educational, recreational—70 Oak Street, San Francisco. International Center—50 Oak Street, San Francisco. Marian Center—135 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco. Adult Benevolent Association—to assist elderly. Second Spring—magazine for adults: inspirational.

Father Boeddeker is a universally admired and beloved San Franciscan. He has by his example given all of us a glimpse of the spirit of Francis of Assisi. A spirit that tells us to love all of nature, to live simply and joyfully and to identify with and give service to the poor among us.

Father Boeddeker by his life reminds us all that we must be instruments of peace, sources of love, comforters of those in need and seekers after justice for all persons.

I share this brief account of Father Boeddeker's accomplishments with my colleagues in the House so that they might know of this truly noble person.

I join with my fellow San Franciscans in paying tribute to Father Alfred Boeddeker who has lived the gentle life of Francis of Assisi and who has brought love into the lives of those he serves in his continuing quest for justice.●

MAYOR DON FRASER REFLECTS ON SOVIET TRIP

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting into the RECORD the brief observations of our former colleague, now the mayor of Minneapolis, Don Fraser.

He was always a sensitive and thoughtful Member of the House on matters of foreign relations and that has not stopped since he became mayor of Minneapolis.

I believe my colleagues will find this of interest.

MY TRIP TO USSR: NUCLEAR ARMS TALKS TO CONTINUE HERE IN '83

In April of this year, I went to Moscow in the company of nine other Americans to talk about the nuclear arms race.

Our group had been invited by the Soviet Academy of Sciences and the American-Soviet Friendship Society to explore Soviet attitudes towards arms control and disarmament.

I had been in the Soviet Union ten years before on a Congressional mission and found the talks this time more candid and far-ranging than previously.

I was startled, for example, to hear one Soviet official admit that the Soviets did have human rights problems. However, when it came to specifics, no further admissions were forthcoming.

Later in the visit, I was able to meet with a number of individuals who have been attempting to emigrate, some for as long as ten years, despite the severe social ostracism that is heaped upon anyone who even applies for permission to leave the country.

We also raised such issues as Afghanistan, Poland and the imprisonment of Soviet dissidents but this in turn only elicited a list of Soviet grievances against the United States.

For me, the visit was an opportunity to become active in the nuclear arms issue again. When I left the Congress, just before running for Mayor, there was a five-month-period during which I served as a staff member of an organization known as Members of Congress for Peace Through Law. There I had concentrated on the Salt II treaty. I was disappointed with the U.S. failure to ratify Salt II but pleased that both the Soviets and the U.S. are currently complying with its provisions.

Our Moscow group which had been convened by the Institute of Policy Studies in Washington included such figures as the Rt. Rev. Paul Moore, Episcopal Bishop of New York, journalist Roger Wilkins and disarmament writer, Mark Raskin. Unfortunately, Salt II negotiator, Paul Warnke, was prevented from accompanying us because of last-minute illness.

Clearly the Soviets are worried about the next round of new weapons such as the MX missile, the new Trident submarines and the cruise missile.

Our hosts evidenced some of this concern by accepting our invitation to come to the United States next year for another round of talks.

These talks, at my suggestion, are to be held here in Minneapolis and should bring a delegation of about 35 Soviet officials to our city next May.

At the recent Mayor's Conference in Minneapolis, Mayor Dianne Feinstein of San Francisco called nuclear arms the nation's major issue. She noted that two years ago, "you couldn't fill a small hall on this topic." This year it was one of the conference's most hotly debated resolutions.

Mayors throughout the nation have begun to recognize that the desire for world peace is fast becoming America's biggest local concern.●

TRIBUTE TO PEARL WILLIAMS-JONES

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues and the Nation a remarkable woman who will be saluted for her humanitarian contributions to the people of Washington, D.C., Ms. Pearl Williams-Jones will be cited for outstanding achievement this Saturday by the Shaw Community Center Food Committee.

Ms. Williams-Jones is a highly skilled pianist and singer with special expertise in black American music. She is also an assistant professor of music at the University of the District of Columbia.

The Shaw Food Committee is saluting Ms. Williams-Jones in appreciation for her volunteering her musical talents to benefit the Food Committee efforts to provide free food baskets for needy Washington area families at Thanksgiving.

None is so tall as the person who reaches down to lift up her brothers and sisters. With her service in helping to feed hungry people, Ms. Pearl Williams-Jones has elevated herself in our hearts and inspired us to even greater achievements.

I am so very proud to join the Mayor and the Council of the District of Columbia, in conjunction with Shaw Community Center Food Committee, in paying tribute to Pearl Williams-Jones.

Hereto is a brief biographical sketch for your review:

BIOGRAPHCIAL SKETCH OF PEARL WILLIAMS-JONES

Pearl Williams-Jones, associate professor of music at the University of the District of Columbia, is a leader in the field of Black American music education, research, and performance. She has performed concerts of Black American music in the United States and abroad, and has published the findings of her specialized research in gospel music in scholarly music publications such as the Journal for the Society of Ethnomusicology.

She has been a consultant for the Smithsonian Institution's Folklife Festival and an administrative staff member of its African Diaspora Advisory Group. Mrs. Williams-Jones received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts for research and development of curricula in Black American gospel music. In 1977 she served as consultant for the Festival d'Automne, an international festival of the music of Africa, Europe, and the United States, in Paris, France by invitation of the French government.

Mrs. Jones lectures and performs for radio, television, and has appeared at major universities and colleges as specialist in Black American music. She has received many honors for musical achievement, among which is the honorary degree Doctor of Humanities. Mrs. Jones is active in community and educational arts organizations. She is secretary of the Board of Directors of the D.C. Community Orchestra, a member of the Music Educator's National Conference, the Society for Ethnomusicology, Pi Kappa Lambda; she is an editorial advisor for Minority Voices, an interdisciplinary journal of literature and the arts.

Pearl Williams-Jones is an honor graduate of Howard University, and is listed in the Directory of Significant 20th Century American Minority Women and in the eighth edition of International Who's Who in Music.●

NUCLEAR "TURKEY" ON CONGRESS MENU

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues are no doubt familiar by now with the case against construction of the Clinch River breeder reactor in Tennessee. Even supporters of Clinch River have quietly begun to wonder about the project. Estimated to cost $3.2 billion and with breeder technology not likely to be economically competitive before the middle of the next century, if ever, construction of Clinch River has been questioned by conservatives and liberals alike. Pro- and anti-nuclear advocates, economists, readers of Reader's Digest, and scientists have all voiced their opposition to its construction.

While proponents of the project like to claim scientific support for construction of Clinch River, the Federation of American Scientists (FAS), an organization priding itself in an objective scientific approach to issues, has gone on record in opposition to the project. Frank von Hippel, chairman of the FAS and senior research physicist at Princeton University, outlined the case against the project in a recent Los Angeles Times editorial. Dr. von Hippel has contributed as an independent analyst to the international debate over the breeder reactor since 1976. I include his editorial in the Los Angeles Times for the RECORD and urge my colleagues to read it for a succinct review of the case against the project.

The article follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Aug. 22, 1982]

NUCLEAR "TURKEY" ON CONGRESS MENU—ENERGY ECONOMICS HAVE CHANGED NEED FOR $3 BILLION REACTOR

(By Frank von Hippel)

In 1971, President Richard M. Nixon established as the highest priority energy program of this nation the commercialization of the plutonium breeder reactor. This almost magical machine makes the enormous amounts of energy stored in uranium fully accessible by turning it into plutonium fuel. It would thereby free mankind from concern about future nuclear fuel supplies for millennia.

The Atomic Energy Commission was quick to respond, and in 1972 entered into agreements with a consortium of electrical utilities to build a "demonstration" breeder reactor on the edge of the Clinch River in Tennessee at an estimated cost of $700 million. (The estimated final cost is now $3 billion and rising.)

In 1977, President Jimmy Carter vetoed appropriations for the project, citing concerns that the process of extracting huge quantities of chain-reacting plutonium would make it too easy for unfriendly nations—even terrorist groups—to produce nuclear weapons.

Now the signals from the White House have changed once again, and Congress is being encouraged to approve further appropriations for the breeder reactor next month. The vote will be close. The Clinch River project is now widely represented in periodicals ranging from the New York Times to the Reader's Digest as just another federal pork-barrel project. The Reader's Digest, for example, recently characterized it as "Sen. Baker's 'costly technological turkey'," referring to Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. in whose home state the reactor would be built.

How did this dream machine turn into a "technological turkey"? The basic reason is simple and has nothing to do with whether you are pro- or anti-nuclear power: At foreseeable uranium prices, the breeder cannot compete economically with ordinary nuclear power plants.

Both today's reactors and breeder reactors turn the energy of uranium into electrical energy, but breeders require the mining of much less uranium per kilowatt-hour of electricity produced. Procurement of uranium ore for today's reactors accounts for less than 5% of the price of electricity produced by a new nuclear power plant.

Most of the cost of nuclear power is charged to pay off the huge capital investment involved in the construction of the power plants. A small cost differential between the construction costs of the breeder and an ordinary nuclear power plant can, therefore, more than offset the breeder's savings in uranium costs. The breeder, which uses molten sodium metal instead of water as a coolant, would cost 25% to 75% more than existing reactors. This is why the most recent government analyses project that the breeder will not be economically wise until the price of uranium increases approximately tenfold.

The Clinch River demonstration program has been aimed at making breeder reactors commercially available by about the year 2000. Is it possible that by the year 2000—or even within a decade or two thereafter—the price of uranium, corrected for general inflation, will have risen tenfold?

Eight years ago that did in fact appear possible. In 1974, the Atomic Energy Commission projected that by 2020 the U.S. demand for electrical energy would have increased almost 1,400%. Solely for the generation of our electricity, we would be using the equivalent of more than the world's total energy consumption in 1974. Nuclear power plants were expected to satisfy three-quarters of this demand. To supply the present generation of reactors at the predicted rate, the known U.S. reserves of low-cost uranium would soon be exhausted.

But times have changed. The price of electricity, which had dropped steadily relative to other prices from the 1930s to 1970, began rising in the 1970s as the costs of power plants, as well as fuel, began to increase much faster then general inflation. As soon as the price rise began, the demand for electricity, which had been doubling every decade, began to grow much more slowly. Suddenly, the utilities found that they needed much less new generating capacity than they had expected. Orders for new nuclear power plants, which averaged 20 per year between 1966 and 1973, dropped to zero. Of those under construction or on order in 1974, 40% were canceled. Construction schedules for most of the others have been stretched out.

As a result, actual nuclear capacity on line today is only one-third of what was being projected just eight years ago by the Atomic Energy Commission. The Department of Energy still expects nuclear energy to play a major role in the nation's energy future, but, because of its projections of slower growth in U.S. energy consumption, it now projects that our nuclear generating capacity in 2020 will be only about one-tenth as large as the 1974 prediction. With a tenfold reduction in expected demand for uranium, it may be a century before the price of uranium can be expected to reach the level that would make breeder reactors economical.

But once the Federal Government has been persuaded to spend tax money on a particular project—be it a dam, a new weapons system or a new type of nuclear reactor—the contractors, the bureaucracy and the politicians always join in an alliance to keep the money flowing, even if there is no longer a need for the project. Baker and his allies have been successful so far, but the alliance opposed to the Clinch River breeder has grown also, and now includes many of those concerned about Federal pork-barrel projects and budget deficits, as well as those concerned about nuclear proliferation.

This year, Congress should be under pressure from both sides as it faces its annual vote on the appropriation of yet another $250 million to keep Baker's "technological turkey alive."●

1983 BUDGET INFORMATION

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, the week before we recessed, the House considered a number of important bills affecting the 1983 budget. Probably the two most significant were the tax and reconciliation bills. These bills implemented two of the major elements of the deficit reduction plan—revenue increases and cuts in existing entitlement law. We now know that the overall reconciliation targets for revenues and spending were exceeded. But it is important to realize that there are four other elements to the deficit reduction plan. The first of these is the management savings package that the administration has promised to accomplish. These savings in the areas of waste, fraud and abuse, debt collection, property management, and so on, do not require legislation, but they do require determination and hard work on the part of the administration. Second, the budget resolution assumes outlay savings from legislation to raise certain types of user fees. To date, no committees have reported such legislation, and there is some question as to whether they will be achieved. Third and fourth are the savings in defense and in nondefense discretionary programs that are assumed in the budget resolution. These will be accomplished if the appropriation bills in total remain within the aggregate targets for discretionary appropriations that were set out in the 302(a) allocations made pursuant to the Budget Act. I feel sure that the Appropriations Committee will remain on target, so that these savings will be achieved.

In fact, four appropriation bills have been reported by the committee, and one (Military Construction) has already passed the House. Mr. JONES, Mr. PANETTA, and I have included in the RECORD a cost comparison for three of these bills—the military construction bill, the Commerce-State-Justice bill, and the HUD-independent agencies bill. Each of these bills is under its budget resolution targets for discretionary spending. The cost comparison for the fourth bill (Transportation) will be inserted in the RECORD when the bill is scheduled for floor action.

The HUD-independent agencies bill deserves special mention. To begin with, the spending target set for that bill by the Appropriations Committee when it subdivided its budget resolution allocation calls for even more cuts than the budget resolution assumed. Though the assumptions of the budget resolution are not binding on the Appropriations Committee, in fact, the HUD Subcommittee has agreed to cut its programs by $690 million in budget authority and $497 million in outlays beyond those cuts assumed in the budget resolution.

Second, the subcommittee is at this point more than $9.3 billion in budget authority below its own restrictive targets. This has come about because the subsidized housing programs are undergoing major reform, and it is not yet clear what shape these programs will take when their reauthorization is complete. So, the subcommittee has deferred action on this funding until a later date. While the budget resolution assumes up to $10 billion for subsidized programs, the subcommittee has made it clear that it does not intend to use this full amount; instead, the subcommittee will remain at or under its own targets.

EARLY WARNING, H.R. 97-6968, MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATION, FISCAL YEAR 1983

Floor action: Scheduled for Tuesday, August 17, 1982.

Scorekeeping: The functional totals included in the first budget resolution conference report are allocated to the appropriate House committees in accordance with section 302(a) of the Budget Act. Each committee then divides the 302(a) allocation among its subcommittees or programs and reports its subdivisions back to the House in a 302(b) report. It is this 302(b) report that the House Budget Committee uses to "score" a spending bill.

Scoring of this bill: Using the 302(b) report, the Budget Committee makes several comparisons to determine whether or not a spending bill is within the targets of the first budget resolution. In scoring a spending bill, the Budget Committee pays particular attention to programs over which a committee has funding discretion. For example, the Appropriations Committee is bound by existing law and generally cannot effectively reduce amounts required for the funding of mandatory programs. Many of these comparisons are for informational purposes only; the only procedural sanction is deferred enrollment which causes a conference report to be held at the desk if the discretionary budget authority exceeds its target.

Discretionary programs in bill: The bill is under the subcommittee's total. This bill would not be subject to the deferred enrollment provisions of the budget resolution.

Mandatory programs in bill: The bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Overall bill total: The bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Credit targets: The subcommittee has no credit activities in its jurisdiction.

Supplemental amounts which may be required: Future anticipated funding requirements also in this subcommittee's jurisdiction if added to this bill should not breach this subcommittee's 302(b) target.

For additional details see the attached early warning report.

EARLY WARNING ADDITIONAL DETAIL, HOUSE BUDGET COMMITTEE

Bill: H.R. 97-6968, military construction appropriation, fiscal year 1983.

STAFF ANALYSIS

Committee: Appropriations.

Subcommittee: Military Construction.

Chairman: Mr. Ginn (Georgia).

Ranking minority member: Mr. Regula (Ohio).

Scheduled: Tuesday, August 17, 1982.

I. Description of bill

This bill provides appropriations for military construction and family housing for the Department of Defense in fiscal year 1983.

II. Comparison with target for discretionary appropriations action

Pursuant to the Budget Act and HBC scorekeeping, the subcommittee has two targets: one for discretionary programs and one for mandatory programs. Since the Appropriations Committee is bound by existing entitlement law, it generally cannot effectively change the amounts required for the funding of mandatory programs. The Subcommittee's target for discretionary programs is therefore the main focus for this Early Warning report. That target is specified in the report of the Appropriations Committee made pursuant to Sec. 302(b) of the Budget Act, in which the Appropriations Committee subdivided to subcommittees the amounts allocated to it in the First Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1983.

Further, if the conference report on this appropriation bill, combined with any other fiscal year 1983 appropriations that the Subcommittee may have enacted this session, causes the target for discretionary budget authority to be breached, then the bill will be subject to the "deferred enrollment" provision of Section 4 of the Fiscal Year 1983 First Budget Resolution (or held at the desk and not sent to the President for signature).

The summary table below shows that the Subcommittee is under its discretionary target. The numbers in the summary table would change only with floor amendments, Senate action, or conference action on this bill.

III. Summary table

[In millions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays
The amounts shown below are only for discretionary 1983 spending by this subcommittee:
1. Discretionary amount in bill	6,998	2,142
2. Prior action
3. Total action to date	6,998	2,142
4. 302(b) target	7,466	2,290
5. Over(+)/under(−)	−468	−148
6. Amounts assumed but not yet considered
7. Over(+)/under(−)	−468	−148
The amounts shown below are only for mandatory programs that are funded by this subcommittee:
8. Mandatory amounts in bill	2	2
9. Prior action		3,969
10. Total	2	3,971
11. 302(b) target	4	3,975
12. Over(+)/under(−)	−2	−4
13. Supplemental amounts needed	2	2
14. Over(+)/under(−)		−2
The amounts shown below are for the bill total and include both discretionary and mandatory amounts:
15. Total amounts in bill	7,000	2,144
16. Prior action		3,969
17. Total	7,000	6,113
18. 302(b) total target	7,470	6,265
19. Over(+)/under(−)	−470	−152
20. Supplemental amounts	2	2
21. Over(+)/under(−)	−468	−150

Note.—Detail may not add due to rounding.

IV. Explanation of over/under

The total of the 302(b) subdivisions made by the Appropriations Committee must equal the total amounts of the 302(a) allocation, but the assumptions which make up the subcommittee target need not be the same as the program assumptions that underlie the budget resolution. The specific assumptions behind the 302(b) target are not known—as a result, the specific programmatic reasons that the bill is over or under the subcommittee targets can not be precisely identified.

For this bill, the budget resolution only assumed the President's request in total. Therefore, the only valid comparison of the bill and the resolution would be a comparison of the bill and the President's request. Section V below provides the comparison of the bill and the President's request.

V. Comparison with President

This bill is below the President's request for items in this bill by $1,212 million in budget authority and $253 million in outlays. The major differences in budget authority are as follows:

[In millions of dollars]

Program	President's request	Appropriations bill	Appropriations over/under request
Military construction, defense agencies	409	289	−120
NATO infrastructure	375	325	−50
Military construction, Navy	1,208	1,121	−87
Military construction, Army	1,100	942	−159
Military construction, Air Force	2,082	1,421	−661
Family housing, Army	1,053	1,016	−37
Family housing, Navy	769	713	−55
Family housing, Air Force	932	872	−60
Net miscellaneous small changes	281	299	+17
Total	8,209	6,998	−1,212

The bill's reduction of $661 million in budget authority from the President's budget request for military construction, Air Force, is composed of $207 million related to the decision to defer MX funding until a decision is made on the basing mode, $82 million in projects not contained in the House-passed authorization bill, $81 million in NATO related projects, $122 million for a Rapid Deployment Force project in Egypt, $50 million related to a Rapid Deployment Force project in Oman, $75 million in other overseas projects, $134 million in miscellaneous reductions and miscellaneous increases of $90 million.

VI. Definitions of terms in summary table, section III

Line 1

Discretionary amounts in bill: discretionary fiscal year 1983 appropriations in H.R. 6957.

Line 2

Prior action: the fiscal year 1983 budget authority and outlays for this committee that were appropriated in prior bills this session.

Line 3

Total action to date: line 1 plus line 2.

Line 4

302(b) target: the target for discretionary appropriations set by the Appropriations Committee pursuant to the Budget Act.

Line 5

Over (+)/Under(−): line 3 minus line 4.

Line 6

Amounts assumed but not yet considered: these are amounts assumed in the fiscal year 1983 budget resolution for which funding has been deferred by the Appropriations Committee, probably until next Spring's supplemental appropriations bill.

Line 7

Over(+)/Under(−): line 5 plus line 6.

Line 8

Mandatory amount in bill: funding for mandatory programs (entitlements).

Line 9

Prior action: outlays from budget authority enacted for years prior to fiscal year 1983, plus permanents and advance appropriations assigned to the Appropriations Committee.

Line 10

Total: line 8 plus line 9.

Line 11

302(b) target: the target for mandatory amounts set by the Appropriations Committee. The target set by the Appropriations Committee includes effect of assumed authorizing legislation that would change the level of mandatory programs.

Line 12

Over(+)/Under(−): line 10 minus line 11.

Line 13

Supplemental amounts needed: amounts for any new entitlement legislation assumed in the budget resolution and to fund mandatory items in the bill at the level estimated in the budget resolution.

Line 14

Over(+)/Under(−): line 12 plus 13.

Line 15 through 21

These lines equal the sums of lines 1 and 8, lines 2 and 9, etc., respectively.●

COST COMPARISON FOR H.R. 97-6957, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, STATE, JUDICIARY AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION, FISCAL YEAR 1983

HON. JAMES R. JONES

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I submit a cost comparison for the RECORD.

Floor action: Scheduled for Friday, August 13, 1982.

Scorekeeping: The functional totals included in the First Budget Resolution conference report are allocated to the appropriate House committees in accordance with Section 302(a) of the Budget Act. Each committee then divides the 302(a) allocation among its subcommittees or programs and reports its subdivisions back to the House in a 302(b) report. It is this 302(b) report that the House Budget Committee uses to "score" a spending bill.

Scoring of this bill: Using the 302(b) report, the Budget Committee makes several comparisons to determine whether or not a spending bill is within the targets of the First Budget Resolution. In scoring a spending bill, the Budget Committee pays particular attention to programs over which a committee has funding discretion. For example, the Appropriations Committee is bound by existing law and generally cannot effectively reduce amounts required for the funding of mandatory programs. Many of these comparisons are for informational purposes only; the only procedural sanction is deferred enrollment which causes a conference report to be held at the desk if the discretionary budget authority exceeds its budget.

Discretionary programs in bill: The bill is under the subcommittee's total. This bill would not be subject to the deferred enrollment provisions of the Budget Resolution.

Mandatory programs in bill: The bill is over the subcommittee's total by $1 million.

Overall bill total: The bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Credit targets: The bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Supplemental amounts which may be required: Future anticipated funding requirements also in this subcommittee's jurisdiction if added to this bill should not breach this subcommittee's 302(b) target.

For additional details see the attached early warning report.

EARLY WARNING ADDITIONAL DETAIL, HOUSE BUDGET COMMITTEE

Bill: H.R. 6957, Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary and Related Agencies appropriation, fiscal year 1983.

STAFF ANALYSIS

Committee: Appropriations.

Subcommittee: Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary.

Chairman: Mr. Smith (Iowa).

Ranking minority member: Mr. O'Brien (Illinois).

Scheduled: Friday, August 13, 1982.

I. Description of bill

This bill provides funds for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for fiscal year 1983.

II. Comparison with target for discretionary appropriations action

Pursuant to the Budget Act and HBC scorekeeping, the subcommittee has two targets: one for discretionary programs and one for mandatory programs. Since the Appropriations Committee is bound by existing entitlement law, it generally cannot effectively change the amounts required for the funding of mandatory programs. The Subcommittee's target for discretionary programs is therefore the main focus for this Early Warning report. That target is specified in the report of the Appropriations Committee made pursuant to Sec. 302(b) of the Budget Act, in which the Appropriations Committee subdivided to subcommittees the amounts allocated to it in the First Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1983.

Further, if the conference report on this appropriation bill, combined with any other fiscal year 1983 appropriations that the subcommittee may have enacted this session, causes the target for discretionary budget authority to be breached, then the bill will be subject to the "deferred enrollment" provision of Section 4 of the Fiscal Year 1983 First Budget Resolution.

The summary table below shows that the subcommittee's possible full-year total is under its various targets at this time. The subcommittee has considered all the programs assumed in the budget resolution; no other items remain to be considered. The numbers in the summary table would change only with floor amendments, Senate action, or conference action on this bill.

III. Summary Table

[In millions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays
The amounts shown below are only for discretionary 1983 spending by this subcommittee:
1. Discretionary amounts in bills	8,878	7,545
2. Prior action
3. Total action to date	8,878	7,545
4. 302(b) target	8,880	7,585
5. Over (+)/under (−)	−2	−40
6. Amounts assumed but not yet considered
7. Over (+)/under (−)	−2	−40
The amounts shown below are only for mandatory programs that are funded by this subcommittee:
8. Mandatory amounts in bill	191	188
9. Prior action		2,110
10. Total	191	2,298
11. 302(b) target	190	2,297
12. Over (+)/under (−)	+1	+1
13. Supplemental amounts needed	−8	−12
14. Over (+)/under (−)	−7	−11
The amounts shown below include both discretionary and mandatory amounts:
15. Total amounts in bill	9,070	7,733
16. Prior action		2,110
17. Total	9,070	9,843
18. 302(b) total target	9,070	9,882
19. Over (+)/under (−)		−39
20. Supplemental amounts	−8	−12
21. Over (+)/under (−)	−8	−51

Note: Detail may not add due to rounding.

IV. Explanation of over/under

Since the assumptions behind a committee's 302(b) subdivision are not required to be provided to the House, the House Budget Committee is unable to give a definitive answer to the question of where a particular bill is over or under a committee's 302(b) subdivision. The Budget Committee can only compare the items in the bill to the assumptions contained in the budget resolution. It is important to note that the line item assumptions in the budget resolution are not binding on a committee. A list of the major areas where this bill differs from the budget resolution follows:

Department of State's conduct of foreign affairs is above the resolution assumptions by $44 million in budget authority and $65 million in outlays.

Contributions to international organizations is above the resolution by $52 million in budget authority and $33 million in outlays.

Patent and Trademark Office salaries and expenses is above the resolution by $44 million in budget authority and $43 million in outlays.

Economic Development Administration (EDA) assistance program is below resolution assumptions by $30 million in budget authority.

Payment to the Legal Services Corporation is above resolution assumptions by $88 million in budget authority and $67 million in outlays.

V. Credit

The First Budget Resolution contains targets for credit program amounts. As with budget authority and outlays, the Appropriations Committee is allocated amounts for credit activities, and subdivides those amounts among subcommittees. For comparative purposes, the table below shows the bill and the credit subdivisions.

[In millions of dollars]

	Direct loan obligations	Primary guarantee commitments	Secondary guarantee commitments
1. Credit program limits in the bill	12	28
2. Limits assumed in the budget resolution not acted upon in the bill and other amounts not subject to limit	1,729	3,638
3. Total in bill	1,741	3,666
4. Credit subdivisions	2,400	3,700
5. Over (+)/under (−)	−659	−34

The Commerce-Justice-State Subcommittee generally did not include credit limitations in this bill. For credit activities that are not limited, the amounts shown in this table are the estimates of the unconstrained level of such credit activities, which is the estimate in the first budget resolution for nearly all cases. These unlimited amounts include not only items assumed to be limited in the budget resolution but activity, like direct loans recorded when loan guarantee default payments are made, which are not subject to current limits. All of the differences in this subcommittee allocation from the budget resolution involve SBA programs. Comments on the differences included in the report are summarized below:

Direct loans

Business loan and investment fund is estimated to support $698 million in new direct loans. The resolution included a proposed limitation of $738 million for disaster loans, thus the bill is $40 million below the resolution assumption.

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration operations and administration fund is $7.5 million below the $40 million assumed in the resolution assumption.

Primary guaranteed loans

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration operations and administrative fund is $11 million below the $42.5 million assumed in the resolution assumption.

COST COMPARISON FOR H.R. 6956, HUD-INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATION, FISCAL YEAR 1983

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 8, 1982

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I submit a cost comparison for the RECORD.

Floor action: Scheduled for Tuesday, August 17, 1982

Scorekeeping: The functional totals included in the First Budget Resolution conference report are allocated to the appropriate House committees in accordance with Section 302(a) of the Budget Act. Each committee then divides the 302(a) allocation among its subcommittees or programs and reports its subdivisions back to the House in a 302(b) report. It is this 302(b) report that the House Budget Committee uses to "score" a spending bill.

Scoring of this bill: Using the 302(b) report, the Budget Committee makes several comparisons to determine whether or not a spending bill is within the targets of the First Budget Resolution. In scoring a spending bill, the Budget Committee pays particular attention to programs over which a committee has funding discretion. For example, the Appropriations Committee is bound by existing law and generally cannot effectively reduce amounts required for the funding of mandatory programs. Many of these comparisons are for informational purposes only; the only procedural sanction is deferred enrollment which causes a conference report to be held at the desk if the discretionary budget authority exceeds its target.

Discretionary programs in bill: the bill is under the subcommittee's total. This bill would not be subject to the deferred enrollment provisions of the Budget Resolution.

Mandatory programs in bill: the bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Overall bill total: the bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Credit targets: the bill is under the subcommittee's total.

Supplemental amounts which may be required: Future anticipated funding requirements may breach this subcommittee's 302(b) target!

Explanation: Early Warning reports take into account items assumed in the Budget Resolution but not yet acted on to provide Members with a possible Subcommittee spending total for an entire fiscal year. This comparison is for informational purposes only—no procedural sanctions accompany this comparison.

Two items traditionally funded by the HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee remain to be considered. The Subcommittee deferred action on HUD subsidized housing programs and GNMA tandem mortgage purchases because these programs have not been reauthorized and because there is a wide difference between the administration's proposals for these activities and the House Banking Committee's reported reauthorization (H.R. 97-6296, Housing and Rural-Urban Recovery Act of 1982). These items are expected to be funded in a later supplemental appropriations bill after enactment of the reauthorization, which may make major changes in housing programs. If these deferred items were funded at levels assumed in the Budget Resolution, the Subcommittee could exceed its 302(b) target for discretionary budget authority, but not for outlays. However, at full committee mark-up of this bill, Mr. Boland, chairman of the Subcommittee, indicated that the HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee intends to keep funding for these items within its 302(b) subdivision which would thus eliminate the problem.

For additional details see the attached early warning report.

EARLY WARNING ADDITIONAL DETAIL, HOUSE BUDGET COMMITTEE

Bill: H.R. 6956 HUD-Independent Agencies appropriation, fiscal year 1983

STAFF ANALYSIS

Committee: Appropriations.

Subcommittee: HUD-Independent Agencies.

Chairman: Mr. Boland (Massachusetts).

Ranking Minority Member: Mr. Green (New York).

Scheduled: Tuesday, August 17, 1982.

I. Description of bill

This bill provides appropriations for HUD, the Environmental Protection Agency, NASA, the Veterans Administration, and several other smaller independent agencies.

II. Comparison with target for discretionary appropriations action

Pursuant to the Budget Act and HBC scorekeeping, the subcommittee has two targets: one for discretionary progams and one for mandatory programs. Since the Appropriations Committee is bound by existing entitlement law, it generally cannot effectively change the amounts required for the funding of mandatory programs. The Subcommittee's target for discretionary programs is therefore the main focus for this Early Warning report. That target is specified in the report of the Appropriations Committee made pursuant to Sec. 302(b) of the Budget Act, in which the Appropriations Committee subdivided to subcommittees the amounts allocated to it in the First Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1983.

Further, if the conference report on this appropriation bill, combined with any other fiscal year 1983 appropriations that the subcommittee may have enacted this session, were to cause the target for discretionary budget authority to be breached, then the bill would be subject to the "deferred enrollment" provision of Section 4 of the Fiscal Year 1983 First Budget Resolution (or held at the desk and not sent to the President for signature).

The summary table below shows that the subcommittee is under its discretionary targets. The numbers in the summary table could change as a result of floor amendments, Senate action, conference action on this bill, or possible future supplemental appropriations. Possible future supplementals are discussed in Section IV below.

III. Summary table

[In millions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays
The amounts shown below are only for discretionary 1983 spending by this Subcommittee: [1]
1. Discretionary amounts in bill	32,153	20,201
2. Prior action
3. Total action to date	32,153	20,201
4. 302(b) target	41,500	20,900
5. Over (+)/under(−)	−9,347	−699
6. Amounts assumed but not yet considered	10,375	253
7. Over (+)/under(−)	+1,028	−446
The amounts shown below are only for mandatory programs that are funded by this Subcommittee:
8. Mandatory amounts in bill	14,843	12,900
9. Prior action		21,846
10. Total	14,843	34,746
11. 302(b) target	15,103	35,700
12. Over (+)/under(−)	−260	−954
13. Supplemental amounts needed	+69	+811
14. Over (+)/under(−)	−191	−143
The amounts shown below are for the bill total and include both discretionary and mandatory amounts:
15. Total amounts in bill	46,996	33,101
16. Prior action		21,846
17. Total	46,996	54,947
18. 302(b) total target	56,603	56,600
19. Over (+)/under(−)	−9,607	−1,653
20. Supplemental amounts	10,444	1,064
21. Over (+)/under(−)	+837	−589

[1] In this display, general revenue sharing is scored as a discretionary program consistent with the classification used by the Appropriations Committee in setting its 302(b) targets. GRS is fully funded, so this classification has no impact on whether the bill is under or over its targets.

Note.—Detail may not add due to rounding.

IV. Explanation of over/under

Since the assumptions behind a committee's 302(b) subdivision are not required to be provided to the house, the House Budget Committee is unable to give a definitive answer to the question of where a particular bill is over or under a committee's 302(b) subdivision. The Budget Committee can only compare the items in the bill to the assumptions contained in the budget resolution. It is important to note that the line item assumptions in the budget resolution are not binding on a committee.

This appropriations bill is far below its 302(b) target for discretionary budget authority because the Appropriations Committee deferred action on two items, funding for HUD subsidized housing programs and for GNMA tandem mortgage purchases. These programs have not been reauthorized for 1983, and there is a wide difference between the administration's proposals for these programs and the House Banking Committee's reported reauthorization, H.R. 6296, the Housing and Rural-Urban Recovery Act of 1982. These items are expected to be funded in a future supplemental appropriations bill after enactment of the reauthorization, which may make major changes in housing programs. Mr. Boland, chairman of the Subcommittee, indicated at full committee mark-up of the bill that the Subcommittee intends to keep supplemental funding for these items within its 302(b) subdivision. They are:

NASA Research and development (space flight) is $140 million in budget authority and $106 million in outlays above the budget resolution assumption;

Section 202 Housing for the Elderly or Handicapped direct loans are $371 million below the resolution assumption for budget authority;

Urban Development Action Grants are $100 million in budget authority and $5 million in outlays below the resolution assumption;

Payments for operation of low income housing projects are funded at a level of $198 million in budget authority and $110 million in outlays above the resolution assumption; and

Funding for major veterans' hospital construction projects is $268 million in budget authority above the resolution assumption.

V. Credit

The First Budget Resolution contains targets for credit program amounts. As with budget authority and outlays, the Appropriations Committee is allocated amounts for credit program levels, and subdivides those amounts among subcommittees. For comparative purposes, the table below shows the bill, plus items not yet acted on, and the credit subdivisions.

[In millions of dollars]

	Direct loan obligations	Primary guarantee commitments	Secondary guarantee commitments
1. Credit program limits in the bill	578	40,225	68,250
2. Limits assumed in the budget resolution not acted upon in the bill and other amounts not subject to limit	6,165	16,664
3. Possible total for subcommittee	6,743	56,889	68,250
4. Credit subdivisions	8,350	56,900	68,250
5. Over (+)/under (−)	1,607	−1

The HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee has one of the larger jurisdictions over credit assistance programs among the Appropriations subcommittees. (The Agriculture and Foreign Operations Subcommittees are the other large jurisdictions.) In this bill, the possible total, including items not yet acted on by the Subcommittee, for all three credit program measures is at or below the subdivision assigned to the Subcommittee. In addition, for all credit programs in this bill the Subcommittee included an annual limit as requested by the administration except for the NCUA Central Liquidity Facility.

The major credit assistance program levels in this bill are:

FHA mortgage insurance commitments are limited to $40 billion in 1983, the same amount assumed in the budget resolution;

GNMA guarantees of mortgage-backed securities are limited to $68.25 billion, the same amount assumed in the budget resolution;

Section 202 Housing for the Elderly or Handicapped direct loans are limited to $453 million, $366 million less than assumed in the budget resolution; and

Action on GNMA tandem mortgage purchases is deferred by the Appropriations Committee, pending completion of the reauthorization for this program. The budget resolution assumes $2.97 billion for these direct loans.

VIII. Definitions of terms in Summary Table, Section III

Line 1

Discretionary amounts in bill: discretionary fiscal year 1983 appropriations in H.R. 6956.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 9, 1982, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES–Thursday, September 9, 1982

The House met at 10 a.m.

Rabbi Barry Rosen, Temple Israel, Sharon, Mass., offered the following prayer:

During these days of preparation for the Jewish high holy day season, we join in the theme of introspection and prayer. We shall read in the liturgy on these days of remembrance and judgment, "It is decreed which countries are destined for the sword and which for peace." We pray that all peoples of the world will enter a permanent era of peace. Our thoughts turn to Israel and her neighbors with a special prayer that shalom, peace, can be realized that will bring security to all nations and dignity and tranquillity to every human being, each a creation of God. Bless also all the leaders of America, that they may continue to inspire and guide all Americans and all free peoples to attain shalom. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 344, nays 20, answered "present" 5, not voting 63, as follows:

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the following resolution:

S. RES. 457

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Honorable Adam Benjamin, Jr., late a Representative from the State of Indiana.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the presiding officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses today, it recess as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 118. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress commending the achievements of U.S. Special Negotiator Philip C. Habib.

RABBI BARRY ROSEN

(Mrs. HECKLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. HECKLER. Mr. Speaker, wisdom is needed in this House each day, but particularly on days such as this, when we face the possibility and the responsibility of dealing with constitutional issues as subject on our congressional agenda.

It is, therefore, very, very fitting that our opening prayer today was offered by a man of great wisdom, Rabbi Barry Rosen of Sharon, Mass.

A graduate of the University of Cincinnati and the Jewish Theological Seminary of New York, Rabbi Rosen is the spiritual leader of the 600 families of the Temple Israel in Sharon. His wife, the former Judy Ostrow, and their 10-year-old daughter, Rebecca Shira, accompanied him here today. A 5-year-old son, Ami Ben Chai, remained in Massachusetts.

The Hebrew word "rabbi" means teacher, and the role of teacher is an important one for any rabbi in his relationship with the members of his congregation. It is a role from which we, the Members of the House of Representatives, can benefit, in learning from the rabbi about his recent trips to Lebanon and Israel.

But that is only one of the roles of a rabbi. Rabbi Rosen has served his congregation as teacher, leader, and adviser for 6 years. Sensitivity and warmth characterize his dealings with people—his congregates and all others. Compassion guides him in the many decisions he must make daily that affect the lives of those within his congregation and beyond it.

Wisdom is something that he not only gleans from his congregation but that he also returns to them in his daily contacts with them.

In welcoming Rabbi Rosen to this House of Representatives and to Washington, I would also like to extend a welcome to the delegation from the Temple Israel that has joined the Rosens in their trip today, including temple president Joseph Walter and his oldest son Barry; Cantor Harold Lew; temple sisterhood Copresident Carol Brown; chairman of the board, Mr. Martin Raab; Past President Wol Wersted and his wife Evelyne, and also a past president, and their grandson, Jeremy Blumenthal; Aaron Kischil, director of the New England region, United Synagogues of America; Mr. Morris Burke; Mr. Ronald Shufrin; and Mr. Irving S. Krupsky, who is the educational director of the Temple Israel.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to proceed for the purpose of discussing the program for the day and the remainder of the week and generally the start of next week.

We plan at the conclusion of the 1-minute period to take up the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, which is an open rule with 1 hour of general debate allowed, and we would hope that we might be able to conclude that piece of legislation before going to the vote on overriding the President's veto of the supplemental appropriation bill.

In order that Members might understand the plan and make their own plans accordingly, it is our expectation to begin the 1 hour of debate on the override at about 2:30. If we have not concluded the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act by that time we would rise and go into the Whole House to act on the supplemental appropriation veto beginning at about 2:30.

With 1 hour of debate, given the general experience around here, it usually takes about an hour and a half, so we would expect that the vote on the override would occur at about 4 o'clock.

Following that there are some other things that we are going to try to do today so that tomorrow may be a pro forma session. The funeral for our late colleague, Adam Benjamin, will be held in Gary, Ind., tomorrow at 10 o'clock central time. Buses for those who would like to attend the services will leave the Capitol at 7:30 in the morning to go to Andrews and from there the plane will fly such Members as can attend to Gary, Ind., and will return tomorrow probably arriving back here midafternoon.

Therefore, if there were any session tomorrow, we would expect that it would be a pro forma session.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MICHEL. I have forgotten; what time was set for the funeral tomorrow? There may be Members who would like to go to the funeral and then make connections to go to their districts, rather than returning to Washington.

Mr. WRIGHT. The funeral will be held beginning at 10 o'clock central standard time in Gary, Ind., tomorrow morning. As I understand it, Members seeking to return to their home districts directly from there may have to go to O'Hare or perhaps Midway in Chicago to make flights if they want to check that out.

Next week we have primaries in 13 States on Tuesday. Therefore, it would be our expectation that we would take suspensions on Monday and Tuesday and to devote those days to debating the suspensions and passing those that can be passed by voice vote. But in deference to the Members whose States have these primaries, we would hope not to have votes and we would put the votes off until Wednesday of next week.

I should think maybe Members might also want to be alerted to the fact that the HUD appropriation bill will be considered next week.

Yom Kippur, the high holy day of the Jewish faith, occurs on Monday, September 27. I will ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday, September 24, it stand adjourned until noon on Tuesday, September 28.

AUTHORIZING ADJOURNMENT OF HOUSE ON FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1982, UNTIL TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1982

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn on Friday, September 24, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 28.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

That is all I had to announce at this particular time, Mr. Speaker. I will answer any questions about the program or we could discuss them later in the day, unless the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois, would have a question.

Mr. MICHEL. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader could look in his crystal ball. This may be unfair to ask at this juncture but are we talking about getting out of here on October 2d or 9th? In a conversation I had yesterday with the majority leader in the other body he was talking in terms of the 2d, but in conversations I have had with the Speaker, on occasion, it has been more like the 8th or the 9th.

Has that been crystallized yet or can we begin shooting for some other date?

I think Members all have a problem of scheduling.

Mr. WRIGHT. As the gentleman so well understands, the very best plans of mice and men go astray.

We have tried from year to year to give a specific date. Our earlier target date was October 8.

I was told also yesterday by the minority leader in the Senate, Senator BYRD, that he and Senator BAKER both were hopeful that we could adjourn on October 2. There are relatively few things that just absolutely have to be done.

As we did last year, the House undoubtedly will pass many regular departmental appropriation bills. But, as happened last year, they may languish in the other body and it may become necessary for us to have a continuing resolution.

□ 1030

I would like to hope that if that were the case, the President would resist the temptation to play politics with the continuing resolution. Let us pass it and get on out of here, if that becomes necessary, instead of bringing us back, like little, errant schoolboys, by the ear, and thrashing us around the cheek and jowls and calling us big spenders, and things like that, especially since our continuing resolution would be under the budget. That is just an expression of hope. And if that hope were fulfilled, we could get out of here October 2.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman. And, of course, if we do not act like errant schoolboys and do some of the right things rather than the wrong things, I do not think we will have that kind of confrontation, either.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If I understand what was just done here by unanimous consent, we have eliminated now the date of September 27, in terms of a House session; is that correct?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes. And there will be no schedule of legislative business late on the 17th, because at sundown on the 17th, that being a Friday, begins the holy day of Rosh Hashana. I think that Members might understand that with respect to any votes on legislation, we would really try very hard to have them occur early on the 17th in order that Members of the Jewish faith, might return to their homes by sundown on that date. So we would try to protect both that holiday and Yom Kippur, which occurs on the 27th of September.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

If the gentleman will yield further, my concern about the 27th is that that is one of the last days of the session when it is possible to have a discharge day. As the gentleman is well aware, there is building a momentum in terms of getting enough signatures on the discharge petition for the balanced-budget amendment.

Could the gentleman give us some assurance, since we are now eliminating that discharge day, that if we got 218 signatures on the discharge petition for a balanced budget, we would have another discharge day scheduled in order to have action in the House? Could we have some kind of assurance on this?

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, the rules of the House will be complied with, I will assure the gentleman, and whatever those rules provide, we will certainly extend to all Members the protection of them.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, then is the gentleman assuring me that, under the rules of the House, he would ask unanimous consent, for instance, to have the 28th declared a discharge day? Because the rules of the House would preclude us from taking up the balanced-budget amendment if the gentleman proceeds under the course we have now scheduled. I know the gentleman does not want to prevent the balanced-budget amendment from coming to the floor.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would be glad to discuss that with the leadership on the gentleman's side of the aisle. I do not think I can make any commitment at this moment about a unanimous-consent request of that type. It might be objected to. Let us give me an opportunity to discuss that with the leadership on the other side of the aisle. I do not want to make any commitments right here on the spur of the moment.

THE HOUSE SHOULD OVERRIDE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, the President has said, and I quote, we should "shoulder our responsibilities in the House" and sustain his veto on the supplemental appropriation.

I also hope we are going to shoulder our responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, and we will vote to override this really unbelievable veto.

With the election just 7 weeks away, I am confident that many of my colleagues will recognize that senior citizens, college students, the handicapped and those who are concerned about getting America back to work will also be asking us to shoulder our responsibilities and to override this veto.

Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the Congress helped the President hit a home run on his tax bill. And in appreciation, he has thrown us and the American people a real spit ball in this veto. Let us show him what we think about it and override it this afternoon.

LOW-INCOME SENIOR CITIZENS RELY ON CONTINUED FUNDING OF TITLE V PROGRAM IN SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

(Mr. MOAKLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOAKLEY. I rise today on a matter of grave importance to thousands of low-income senior citizens in our Nation, who rely heavily on the continued funding of the title V program. The necessary funding to continue this very valuable program is contained in the supplemental appropriations bill which was vetoed by President Reagan, that we will later today, attempt to override. I cannot stress enough the value of the title V program. Over 54,000 poverty level elderly nationwide are able to supplement their income while providing critically needed community service tasks. In my State of Massachusetts, over 1,300 senior citizens benefited from title V this year.

There were 911 of these workers who provided needed services to the elderly.

Without the funding contained in the supplemental bill, title V will not continue past the September 30 deadline. Should this misfortune occur, not only will these elderly workers lose this critically needed income they will also lose the self-esteem and sense of worth that these jobs provide. We will lose the benefit of these citizens' years of experience and knowledge that they give so generously to these public service jobs. Many of these people who now are able to live independently because of title V, will be forced to turn to welfare and other Government support programs, thus costing the Federal Government far more dollars than the relatively few required to keep title V operating.

On July 20 of this year, 407 Members of this body voted for a resolution expressing the sense of the House of Representatives, that the title V program should be continued and funded at levels sufficient to maintain or increase the number of those employed under this program. While that vote was important to show support for this fine program, the vote today to override the supplemental appropriations bill, is the real test of our commitment to the continuation of title V and the positive future for those senior citizens served by the program.

I urge your support for the override of the Presidential veto.

VOTE TO OVERRIDE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the President came to Washington with the right idea. He said that Congress has been trying to solve problems by throwing money at them and that was wasting the taxpayers' money. He was right about that. Unfortunately, the President has not learned the same lesson when it comes to defense spending. When the President tries to strengthen our defense by throwing money at the Pentagon, he is also wasting the taxpayers' money.

That is what the President's veto of this supplemental appropriations bill and the override attempt is all about.

The Congress passed a supplemental spending bill that spends nearly $2 billion less than the budget allowed. So our bill was not a budget-buster. The President, however, was upset because he wanted more money for defense and foreign aid so he vetoed the bill.

The President is making a mistake, and unfortunately he is misrepresenting this issue to the American people. We are not busting the budget. Rather, it is the President who wants to break the bank on defense spending.

According to the Appropriations Committee chairman there is a $147 billion carryover in the Pentagon today. Adding to that, the military budget was increased $37 billion this year. Now the President complains that he wants to spend, spend, spend, even more on the military. I think he is literally throwing money at the military and the resulting waste is staggering.

The President's spending appetite for Federal spending when it comes to defense is making some of these liberals in Congress look cheap by comparison.

I am going to vote to override the President's veto today because I think he is wrong.

We need a strong defense, but you do not get that by throwing money at it. Throwing money at the defense problem will not strengthen our defense. Instead, it will further weaken our economy.

Taking money out of a jobs program for senior citizens, student aid, and handicapped education to add to the waste in the military is just plain foolish. It is time for some clear thinking about spending down at the White House and in Congress to get this country back on track.

OVERRIDE VETO—SAVE TITLE V

(Mr. RATCHFORD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the vote to override the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill. Clearly, the issue here is not one of total dollar amount, but of distribution. The appropriations bill is well below the limits of both the administration's request and the fiscal year 1982 budget resolution ceiling. Yet the President has rejected this bill, simply because he feels it is unwarrented to provide 54,000 elderly and disadvantaged men and women, who have little or no other income, with a modest amount of assistance.

In Connecticut, the title V program provides 649 jobs for the elderly, who in turn, provide countless community services for their peers. In one area alone, 40 title V enrolees staff the nutrition programs serving 4,000. Veto of this bill would not only eliminate those positions, but cut the number of meals served in half. These services cannot be easily replaced, and in most cases, will require even greater outlays in supplemental security income, medicaid, and food stamps. These people will go from self-sufficiency to institutionalization as home delivered meals, day care, and transportation services provided by title V end.

We cannot afford to let the title V program end. We must again assert our priorities, and vote to maintain this supplemental appropriation. On behalf of the disadvantaged elderly, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting to override the President's veto.

AN ISSUE OF PRIORITY

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that this critical supplemental bill is almost $2 billion less than the President requested. So what is the issue? The issue is priority—whether a few more pieces of military hardware and the cost overrun of a submarine are more important than immunizing our children from disease; whether a few pieces of military hardware and the cost overrun of a submarine are more important than the education of handicapped children; whether the employment of our older Americans who, among other things, deliver meals to our frail elderly who otherwise would not, in many cases, eat that day, are more important than a few more pieces of military hardware or the cost overrun of a submarine.

Members have a very clear choice today between choosing military cost overruns or people. It is that simple. It is a matter of national conscience. It is a matter of priority. Let us all vote to override the President's veto and show that we are a country of morality and that we have a national conscience.

SENIOR COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM MUST NOT BE ELIMINATED

(Mr. FROST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, there are many good reasons for this body to override the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill. But none is more clearly compelling than the need to rescue the $210 million it contains for the senior community service employment program.

This is funding that originates with the Department of Labor and passes through eight national aging organizations and through the State aging agencies. It is money that could not be better spent, particularly at this juncture when the Federal Government is withdrawing from the social sector and when the percentage of senior citizens in our society is growing.

The 54,000 senior citizens whose part-time jobs are funded by this program are primarily serving their peers. In my district in Dallas, Tex., 80 elderly citizens are working in this program. They are driving the Meals on Wheels vans, transporting other senior citizens who have no access to transportation. Some are working in elderly nutrition programs, and others are doing a variety of in-home services for their less fortunate friends.

Because of the President's veto, these 80 elderly workers have received termination notices, effective September 30. And across the country, a total of 54,000 jobs are at stake, as are about 250 community service programs that directly serve the elderly.

Mr. Speaker, the senior community service employment program is a double-purpose program that must not be eliminated because of the President's nickel-and-dime mentality. We should and we must override this veto.

A REFERENDUM ON IMPORTANT ISSUES

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are pointing out, the vote on the override of the veto is clearly a referendum on several important issues. It is a referendum on title V, the senior community services employment program and the 54,000 senior citizens, disadvantaged senior citizens, who are employed by that program.

The administration calls it "unwarranted." This House, in a vote of 407 to 4, committed itself to full funding for title V. You cannot have it both ways, voting for a resolution that commits itself to full funding, and then turning around and voting to support a veto that is against this program and would gut it.

Second, it is a referendum on the basic priorities of this country. The administration is taking the position that they want more for military at the sacrifice of the elderly, at the sacrifice of the students and the handicapped. The Congress on the other hand has committed itself to the human priorities by adopting this appropriations bill by an overwhelming vote in the first instance.

Lastly, it is a test of whether this Congress is truly going to be an independent branch of Government or simply a rubberstamp. We ought to clearly stand with the President when he is right, as we did with regards to the tax bill. But we ought to certainly oppose him when he is wrong. And on this issue he is wrong.

LET'S REAFFIRM OUR PRIORITIES

(Mr. MINETA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan's recent statement that the supplemental appropriations bill "would bust the budget by nearly a billion dollars" is incorrect. The bill is actually $1.5 billion below the President's request in budget authority and $1.3 billion below his request in outlays. Furthermore, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that the bill is $3.2 billion less in budget authority and $1.1 billion less in outlays than the budget ceilings established in the budget resolution for fiscal year 1982.

The President vetoed the bill not because it is a budget buster, but because he does not like the spending priorities established in the bill. Congress chose to spend more on essential domestic programs and less on military programs than requested by the President.

The supplemental appropriations bill contains funding critical to the operations of many programs including the senior community service employment program, student loans, education for the handicapped, and State extensions of unemployment benefits. The bill does not give the President the total amount he requested for defense programs. Instead, Congress funded only those programs which met the criteria for supplemental funding, which is to provide funds for mandatory costs incurred by the Government or other emergency or extraordinary circumstances. Even Defense Secretary Weinberger argued against the veto and urged the President to sign the supplemental.

Congress made its spending priorities clear last month when it overwhelmingly voted in favor of the supplemental appropriations bill. At a time when many people in our country are experiencing great hardships, Congress chose to spend money on programs which will allow people to just hang on to their standard of living rather than to fatten our already obese defense budget.

I urge my colleagues to reaffirm our priorities by voting to override the President's veto.

□ 1045

IS VETO OF THE PRESIDENT TRULY A SEARCH FOR WASTE?

(Mr. BONIOR of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, we are told aid to our most needy college students or education for handicapped youth is "unwarranted," yet $700 million the Secretary of Defense himself suggested be cut, is according to the White House "urgently needed."

The Defense Department cannot wait until October for hundreds of millions in new hardware, yet senior citizens, we are told, can wait for jobs and dignity.

A bill that costs less than the President requested cannot be called a "budget buster" and the President's spending list cannot be called the priorities of the American people.

Is this veto a determined search for "waste"? Or is it a budget policy reduced to disdain for any program that puts the Government in service to its people?

TAX BILL ALLOWS CORPORATIONS TO TAKE TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR BRIBES

(Mr. FLORIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced legislation to repeal the provision of the recently enacted $98.3 billion tax bill which allows multinational corporations to take tax deductions for bribes paid overseas.

That the tax bill contained a provision allowing U.S. corporations to take tax deductions for so-called grease payments overseas is a further demonstration of its basic unfairness to average Americans.

My amendment is based on the simple premise that bribery, no matter what it might be called, should not be tax deductable.

Not only does the tax bill condone the paying of bribes, it raises bribery to a new height of respectability by forcing average taxpayers to give it a special subsidy.

If this provision is allowed to stand, corporations will get more tax breaks while the average person pays more taxes on a pack of cigarettes, for a telephone call and for health care. People should be outraged over this.

The estimated loss to the Treasury for these bribery deductions is $30 million per year. My suspicion is that this is a very conservative estimate, particularly when foreign officials find out that U.S. corporations can actually limit their tax liabilities by passing out money under the table overseas.

Although the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977 provides for civil and criminal penalties for businesses convicted of bribing foreign government officials to obtain or maintain overseas markets, so-called grease payments were not made illegal.

Such payments, which would be tax deductible, could be made for such purposes as expediting shipments through customs or securing required permits.

APPEASEMENT OF RIGHT WING EVIDENT IN VETO

(Mr. FRANK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, the President's veto of the supplemental appropriation is an example of why the American public sometimes gets the Federal Government confused with the flat earth society. We are being told that a bill that spends a billion less than the President wants to spend is bad because it spends too much. He says we are budget busters because we passed a bill that is $1 billion less than his recommendation.

Clearly what is at stake here is the President's need to appease his right wing. A little commonsense has broken out in the White House on some matters and that has caused consternation amongst some of his far-right supporters, so he has to engage in the sort of rhetoric we see in this veto denouncing the senior aide program, decrying aid to students, and demanding billions more for weapons.

Unfortunately, this means that the elderly and the students of this country get sacrificed on that right wing political altar.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps in the spirit of compromise we can work something out. Maybe what we can do under the senior aide program is to arm the elderly. Perhaps if we gave each one of them an M–16 or assigned each one of them duty as a monitor under the nuclear evacuation plan, we might persuade the White House to go ahead with the senior aide program. Clearly something has to be done to persuade the President and those who will support him in this body that a program which provides jobs to older people to work is worthwhile.

I would have thought that the merits of the senior aide program would have been self-evident even through the thick, ideological bog that envelops the White House. But if not—if it takes enlisting old people into some paramilitary force, if that is the only way we can provide them jobs—perhaps the time has come to arm the elderly and work out a compromise with the President's need to shore up his right.

MR. PRESIDENT: GIVE THE AMERICAN PEOPLE A CHANCE

(Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the President's veto and to support the veto override today. The President asked us for $15.7 billion in the supplemental appropriations bill. We gave him only $14.2 billion, and now he has vetoed that appropriations bill as a "budget buster."

How does he logically explain that? The President believes we are spending $900 million too much on programs for the elderly, the handicapped, and students, and we are not spending enough—$2 billion too little—on defense and foreign aid. He would rather take the money away from the elderly and the young and send it overseas. Apparently Federal money spent for foreign aid and defense do not increase deficits—nor are they budget busters. But money for our own people here at home is a budget buster, even when we reduce the President's overall budget request.

I urge my friends, moderate and conservative, who are concerned with fairness and spending restraint to rise with me and vote to override this veto. And, I say to the President: "Come on, Mr. President, give the American people a chance."

THE PRESIDENT CHOSE CONFRONTATION OVER COMPROMISE

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, today this House will consider and vote upon the override of a Presidential veto. This supplemental measure passed by a 7-to-1 margin reflecting good judgment and reflecting compromise on the part of this House and the other body.

Any veto and override attempt is a most serious matter but today's vote is all the more important because of what is at stake.

The President has chosen confrontation over compromise.

The decision that the House and the other body make on the President's veto will have a profound effect on our Nation's students, the unemployed, the handicapped, and a special group of elderly Americans. That is what is at stake today. No matter how you try to frame the debate, the basic issues are the future of education for the disadvantaged, student financial assistance, education for the handicapped, unemployment compensation, and the continuation of life-sustaining jobs for older workers.

President Reagan may rail about defense and the budget but what he is doing is cutting off essential programs. With his veto, the President has laid off over 50,000 older Americans and he has denied countless others of essential programs. What the issue comes down to is that the Congress decided not to add $3 billion to the largest Pentagon spending increase in peacetime.

President Reagan's veto is another grandstand play at his riverboat gamble. It is a losing gamble that has cost Americans over 10 million workers. The ante on this bid is 54,000 senior citizens and our children's future. I say stop the gamble. Let us provide the resources to address the needs of the people we represent.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for this Congress to stand up and force the President to put aside the cards and give the American people a fair deal.

CUTS FROM OVERRUN COSTS OF TRIDENT PROGRAM PUT TO GOOD USE

(Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues have spoken well about the various priorities of this bill which the President has vetoed.

Let me speak about the use of one of those priorities.

This bill cuts $100 million in cost overruns from the Trident submarine program and it uses that $100 million in these ways: Some of it is appropriated for early education for handicapped children under the age of 8; it uses money for childhood immunization programs; it expends dollars to secure the unemployment trust fund so that America's jobless workers can be guaranteed some small financial assistance; and finally, it uses part of that $100 million cost overrun that we cut from the Trident submarine program to develop mass transit in the United States to make the lives of our urban neighbors somewhat more comfortable.

Those are proper priorities. I trust the House will join me and my other colleagues in overriding the President's veto.

IN SUPPORT OF TITLE V

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, in the past 2 months, both the House and the Senate have reaffirmed their commitment to title V, the senior community services employment program. The House overwhelmingly demonstrated its bipartisan support by a vote of 407 to 4 and the Senate by a vote of 89 to 6.

The bill contains $210 million needed to keep this program in operation and to keep 54,000 low-income older people working on the rolls after September 30. It is time here for us to reaffirm our commitment to this program. If we do not do that, if we eliminate the program, then what will happen is we will force these people off of the work rolls and on to the welfare rolls.

In addition, the cost of replacing these workers and providing the services which they do provide for the local community will be astronomical and probably twice the cost that we now provide through Federal funding.

In sum, any savings that we now believe we are going to achieve by eliminating this program would have to be assumed by some other branch of Government. I think that is absolutely counterproductive.

I hope we are able through this minimal funding to retain these elderly workers to provide jobs for 54,000 people and services for the hundreds of thousands of others that they work for.

UPHOLD THE RIGHT OF CONGRESS TO SET FEDERAL SPENDING PRIORITIES

(Mr. PHILLIP BURTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks).

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan's veto of an appropriations bill overwhelmingly passed by Congress is an outrageous, hypocritical act. This bill proposes spending an amount $3.2 billion less than the budget supported by Reagan and appropriates $1.5 billion less than his appropriations request. The President's veto has unnecessarily precipitated yet another crisis in the Government. In his own words: "Delay in adoption of this bill poses serious problems."

The President states that one of his objections to the bill is the amount proposed for defense. He says this because Congress, in its wisdom, cut $2.1 billion from his excessive request for Pentagon spending, including a $30.7 million reduction in the Pentagon's nuclear weapons program.

Another problem the President has with the bill is the funding of various domestic programs. Mr. Speaker, I strongly endorse the Appropriations Committee's proposed $211 million for community service employment for the elderly poor. I applaud the $148 million for college grants for disadvantaged students. I commend the committee for proposing $26.5 million for handicapped education; $217 million for student financial assistance; and $10 million for aid to colleges with large numbers of minority students.

President Reagan is opposing a bill which includes $500,000 for the Center for Disease Control's preventive health services program to continue efforts to discover the cause and cure for Kaposi's sarcoma. This funding is critical for the fight against a pernicious and often fatal disease. People in San Francisco and the Nation are appalled that Mr. Reagan's veto will halt this vital program.

The people of San Francisco and other major American cities must wonder why Mr. Reagan opposes $37 million for urgently needed urban mass transportation. Those people concerned for our Nation's environment must wonder why he opposes $13.3 million to fund efforts to return land ravaged by strip mining to a useful and esthetic state.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote to override this veto and I urge all my colleagues to uphold the right of Congress to set Federal spending priorities.

VETO OF PRESIDENT A CON JOB

(Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, this veto is the biggest scam, con job that has been attempted by the White House up to this point. There is no point in calling it anything else but that. It is a con job. It is a scam. The President knows darn well that this is not any budget buster. He knows that. It is way below his figures.

What he wants to do and does not apparently have the will and support to do is to eliminate all Federal programs. That is what he wants.

Way back when we passed the Social Security Act, it was the Republicans who voted overwhelmingly to send it back to committee, and that would have killed the Social Security Act. A leopard does not change its spots.

What we have here is a scam job and we have got to deal with it. We have to be honest with the people. I tell the Members, the President is afraid. He is afraid to say, "I do not like housing; Government should not provide it. I do not like to help senior citizens; the Federal Government should not do that. I do not like to help students; the Federal Government should not do that."

He does not have the guts to say that. What he is doing is nibbling away at these programs every chance he gets. Cut, cut, cut.

Come on out. Be the true conservative that you are, Mr. President, and say end all Federal programs. I would have a lot more respect for you.

VOTE AGAINST THE PATENT TERM EXTENSION BILL

(Mr. GORE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, the issue of the day is the supplemental veto and the effort to override which I strongly support, but I rise to discuss another bill that has just been scheduled for debate next Monday with a vote to occur on Wednesday. Although it has been scheduled as a suspension, I rise to alert my colleagues that this measure is anything but noncontroversial. It is extremely controversial.

Since a lot of Members will be out of town on Monday and Tuesday for the primary elections, they will come back on Wednesday to face this vote without benefit of a lot of the debate. So I just want to alert my colleagues on this occasion.

I am speaking of the patent term extension bill which is an extremely important measure that will raise the price of medicine by giving up to a 7-year extension on patent terms to pharmaceutical companies.

It is based on false premises. The fact is that there has been no decline in innovation whatsoever by pharmaceutical companies since 1962.

Second, there have been huge increases in real dollar terms in research and development by pharmaceutical companies and enormous increases in profits. In addition, we just gave them a 25-percent tax credit for research and development expenditures.

Do not be hornswoggled on this bill. Consumer groups are strongly against it. Senior citizen groups are strongly against it, as well as many others.

The pharmaceutical industry is trying to pull the wool over the eyes of this Congress, do not let it happen. Vote "no" next Wednesday.

THE IMPORTANCE OF TITLE V FOR OLDER WOMEN

(Mr. BONKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, a number of my colleagues have already spoken to the possible elimination of title V of the Older Americans Act, if the Congress today does not override the President's veto on the supplemental appropriations bill.

Recently the Select Committee on Aging conducted hearings in the Northwest on the impact of budget cuts on older women. Congressman WYDEN and myself participated in these hearings and we heard from witnesses who reaffirmed the vital importance of the title V senior employment program, particularly for older women. Older women now represent 72 percent of the elderly poor and are truly dependent on many of these Federal programs.

Despite the crucial need for title V, President Reagan has vetoed the one piece of legislation that appropriated the $211 million in additional funds to keep title V seniors employed through June of 1983. If the Congress cannot override this veto, over 54,000 elderly will be out of work after September 30. Of the 54,000 part-time community services jobs provided for the low-income elderly, two-thirds are those employing women.

I urge the Congress today to override the President's veto and sustain this important program.

HUMAN NEEDS JUSTIFY OVERRIDING VETO

(Mr. DASCHLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, later today, this House will have an opportunity to show that our country's senior citizens, handicapped citizens, and young people are just as important to this country as B-1 bombers, MX missiles, and M-1 tanks. We can do this by voting to override the veto on a supplemental appropriations bill, a bill that, far from being a "budget buster," appropriates almost $2 billion less than the administration asked for. This bill was not vetoed because it spent too much money. It was vetoed because it tried to meet some human instead of military concerns. It tried to make sure that we strengthen our country through programs like Green Thumb, so that senior citizens would have the opportunity to perform useful community services and lead a life of dignity instead of dependency. It tried to make sure that the handicapped would have the opportunity to fully participate in the educational system. It tried to make sure that our young people would not be denied the opportunity for a college education because of financial need. And, finally, it tried to reassert the will of this Congress that human needs, and not just military needs, are fit subjects for national concern, and for congressional support. I support a strong defense for our country. But I want also to make sure that we have a country worth defending. I think we all know that the kind of country we all want is one that does not turn its back on its elderly, its young, and its handicapped. That is why I will be voting to override today, and why I urge all my colleagues to do likewise.

ENOUGH IS ENOUGH—OVERRIDE THE VETO

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, enough is enough. Today the House must vote to override the veto of the supplemental appropriation bill for fiscal year 1982.

There are ample reasons to justify this vote—but none are more compelling than to avert the profound human trauma and tragedy which will occur if 54,200 older workers employed by title V are fired. Pure and simple—that is exactly what will happen if we fail to override. Already in parts of this Nation elderly workers—all of whom are low income—have been handed pink slips. In one case it resulted in a heart attack. All of these older workers will get these slips by the end of this month if the veto is sustained.

Who are these workers? More than two-thirds are women—almost 30 percent are from minority groups. They are people working for others in their community. More than half work for other less fortunate elderly providing them with meals or taking them to doctors. What other Federal program can boast of such a cost effective record?

I am an original cosponsor of the title V program. I know it works. It was only 4 years ago when President Carter signed into law the end of mandatory retirement at 65. It put the Federal Government in the position of setting the example for the private sector not to discriminate on the basis of age. Yet 4 years later we are regressing. A program exclusively providing jobs for the elderly is being singled out for extinction. Let us not be a party to this reversal of an enlightened and humane policy. Vote to override.

A BAD VETO

(Mr. HERTEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, today many of my colleagues have spoken out against the President's veto. We have taken more time on 1-minute speeches than usual, because we do not think there is enough time in the debate today to fully alert the American people to all the bad that is being done by that veto.

I have to say that I notice there are very few Republican Members here to speak on 1-minute speeches and I can understand why, since only 18 Republicans in this House voted against this bill when it was originally before us.

Why is that? It is because it does many good things. There is $211 million in jobs for older Americans, $26 million for handicapped education, $217 million for student financial assistance. Those are just a few items, and all those items that are so vitally important equal the cost of only one B-1 bomber.

Let me say that there was much talk last year about the President's mandate. There was no mandate to cut education, no mandate to cut funds for senior citizens. There was no mandate in the 1980 election to cut money for the disadvantaged.

I think that we had better listen to the people. The polls are clear. Our mail is clear. We have the worst economic conditions in this Nation's history since the Great Depression right now. It is time to reach out and to help the people. It is time to have a reordering of priorities across the board, including defense. It is time to have some commonsense and some compassion on the floor of this House.

THE PRESIDENT'S WORD DOES NOT MAKE IT SO

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, just because Ronald Reagan said it, does not make it so. The vetoed appropriation bill is about $1.9 billion under the budget. The President said that he vetoed the bill because it is over budget.

Farm exports would be established as a national priority under this bill. The American farmer needs help. The farm economy is facing the same conditions today as it did during the Great Depression, with net farm income about $1 billion less than it was in 1933.

I urge every Member of this body to vote to override the President's veto in order to set agricultural exports as a national priority.

A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO OLDER AMERICANS

(Mr. DOWDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWDY. Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to send a message of hope and encouragement to a special group of older Americans, those who have worked in our communities through title V of the Older Americans Act.

What we can tell them is that we value their talent, resourcefulness, and experience. We can tell them that we want them to continue to be contributing members of our work force.

In my home State of Mississippi, we have three highly successful senior aides projects which employ hundreds of older Americans. These citizens feel that their work has not only provided them with a means of becoming self-supporting, but also has given them a renewed sense of purpose and involvement.

Unemployment is a problem which cripples our productivity and demoralizes our people. In Mississippi, it has jumped to over 12 percent. By failing to fund the senior community service employment project, we will force older Americans into competition with younger workers and further damage our economy. It has been estimated that for every dollar invested in title V programs, $1.15 is saved because of increased tax revenues and reduced public assistance. I think we should continue this valuable investment by voting to override the veto of the supplemental appropriations bill.

FEDERAL WORKERS AGAIN LEFT DANGLING IN THE WIND

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, on August 28, the President saw fit to veto an imperative piece of legislation after sitting on it for 10 days. Once again, the leaders of both parties were mistaken in their belief that the President would sign the bill they had worked so hard together to develop.

As a result of the supplemental appropriation veto, once again the Federal worker was left dangling in the wind by the President and the Congress: The President did so by design; the Congress did so by its failure to act in a timely fashion.

It is tragic that this pattern is repeated year after year. Not only is it traumatic for Federal employees and ludicrous to the taxpayer, it is also bad personnel policy, bad politics, and bad Government. It should be an unacceptable performance for all of us.

At the 11th hour on Tuesday we averted the unwarranted, unwanted, and unplanned layoff of 19,000 Internal Revenue Service employees—the individuals we rely upon to collect the revenues to which this Government is entitled and dependent upon. The reprieve came, however, only after employees were put through a closing-down process devastating to morale and to the effective operations of certain offices for the last 7 days.

I have sponsored legislation to preclude the regular disruption of Government services and employee lives, which is titled the "Government Service Continuity Act." The Office of Personnel Management opposed that legislation specifically because it wanted to keep the heat on Congress through the threat to Federal workers. Such a stance is deplorable. We ought to reject it and act to insure rational, Government management in the months and years ahead.

As the man said, "this is no way to run a railroad."

ANOTHER AIR FARE INCREASE FOR OUR CONSTITUENTS?

(Mr. WEBER of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEBER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the uniform joint fare system which exists for air travel and which we now enjoy in terms of convenience and lower fares will expire in January 1983 unless H.R. 5717, the Community Air Service Act of 1982 is passed; 5717 extends the uniform joint fare system beyond that time and continues to eliminate the need for separate reservations, separate ticketing, and separate baggage handling. Passengers from small- and medium-size communities who must fly a combination of two or more air carriers will be severely affected if joint fares are allowed to lapse.

Without joint fares, there will be substantially increased costs for constituents who have to fly on more than one airline because separate fares will be charged for each reservation, each ticketing, and each baggage handling. The result will be a consequent loss of traffic and the ultimate reduction or elimination in commuter service to the small- and medium-size cities in our districts. Toledo is one such medium-size community and the commuter service offered at Toledo Express Airport is valuable and important to my constituents and northwest Ohio.

I urge my colleagues to consider their own constituents—weigh their own situations. I urge my colleagues to think of the increased fares, and the reduction or elimination in commuter service in their own districts. I urge my colleagues to think of the inconvenience and the extra time involved. And most of all, I urge my colleagues to think of the impact it will have on your own communities.

H.R. 5717, the Community Air Service Act of 1982, introduced by Congressman GENE SYNDER should be supported.

PHONY AND EMOTIONAL ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE VETO

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a string of arguments here this morning in favor of overriding the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill. Those particular arguments have been emotional, but they have been phony.

I am going to argue the other side. I am going to say that we should sustain this veto.

The issue here, the whole issue, is a billion dollars of spending that we cannot afford. It is a billion dollars of deficit add-on.

It is not a question of spending priorities. The administration has already agreed to take the defense cuts that the Congress has made and in addition wants the domestic cuts that they think are in order. In other words, any savings ought to be used to reduce the deficit, not to add on more spending programs.

Also, this is not a question of whether or not you are for title V of the Older Americans Act. We have written assurance this morning from the House Republican leadership that that program is going to be funded.

So there are no real excuses here. You are either for reducing deficits or you are a big spender. This vote will tell America, as few votes before it have, who the big spenders in this Congress are.

This debate this morning, with the Democrats supporting more deficits, has told us quite clearly that they continue to be the big spenders in Washington.

INCREASING USE OF COAL IS SOUND ENERGY POLICY

(Mr. BENEDICT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BENEDICT. Mr. Speaker, next week, I, along with my colleague from Kentucky, HAL ROGERS, will be sending a survey questionnaire to over 100 electric utilities across the United States. The purpose of this survey is to understand more fully why so few utilities in the United States have converted to coal from oil or natural gas as a source of boiler fuel.

Taking a closer look at the impediments to conversion makes sense now when oil prices in the world are relatively stable and consumption of oil has leveled off. Instead of waiting for the next energy crisis to remind us of the need to encourage the use of coal, we should be exploring the means to encourage the use of coal now. Congress must continue to pursue workable incentives to encourage conversion to coal-fired powerplants.

Increasing the use of coal is a sound energy policy. Coal is available in abundant domestic supply which insures a long-term stable price. Increased use of coal means expanded job opportunities. With respect to the environment, coal is a cleaner burning fuel than much of the residual oil currently being used in many utility boilers in the East.

This body has confronted the issue of encouraging the use of coal a number of times. In 1974 and again in 1978, laws were passed specifically to encourage the utility powerplants to convert to coal. Yet, in spite of these laws and the many hours of debate on the need to increase our domestic use of coal, only two utilities in the United States have taken the steps necessary to convert to coal.

I look forward to sharing the results of the utility survey with my colleagues who are concerned about our energy future.

PROBLEMS WITH DOMESTIC CONTENT LEGISLATION

(Mr. BLILEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, the Energy and Commerce Committee began last night to mark up automobile domestic content legislation. I had serious doubts about the concept of domestic content in general and about the previous bill specifically.

Governmental quotas are never the best way to accomplish any objective. In the economic area they may be the most damaging of all. Quotas lead to inefficiency, they lead to higher prices, and most of all they restrict consumer choices. Let us face it: Most people who buy foreign cars, especially Japanese cars, buy them because they are less expensive than American cars and often because they believe they are of higher quality. Now I own three American cars myself, but I am not sure that I want to go home and tell my voters who drive Datsuns and Toyotas that they cannot buy those cars any longer or that their prices are likely to be increased by a set of Government quotas. I think not.

I was somewhat shocked that at least one national consumer group endorsed this legislation as an apparent payoff to a union that is one of its members.

Every credible economist who has examined the issue has detailed the harmful effects of domestic content quotas: On our own economy and on the public. Beyond its direct effects, this bill could have serious effects on our international trade relationships. And those relationships create U.S. jobs. Excluding oil imports the United States is a large net exporter of manufactured products. Upsetting the open trade relationships that this country has worked so hard for since World War II would cost America jobs. It would cost American consumers in terms of lost choices. It could throw the world economy into a protectionist tailspin the likes of which we have not seen since the 1930's.

As if all of these facts are not enough, now we have a substitute before us. I share with my colleague from California a concern about the cursory treatment this legislation has received. But even with a short time to look at the proposed substitute I have found that if anything it is worse than the original.

The gentleman from New York himself has admitted that the substitute would give foreign, Japanese, manufacturers more flexibility. In fact he is going to give them an automatic 25-percent quota. For domestic manufacturers on the other hand the substitute even further ties their hands by freezing their current domestic content ratios. By allowing an automatic 200,000 plus import exemption while stopping innovation by American manufacturers we may be actually increasing the technological and price advantage of Japanese manufacturers. In short, this substitute may cost American jobs, not just overall, but in the auto industry itself.

I do not pretend to fully understand the complicated formula at the heart of this bill, but I can see one thing right away: It is an accountant's relief act. The opportunities for cost-shifting are almost limitless, and the domestic content ratio is wholly dependent on where those costs are assigned.

These are only a few of the problems with domestic content legislation in general and with this bill specifically. I can only hope that the committee will regain its senses and conduct a serious investigation of these issues.

THE LATE HONORABLE KEITH SEBELIUS

(Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to officially inform this House of the death of a former colleague, Keith Sebelius, who at the age of 65 passed away after a long illness last Sunday.

Keith served this body and represented the First District of Kansas from 1969 until 1981.

We had Keith's services yesterday in Norton, Kans. It was attended by the entire Kansas congressional delegation and it was a genuine outpouring of love and affection not only for Keith, but for his family as well. We expressed our deepest sympathies to his wife Bette, and his sons, Doug and Gary.

□ 1115

I have asked for a special order, Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday at the close of business, September 15, so that the Members may make a personal statement to the memory of Keith Sebelius and his outstanding contributions to our State of Kansas and our Nation.

H.R. 6863—SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT OF 1982

(Mr. WYLIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I have decided to vote to sustain the President's veto today. President Reagan, in his message on the veto, said that H.R. 6863 would "undermine the confidence crucial to continued reduction in deficits and interest rates which we must achieve for sustained economic growth."

I believe that the President has accurately pointed out the key to economic recovery. The American people must have confidence that the Federal deficit will be reduced.

The fact of the matter is that this urgent supplemental appropriations bill contains $1 billion in new spending not authorized by the authorizing committees. Congress is trying to sneak in through the back door what we took out through the front door vis-a-vis the budget bill.

At the same time, and so as not to be misunderstood, I think the defense spending level in the bill is quite adequate and if the veto is sustained, which I hope it will be, it will result in a real reduction in spending which will send a message of confidence to the marketplace that economic recovery is on its way.

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE TO SIT TODAY DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Energy and Commerce be permitted to sit today during the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

(Messrs. FRENZEL, ROUSSELOT, WALKER, BETHUNE, LOEFFLER, WEBER of Minnesota, EMERSON, BAILEY of Missouri, and HAMMERSCHMIDT also objected.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. More than 10 Members having objected, objection is heard.

WE SHOULD LISTEN TO OUR CONSTITUENTS

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, the other day I happened to run across an article in the Los Angeles Times by someone who served the Carter administration in their Office of Management and Budget. In the article he indicated that he thinks it is good that the President has exercised his prerogative to bring down a veto. As a matter of fact, he suggested that perhaps if the previous administration had done that more often, they would have been in a stronger position to form their policies as they worked with the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate.

The gentleman expressed the very interesting thought that this is just one part of the overall process of negotiation in terms of spending. I think that has been brought out by the most recent reaction from the White House. They have indicated the President will take a number of cuts that we have suggested in defense. They want us to take a number of cuts that they have suggested on the domestic side, and it seems to me that is in a spirit of compromise. We can work this out.

But what we have to do in order to have the opportunity to work it out is to sustain the President's veto.

When I was home in the last couple of weeks talking to the people, I did not have many come up to me suggesting we are not spending enough money on the Federal level. Some of them agreed, while most of them disagreed, with the President's position on the recent tax bill, but the one thing they all thought we ought to do was to bring the deficit down. Most recognize we have to do this in domestic spending.

Let us respond to our constituents' concerns by sending the message home that we have listened to them and acted on their sentiments.

CONSIDERATION OF THE VETO OVERRIDE ON H.R. 6863

(Mr. PEASE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice to those urging the House to override the veto of the supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863. I believe that the President, in his political zeal to confront the Congress and pretend to be a responsible fiscal executive, has chosen the wrong bill to veto.

The President's veto undoes the cooperative work of both Houses of this Congress, Mr. Speaker. Not only has he insulted America's elderly, America's students, our military personnel, hard-working Federal employees from NASA to IRS, and the unemployed, but the President has also vetoed a bill that Members of his own party in both the House and the Senate worked hard on. Although the bill's priorities are different than a line-item-veto executive might prefer, the funding totals are actually less than the limits set by the Republican budget resolution and less than the OMB-recommended Reagan appropriations bill.

This Reagan confrontation is harmful to many Federal programs, but I am particularly concerned that it stops funding for title V—the employment portion of the Older Americans Act. While the administration assures us that they do not intend to end the program, the substitute they expect to take up the slack is entirely inadequate.

The State of Ohio is one of the biggest participants in title V senior community service employment programs. Ohio senior citizens are engaged in meaningful jobs ranging from homemaker services for homebound elderly to distribution of meals under other Federal programs. Almost 70 percent of the seniors employed under title V were women in 1981-82. A full 86 percent of those employed were below the poverty line, and 33 percent were minorities.

Four hundred and six Members of the House voted to support title V in July; 89 Senators supported full funding in a similar resolution. We cannot back off that commitment now.

Mr. Speaker, the loss of the senior community service employment program is one of the many reasons that the House must act to override the veto of H.R. 6863. On behalf of elderly citizens, our military personnel, Federal employees, and American's unemployed, I urge my colleague to vote to override the Presidential veto of the supplemental appropriations bill.

SUPPORT OF THE VETO OVERRIDE EFFORT

(Mr. GRAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the override measure.

I think we all recognize in this House, if we are going to be honest with one another, that the House has worked its will and we actually came in at $1.5 billion less than what the administration wanted us to do.

I think also of particular concern ought to be the title V program for older Americans which is creating a crisis for many of them who will lose their jobs and receive their pink slips.

I think it is ludicrous to recognize that we are following a policy where we are taking older Americans who have productive jobs and are going to put them on welfare, put them in medicaid and food stamps. I do not know of any political party that wants to follow a strategy which includes throwing people out of work and onto welfare. Thus, I urge my colleagues today to override this veto and begin to say to the elderly in this country that we are not going to play political ping-pong with their lives any more, and to say that this Congress has examined the President's recommendations, and we came in at $1.5 billion less, and if he does not like our priorities, that is tough.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS MEAN INCREASED SPENDING

(Mr. ROUSSELOT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, this bill that will come before us today, the vetoed bill, is a supplemental appropriation, as we are aware. This is an add on to money that we have already appropriated. This contributes to the deficit to the tune of $14 billion.

Now, the President has already said and made it clear that he will continue the title V program for the elderly. So all of these arguments that that program will stop are pure unadulterated bunk. That will not stop. Everyone should know that here today.

I intend to support the President in his effort to try to hold down the spending that this Congress has engaged in, far and beyond and above what we have already appropriated.

A supplemental bill is exactly what it says. It says in effect Congress cannot live within its means. The Congress constantly comes back and asks for more money, like spoiled children. The House cannot live within the appropriated dollars that we have already spent; billions of dollars.

I urge my colleagues to sustain the President's veto.

OLDER AMERICANS PROGRAM FUNDING INCLUDED IN SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, we know there is considerable support for title V of the older Americans employment program. I support that program. There are funds for this program, of course, included in the supplemental appropriations bill that will be debated and voted on later today, which was vetoed by the President.

There is $211 million contained in the bill, and it represents forward funding for the program to cover the first 9 months of fiscal year 1983, October through June. This forward funding is required by statute. We are well aware that the program has merit and it is clear that the only way to avoid problems will be to include this forward funding for the program.

Therefore, I support this program, and I have been assured, along with our distinguished Republican leader, that the forward funding for this older Americans program will be included in a followup version of the supplemental when the President's veto is sustained. This program will be funded at the full level that has been required by statute on a forward-funding basis.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. So the $211 million will be there even if the House sustains the President's veto today?

Mr. LOTT. That is my understanding. And we will support that.

LENDING LIMITS FOR FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION FARM AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5831) to provide lending limits for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985 for programs under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DE LA GARZA).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 381, nays 0, answered "present" 2, not voting 49, as follows:

Mr. SHUMWAY and Mr. ZEFERETTI changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5831, with Mr. PEASE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

□ 1145

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DE LA GARZA) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DE LA GARZA).

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5831, a bill to provide lending limits for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985 for programs under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, and for other purposes.

In brief summary, this legislation addresses the lending programs carried out by the Department of Agriculture through the Famers Home Administration for farm ownership and operating purposes, rural water and waste disposal, and other community facilities, rural business, and industrial development, and assistance to farmers who are victims of natural disasters.

The basic legislation, the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, requires that lending levels for farmer and rural development-type programs be reauthorized for successive 3-year periods. Current authorizing provisions for this purpose are effective through fiscal year 1982. H.R. 5831 reauthorizes levels for these programs for fiscal years 1983–85.

The authorized program levels contained in the bill were adopted without controversy within the committee. They represent, for the most part, a lower total level than the level originally authorized for the 3-year period through fiscal 1982, and approximate the level as revised by the 1981 Reconciliation Act. I would suggest that these provisions enjoyed a broad concensus of support because they reflect a judicious compromise between conflicting interests: First, the need for fiscal restraint; and second, the need for adequate credit to enable rural America to survive a period of economic stress not approached since the depths of the Great Depression. Credit is no substitute for decent farm income. But it may be all that will permit farmers—including many able and experienced farmers—to hang on pending the economic recovery we have been assured is forthcoming.

I believe that a few illustrations will establish the responsible manner in which the Committee on Agriculture fashioned this legislation. For example, authorized program levels contained in current law and in H.R. 5831 are as follows:

	Current law	H.R. 5831
Real estate loans (including farm ownership loans).	$900 million	$1 billion.
Farm operating loans	$1.325 billion	$1.510 billion.
Emergency disaster loans	Amounts necessary	Amounts necessary.
Water and sewer loans	$300 million	$500 million.
Business and industrial loans	$1.5 billion	$1 billion.
Community facilities	$130 million	$300 million.

I shall not discuss these figures in detail. But a few of them merit mention. The authorized level for emergency disaster loans—and, I might add, the level utilized for such loans by the Appropriations Committee—has traditionally been established on an "as needed" basis. This recognizes the fact that it is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the magnitude or number of natural disasters which may occur in any given year. H.R. 5831 continues this prudent approach. In addition, the bill would restore a provision of the program changed, to the detriment of farmers, in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981. It would reduce from 30 to 20 percent, the level of production loss making a farmer eligible for loans. The 30-percent loss criterion precluded assistance to many farmers who were severely affected by natural disasters.

As to business and industrial loans, it has long been recognized that this program, consisting largely of loan guarantees, has been one of the most effective—and lowest cost—approaches to creating jobs and promoting healthy economic development in rural areas. While H.R. 5831 would cut by one-third the authorized annual level for this program, it will maintain a meaningful program operation. I would note that the administration has proposed to abolish this program. However, to insure that program benefits are targeted more narrowly to those the committee believes most in need of assistance, the bill imposes a "credit elsewhere" test, and reduces from 50,000 to 25,000 the population limit of areas in which the program will be available.

Extensive hearings conducted by the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development disclosed a need for other improvements in the programs carried out under the Consolidated Act. The need is also addressed by H.R. 5831.

The severe price declines for agricultural commodities, coupled with ruinous interest rates, have pressed a growing, indeed an alarming, number of farmers ever nearer the edge of financial collapse. One remedial measure considered and ultimately rejected by the committee was a blanket moratorium on Farmers Home foreclosures and loan repayments in States where such foreclosures approached numbers reflecting a multiple of customary levels. However, the committee did adopt a provision that, on a case-by-case basis, makes mandatory through September 30, 1983, a provision, which is discretionary with the Secretary under current law, to defer foreclosures and repayments on farmer-type loans. The deferral would be triggered only if a farmer requests deferral and establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that inability to pay is due to circumstances beyond the borrower's control, that good management practices were used, and that there is a reasonable chance for ultimate repayment after the deferral. This provision would be available only to owners or operators of family-size farms. It is a provision which can be the salvation of many experienced and competent farmers who are devastated by circumstances over which they have no control.

A series of other provisions are designed to insure the objectives of the water and waste disposal program are met. Several of the provisions are directed to reducing to statutory terms certain directives concerning program operation contained in conference reports on the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 and the 1981 farm bill. The Secretary, in the committee's judgment, has not satisfactorily responded to the directives. Therefore, stronger measures are required. H.R. 5831 would—

First, authorize grants to borrowers to be used solely for repaying loans in cases where repayment cannot be made because of extraordinary circumstances;

Second, direct the Secretary to establish a graduated scale of grant rates reflecting higher rates for communities with lower population and income levels which demonstrate a financial need;

Third, direct the Secretary to establish a project selection system for choosing among applicants for loans and grants, giving equal weight to factors of low community income, small population, and health hazards resulting from lack of potable water or inadequate waste disposal;

Fourth, authorize payments to associations likely to receive grants or loans to assist them in meeting predevelopment costs of facilities;

Fifth, authorize grants to private nonprofit organizations for the purpose of enabling them to provide technical assistance and training to associations likely to receive loans or grants;

Sixth, direct the Secretary, in cases in which projects serve more than one rural community, to use the median population level and median community income level of all of the communities to be served for purposes of applying applicable formulas for assistance;

Seventh, change the standard for low-income areas eligible for 5-percent loans from those having an income level below the Federal poverty line to those having an income level below 80 percent of the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income; and

Eighth, establish a 7-percent maximum loan interest rate for borrowers which do not qualify for 5-percent loans but which have an income level not exceeding 100 percent of the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income.

Mr. Chairman, there are other items in the legislation that will be discussed by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development, and may I at this time state that the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES), the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS), and all the members of the subcommittee merit our appreciation for the fine dedicated work which they did under very difficult circumstances. It would be very easy to just throw money at the problem, but that is not the way that our committee works nor was it the way that the subcommittee worked. Rather, they studied the issues, took a look at the budget, and prepared legislation for the 3-year period which is within, if not below, the budget.

So at this time I give personal commendation to the chairman, the ranking minority member, and the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5831 clearly represents, in our view, a responsible and moderate effort to continue a program for furnishing assistance to rural America—assistance now urgently needed to mitigate the disaster that has befallen this sector of our economy.

The various changes in the Consolidated Act proposed by the bill enjoyed broad support. Only the repayment and foreclosure deferral provision described above encountered substantial opposition. The committee ordered H.R. 5831, as amended, reported favorably to the House by a rollcall vote of 38 to 1.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to give equally strong support to this worthy legislation so essential to the viability of rural America.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5831, a bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act. I want to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. JONES of Tennessee, and urge my colleagues to support passage of this legislation.

H.R. 5831 represents an important milestone in the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) farm and rural development loan programs. Prior to 1978, loan program activity levels were addressed only in appropriation acts. As a result of the need for the legislative committees to make a periodic review of FmHA programs, the Agricultural Credit Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-334) required the aggregate principal amount of loans under the FmHA farm and rural development loan programs to be authorized every 3 years beginning October 1, 1979. H.R. 5831 marks the second time this requirement has been satisfied through legislation.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5831 would authorize insured and guaranteed loans totaling up to $4.31 billion annually—not including any farm disaster loans which might be needed—for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985. The Committee on Agriculture felt that these levels were appropriate in order to take into consideration the need for increased FmHA loan program activity and to allow for program expansion over the 3-year life of the bill.

I also would like to point out that this is a $1.5 billion reduction in program authorization levels from the last 3-year authorization period (1980–82). It should be remembered that actual lending levels for these programs in each of the 1983, 1984, and 1985 fiscal years will still be set in separate actions by Congress in annual appropriation acts. I believe the new loan ceilings will give Congress a chance, through the appropriation process, to provide adequate credit to our rural areas through these FmHA programs.

In addition to establishing FmHA loan authorization levels, H.R. 5831 contains several other amendments whose purpose is to improve the operations of the Farmers Home Administration. These amendments include provisions to modify the water and waste disposal facilities loan and grant program in order to target program moneys to those communities most in need of assistance. Other amendments would modify the various farm programs and the business and industrial loan program.

Mr. Chairman, I do have some concerns about section 7 of H.R. 5831, which would require the Secretary of Agriculture to forgo foreclosure and allow a deferal of principal and interest payments by any individual FmHA farm borrower who is unable to make scheduled payments if the borrower requests deferral and can demonstrate, to the satisfaction of FmHA officials, that he had used good management practices, that he is temporarily unable to make payments because of circumstances beyond his control, and that he has a reasonable chance of repaying his loan if the Secretary foregoes foreclosure and allows the deferral. While I am well aware of and concerned about the critical problems our farmers are facing in meeting their credit needs, I am not convinced that it would be prudent policy to adopt section 7 into law.

The Farmers Home Administration currently serves the credit needs of only about 10 percent of all farmers. Thus, any type of deferral on FmHA loan payments could put the overwhelming majority of farmers, 90 percent, who have obtained credit from sources other than Farmers Home at a severe disadvantage since they would have to continue repaying their loans. I also believe that this type of requirement is not prudent program administration, and could create havoc in the agency's loan and accounting departments. Furthermore, FmHA already has, under existing authority, a number of alternatives available which will achieve the purpose of section 7, including authority to consolidate, reschedule, or defer loans. We have received numerous reassurances from USDA stating that it is their full intention to use the full range of these options to assist their borrowers and avoid termination of their loan accounts. There also is no reliable way to estimate the cost that this provision could incur on the Federal Government.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I am in support of this bill and urge its passage. The programs of the Farmers Home Administration play a vital role in the economy of our farm and rural communities. Adequate credit must be made available to encourage the orderly development of rural America. This legislation goes a long way toward insuring that such credit will be available.

I urge support of H.R. 5831.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Let me just say that I do not think there is much controversy or opposition to this bill. Everybody recognizes that the farm sector of this country is under very dire economic straits and circumstances. Certainly when corn is selling for around $2 a bushel in my area, that means a loss of income and certainly no profits for my farmers. It is the same throughout this country.

But I would like to say a few things about the bill. I think we ought to point out that the Secretary of Agriculture has stated and publicly instructed the Department to go the extra mile with any farmers who might be facing these very tough economic times to see if they cannot work out payments on these Farmers Home Administration loans. I think they are trying to go the extra mile. At the same time we want to insure that farmers are treated fairly and equitably, and we want the administration to take into consideration these very difficult times that farmers are going through. I think this bill does address that.

Other positive features of this bill have to do with disaster emergency loans, reducing down from 30 to 20 percent the normal crop yield losses that must be sustained in order to qualify and to be eligible for low-interest Farmers Home Administration loans. I know in my area, where we have had a substantial amount of rain and floods this year, some counties were coming in with 28- and 25-percent losses, but the 30 percent was not reached. If we go back to 20 percent, I think we will be a lot more fair with the farmer who does sustain a large loss because of rain or drought or whatever the disaster may be.

I would also like to point out a positive aspect of the bill regarding the water facilities provisions, which I know this gentleman is very interested in, as well as the business and industrial sections of the bill which provide the support, if you will, and the infrastructure for rural America. A lot of these communities are being hurt because of depressed prices for farmers and are not able to come up with the dollars for these water treatment facilities and sewer systems, and the Farmers Home Administration can go in there and provide some help. I think this is a recognition of the very difficult times that rural America is facing.

Mr. Chairman, again let me say I appreciate the gentleman's yielding, and I add my support to the bill.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the very fine statement of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN), and I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1200

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES), chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit and Rural Development.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5831, and urge my colleagues to approve this legislation today in order that we may move ahead in meeting the September 30 deadline for reauthorizing the lending ceilings for the programs of the Farmers Home Administration. In addition to providing authorization levels for fiscal years 1983 through 1985 for the Farmers Home Administration's farm and rural development loan programs, this legislation would also mandate several important changes in the administration of various programs carried out by the FmHA.

H.R. 5831 was favorably reported by the Agriculture Committee by a vote of 38 to 1. Previous to this action, my subcommittee which has jurisdiction over agricultural credit held extensive oversight hearings during which we closely examined the operations of the programs addressed in H.R. 5831. In addition, we devoted a great deal of time to a careful review of the lending-and-loan-servicing policies of the Farmers Home Administration, particularly in the area of farmer program loans. I can assure you that the committee has done its homework on this legislation, and has been diligent in confronting the serious and difficult issues now facing our Nation's farm and rural communities.

Although I personally would have desired to see higher lending ceilings for farmer and rual development loan programs, I am satisfied that this legislation will provide adequate authority for the FmHA to fulfill its mission to rural America in the coming 3 years. In addressing the operations of the loan programs covered in this bill, the committee has sought to insure that the limited funding available during these times of budget restraint will be directed in ways to accomplish the most good. This is particularly true with regard to FmHA's water and sewer grant and loan programs, and the business and industry loan program.

I would especially like to note at this point that H.R. 5831 contains several provisions which are directly aimed at addressing the potentially disasterous farm foreclosure situation which could occur at a result of the current overwhelming numbers of farm loan delinquencies. This legislation would provide that, under certain circumstances, the FmHA would be required to forego foreclosure and defer principal and interest payments for individual farmer-borrowers. In addition, these borrowers would be given the opportunity to reschedule their loan repayments, and at interest rates no greater than the terms of their original loans. Rarely in my lifetime have I know a more critical and desperate period than the one now being faced by America's farmers, ranchers, and rural communities. The situation is so bad that you can hardly pick up a national news magazine or a major metropolitan newspaper without reading a cover story about the depression in rural America.

Time is running out for the American farmer, and it is running out fast. I can assure you that this legislation is not in itself going to solve all our problems, but I firmly believe we have taken a good first step in trying to meet some of the immediate needs.

In closing, let me say that I especially appreciate the bipartisan nature by which this legislation was handled in the committee. Ranking minority member of the Agriculture Credit Subcommittee, Mr. JEFFORDS, and I joined together in introducing H.R. 5831, and have worked closely with each other as it moved through the committee. Although there were differences on some specific provisions considered in the committee, for the most part this bill has enjoyed widespread support from both sides of the aisle.

So again, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5831 because it represents a sincere and diligent effort in reflecting the basic needs of farmers, ranchers, and communities in rural America.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WAMPLER).

Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of my distinguished colleagues and urge support of this bill. In accordance with the Agricultural Credit Act of 1978, Public Law 95-334, H.R. 5831 authorizes funding levels for the Farmers Home Administration loan programs over the next 3 years.

The Farmers Home Administration loan programs play an important role in the economy of our rural areas. Rapid increases in the cost of land and other elements of production have made it necessary for many farmers to borrow in order to stay in business. Adequate credit must be made available to these farmers to foster and encourage the orderly growth and development of rural America. The purpose of the farmers home programs is to provide such credit, and this bill insures that the credit will be available.

In particular, I am pleased that the bill contains provisions to modify and improve the FmHA water and waste disposal system loan program. Two amendments which I offered to this program with the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. CLINT ROBERTS), were adopted into H.R. 5831. I believe these amendments will serve to make FmHA assistance more readily available to low and moderate income, rural communities on a more cost-effective basis. The first provides for predevelopment assistance to communities for preliminary engineering and other costs associated with the preapplication stage of the FmHA funding process. The second amendment provides for technical assistance in design, construction, and operation, and maintenance of water and sewer systems.

I also would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the funding levels established by this bill are ceiling levels which in some cases will not be reached in fiscal 1983. In establishing these levels, the Agriculture Committee considered expected program growth over the next 3 years. Actual lending levels still would be fixed separately by the Congress in annual appropriations bills.

Mr. Chairman, we must provide the resources to strengthen and improve the ability of FmHA to deliver its full range of programs for farms and small communities. H.R. 5831 insures that the Farmers Home Administration will have the ability to provide these services, thereby improving the economy and living conditions in rural America. I urge passage of this bill.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL).

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I had not planned to speak on this bill and then I found in my office a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture from which I would like to quote. The letter says:

> H.R. 5831 provides for mandatory deferral of loan repayments and foreclosures which turn massive amounts of Federal loans into outright gifts.

The attachment reads as follows:

> Mandatory authority would allow borrowers who are able to pay to avoid doing so, thus undermining FmHA's effectiveness in assisting many farmers who are in financial difficulty.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read from the bill. The bill reads as follows:

> The Secretary shall permit deferral if, due to circumstances beyond the borrower's control is temporarily unable to continue making payment on such principle and interest then due.

Mr. Chairman, what we are discussing here, in my opinion, is much more important than just this bill. We are going to pass this bill, I feel confident. But there are two issues that this House had better address. The first issue is whether or not we are going to have honesty in Government.

We have to know whether we can depend, when we get a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, that that letter is accurate. This letter absolutely is completely inaccurate. It is an outright lie, if we want to be honest about what they have said.

The second thing we have to ask ourself is: Who is going to make agricultural policy? My people called over to the Department of Agriculture when they saw this statement, which they knew was wrong, and they asked them about it. Then they said the letter was written by OMB.

People in our Government had better know who is writing the letters in regard to agricultural policy that come to every Member of Congress. They had better know that it is OMB. And we had better know that either the Office of Management and Budget does not know what is in the legislation that they are writing letters to us about—sent to all Members of Congress—or we had better know that they are outright misleading the Members of Congress.

Our job is to write the best legislation we can. We cannot write it very well if we are misled.

So I hope the people of this Congress will realize hereafter when we get correspondence of this type that we had better look at it twice before we determine that we are getting accurate information.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I share the gentleman's concern because I think there is a discrepancy between what that letter says and what is in the legislation.

However, is the gentleman aware and is it not so that the Secretary issued orders months ago to all of the Farmers Home Administration agencies throughout this Nation to be cautious, to not foreclose on anyone that demonstrated the ability to repay the loans, to work with them in any possible way in order that they survive?

I think from that standpoint this legislation is somewhat redundant.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Will the gentleman yield to me briefly?

Mr. BEDELL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. In the oversight hearings, during the hearings before the committee, it was never made explicitly clear by the Assistant Secretary or by the members of the Agriculture Department whether they had indeed issued orders or what orders they had issued or what restrictions they had or had not placed. I think that should be made clear.

Mr. BEDELL. And to answer the gentleman, I think the gentleman and I agree. We should have accurate information. When a Member of Congress gets a letter signed by the Secretary, they should feel that that letter is accurate.

This letter clearly is inaccurate. It clearly is not correct as to what is in the legislation. It misleads the Members of Congress and I believe that the Members of Congress should be aware of it so that if we get additional letters from the Secretary we had better check to find out whether they are correct or not.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BEDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I think this is a very sensitive area we are treading in here because there are indeed many farmers who are in desperate and dire straits. Ninety percent of America's farmers are not financed by the Farmers Home Administration but, rather, by private creditors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL) has expired.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Therefore, when we get into a position of telling people that if, beyond their own fault, they fall into dire economic straits, due to the fact we are in these times, and maybe he has exercised good management but simply is in financial difficulty, whether we ought to have the Government wave principle payment and forgive the interest payment forever. Therefore we may be carving out a very special niche for all of the farmer's that have come to the Government for their financial needs because they have been turned down by the private sector. I believe it requires at least two instances of rejection before they are even eligible for Farmers Home Administration money or loans.

We are making a very special niche for these people.

I have a great deal of sympathy for them, but in relationship to all of the other farmers that are having to go out into the private sector, they do not have this same kind of protection.

I really concern myself about what we might be doing if we tell people that we know it is tough, and if you have been a good manager you can come back to the Government; we are not going to foreclose and we are going to continue on making loans to what is probably, in all regards, going to be a losing proposition in the end anyway.

Mr. BEDELL. My argument is not whether the gentleman from Minnesota is right or wrong. My argument is that we should expect honest information in a letter signed by the Secretary.

□ 1215

Second, we should expect that to be a letter from the Secretary. We should not expect that to be a letter written by the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Just so that I understand it, I am trying to get a copy of the language so that I can quote from it exactly, but I believe it pretty much says that if a farmer, beyond his own fault, if he has been a good manager, and circumstances beyond his control—obviously, the market is going down, and beyond his control, an 8-billion-plus bushel price-depressing corn crop is beyond the farmer's control—are you saying, then, that the Government would not be able to foreclose, the Government would be forced to continue to give him operating capital?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL) has expired.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BEDELL. I am saying that the letter from the Secretary reads as follows: "Mandatory authority would allow borrowers who are able to pay to avoid doing so * * *."

The bill mandates deferral only if "the borrower due to circumstances beyond the borrower's control is temporarily unable to continue making payment on such principal and interest then due * * *." The bill clearly says that you cannot get such a loan unless you are unable to pay. The Secretary has written a letter that says if you are able to pay, you will still be able to get these loans. Either he did not read it or OMB did not read it, or at least they are misleading the people in this Chamber.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I think the gentleman is partly right and he is partly wrong, because it does not allow for people who are able to pay their loans not to have to pay them. On the other hand, there are certain criteria right here in this section of the law which would say that if it is beyond the borrower's control and he is temporarily unable to continue making payment on principal and interest and he has a reasonable chance of repayment of the loan after the deferral of principal, that it must be waived.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. DASCHLE).

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I support H.R. 5831, amendments to the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act reauthorizing lending programs within FmHA. I would like to respond to some of the outrageous misrepresentation by the administration of some provisions in H.R. 5831, specifically the deferral language contained in section 7 and the limited resource loan program provision. I am sure other of my colleagues will address other portions of the administration's memo on H.R. 5831.

The administration hand delivered a letter and memo from Secretary Block explaining their opposition to H.R. 5831 to my office at about 5 o'clock yesterday. I do not appreciate their method of handling this important legislation by not allowing much time for rebuttal. It is consistent, however, with their handling of this bill from the beginning. For the benefit of my colleagues not on the Agriculture Committee, you should be aware that the administration did not even make available to Republican members of the Agriculture Committee their proposals for reauthorization of the FmHA lending programs until the day of the markup of the bill. The Department of Agriculture was, and rightfully so, chastized by Members on both sides of the aisle. And now, here we are again, with another last minute USDA document, and this one filled with outrageous statements about the provisions of the legislation before us today. To term the Department's memo as a "gross distortion" is the most generous thing I can think to say.

With regard to the deferral section of the bill, Secretary Block, in his cover letter, says:

> H.R. 5831 provides for mandatory deferral of loan payments and of foreclosures which turn massive amounts of Federal loans into outright gifts.

The memo then states:

> Section 7 would give delinquent farm loan borrowers entitlement, under certain conditions, to deferral, rescheduling or reamortization of loan payments or moratorium on foreclosure. Mandatory provisions would undermine borrowers' incentive to work within FmHA to improve their farm operations and debt management, and would allow those who are able to pay to avoid doing so.

"Mandatory deferral," "outright gifts," "wholesale moratorium"—I do not know what provision the administration is talking about. It certainly is not the one Congressman DORGAN and I authored, is not the one the House Agriculture Committee overwhelmingly approved, and is not the one found in our bill today. And the statement about farmers losing their "incentive" to work with FmHA is patronizing and insulting to farmers. The deferral provision in section 7 is just that—a deferral on payment of loan for a limited time, under limited circumstances, and on a case-by-case basis. The farmer is not forgiven the loan or interest—it must be repaid. How this is termed "outright gift" or "wholesale moratorium" I do not understand—Secretary Block and David Stockman must have created their own dictionary.

Under this deferral provision a farmer must meet certain criteria—and FmHA gets to determine whether he meets the criteria—to be eligible for a deferral. The criteria are nearly identical to the ones the Department now says it uses in allowing deferrals anyway. Under the bill, a farmer, in order to receive a deferral must: First, be a good manager; second, his inability to repay must be due to circumstances beyond his control; third, he must have a reasonable chance for repayment; and fourth, he must have no larger than a family-size farm—this is something now determined by county committees in determining farmers' eligibility for operating and ownership loans which have family-size-farm criteria.

A second, and very important part of the provision requires that FmHA notify farmers of the existence of deferrals and other servicing remedies. In a recent court decision in Georgia, Curry against Block, the district judge ruled that FmHA must provide clear notification to farmers about the existence of deferral possibilities and must rewrite their deferral regulations. The Government, in its brief filed in this case, stated that FmHA has no obligation to inform farmers about deferral possibilities and is appealing the case. The provision in H.R. 5831 is consistent with the judge's order regarding notification of deferral options.

The deferral provision in section 7 also fills a void in the law by requiring that USDA have clear procedures for applying for and appealing denials of deferrals and other servicing remedies. USDA currently does allow appeal of deferral decisions, but it is not something required by statute. Currently, decisions made by FmHA county committees are appealable by order of statute. Decisions made by FmHA county supervisors who do make deferral decisions are appealable by virtue of regulation, but it is not mandated by law. Our provision simply makes the law consistent with regard to decisions by country committees and county supervisors, and should not require USDA to change the way they operate. The Secretary also goes after the limited resource loan program, saying that it would cost "$231,697,000 in life-of-loan subsidy costs." It is ridiculous to think that a farmer would get a limited resource ownership loan and pay the limited resource interest rate for the 30-year life of the loan. Limited resource borrowers accounts are periodically reviewed and borrowers are usually graduated to regular interest rates within a couple years. I would estimate the cost of subsidy over a 3-year period to be about $80 million—certainly a reasonable cost to help young and limited-resource farmers who otherwise could not farm or would, like so many other farmers today, be forced out of business and into the unemployment lines. It is a very small investment for something as crucial as maintaining a family farm system.

And so, I hope my colleagues will not be taken in by the administration's outlandish statements and will support H.R. 5821, including the deferral and limited resource program provisions.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER).

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, the House has before it the most significant piece of agriculture legislation it will consider this year, the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act. It is critical for the survival of America's farm economy at this time of severe depression in American agriculture.

The USDA had just reported that 1982 net farm income will be again setting new lows for the third year in a row. When adjusted for inflation, farm income will be the lowest since 1932. The Congress has adopted legislation in the reconciliation bill which offers some long-term relief in the form of a paid diversion program on 1983 crops in order to reduce supplies. However, farmers need help now. They need the financial assistance and removal of the fear of imminent foreclosure which this bill provides. This bill provides for a moratorium on foreclosures by FmHA in the coming year, as a last resort.

I have just returned from 2 weeks of meetings with my constituents and the question on the minds of many farmers is whether they will be able to continue to operate. They already know that they are not going to make any money at today's unbelievably low prices. They know that their debt load is going to be much larger. What they do not know is whether their lenders, in particular, the Farmers Home Administration, will allow them to continue to farm in 1983. The First Congressional District of Arkansas is full of rumors that the FmHA will begin wholesale foreclosures shortly after the election. The fact is that a majority of FmHA borrowers in Arkansas will be unable to meet the existing criteria which were established in February 1982. This insures that farmers are on a collision course with FmHA policy unless the relief afforded by this legislation is provided.

Earlier this year, we persuaded Secretary Block to move away from the stringent collection policy which the administration attempted to put into place in 1981, just as the collapse of the farm economy was gaining momentum. However, now that total collapse is near at hand, the policy of the administration appears to be oppose the relief afforded by H.R. 5831. On Wednesday, USDA delivered a letter from Secretary Block to all the Members stating that the administration opposes this bill because it provides for mandatory deferral of loan foreclosure actions and because it exceeds the President's budget request.

In fact the administration already has at its disposal the flexible authority it needs to avoid massive foreclosures, but has little desire to use it. Farmers do not want a handout. They need a helping hand to make it through the hard times that exist because of circumstances beyond their control. That authority is provided by earlier versions of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, which allow the Secretary to defer loan principal and interest payments when he determines that a borrower is temporarily unable to make payments due to conditions beyond his control. The Secretary also has authority to consolidate and reschedule loans to farmers for up to 7 years. While the FmHA has utilized this authority to some extent, they have discouraged farmers from refinancing by forcing them to give up earlier loans made at lower interest rates and adopt higher rates after rescheduling. If farmers cannot pay back the loans they received at lower rates, how does the administration expect them to repay at recent, higher rates, given today's farm prices?

H.R. 5831 will allow farmers to request deferral of principal and interest on farm operating, disaster, and economic emergency loans only through September 30, 1983. This bill will not in any way alter the farmer's eventual obligation to repay the loan. During this 1 year period, loan foreclosures will be prohibited only if three conditions are met:

First, the borrower must be able to demostrate good management practices;

Second, the borrower must be able to show that he is unable to repay due to conditions beyond his control; and

Third, he must have a reasonable chance of repayment of the loan at the end of the period that principal and interest are deferred.

For those loans deferred by this legislation, no interest will accrue in the case of family size farms. Once the period of deferral is ended, borrowers may reschedule, consolidate, and reamortize their loans without being subjected to the higher rates required by the administration in recent cases of rescheduling.

This is a necessary piece of legislation in view of the great fear that is spreading through the farm community. It will allow farm borrowers another year to begin to salvage and rebuild what this farm depression has destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed other aspects of the bill. The administration opposes what the committee has recommended in terms of lending limits, but actual increases are very modest in view of the severity of the agricultural crisis.

The ceiling on farm ownership loans is raised to $1 billion from the current level of $900 million. The operating loan fund is raised to $1.5 billion from the current level of $1.3 billion and water and sewer loans are raised from $300 million to $500 million. In fact, the economic emergency loan program which the administration has so adamantly opposed is eliminated entirely although my hard-pressed farmers are entitled to know that there is $600 million in existing authority for fiscal year 1982 which the administration has refused to use.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5831 is a modest response to the severe needs of rural America. It provides no bailout for farmers or anyone else. Only a 1-year deferral of foreclosures in the most critical cases is provided. All debts due will continue to be the farmer's obligation after September 30, 1983. I urge my colleagues to vote for this essential legislation.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana (Mr. MARLENEE).

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of 5831 which is a reauthorization bill that properly addresses many of the problems facing agricultural borrowers from the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). American agriculture has rarely faced times so crucial:

Income, in constant dollars, is now at depression-era levels.

Land values in some areas have dropped 4 to 8 percent.

Producers have cut capital purchases 10 percent, resulting in depressed sales in the agribusiness industries.

High interest rates and a severe cut in cash flow have combined to form the major deterrent to agricultural prosperity. Because agriculture and its related industries are the largest segment of the economy, employing approximately 16 million workers, there is a domino effect on the entire economy.

I believe the FmHA should be committed to do all it can, in a responsible manner, to assist its borrowers through these economic rough waters. National attention has focused on delinquency rates and foreclosures. Several congressional hearings, and now the General Accounting Office, have investigated FmHA lending practices. A variety of solutions have been suggested to the FmHA credit crisis. I did not find it wise to support a blanket moratorium on all FmHA foreclosures, and blanket deferrals of payments on FmHA loans—that is plainly overkill. I did, however, want to make certain that FmHA had the legal authority to exercise their judgment, forgo foreclosure, and defer payments of principal and interest in some cases. This reauthorization makes that consideration the law through the next fiscal year. The conditions qualifying this consideration are appropriate: First, the borrower must have demonstrated good management skills; second, circumstances beyond the borrower's control are making repayment impossible; and third, a delay of foreclosure or payments would afford the borrower a reasonable chance of repayment.

This bill also requires the notification of all borrowers of the criteria that must be met, and the availability of deferrals of payments and the forgoing of foreclosure. Borrowers are also to be notified of the appeals process to any FmHA decision. These are appropriate and adequate measures of safeguard for borrowers.

I want to underscore my extreme concern for agricultural operators who find no credit available from any lending source, including FmHA. For that reason I support this bill as it was reported from committee. In testimony I gave before the Agriculture Committee, I reminded my colleagues that many capable producers are not FmHA borrowers. Now seeking to borrow from FmHA as a last resort, they are finding no funds available for operating loans. Available FmHA funds must first be reserved for existing borrowers who may be in distressed conditions and require additional loans. In Montana, the amount of money used to finance existing FmHA borrowers was three times the amount loaned to first-time borrowers. An unnecessary moratorium of foreclosures, or unnecessary deferrals of payments, will further drain the reserve of funds that would otherwise provide credit to first-time borrowers.

It is important to every taxpayer that FmHA be a responsible credit source, so I was successful in striking the vague "impaired standard of living" test as one of the criteria for postponing otherwise appropriate foreclosures. There is no producer still in the business today who does not find his net income barely sufficient to survive another year. Last year, the increase in production expenses outstripped the growth in farm income $4 to $1. Applying an impaired standard-of-living test to FmHA borrowers would discriminate against every producer who is obtaining credit from another source, and is meeting much more stringent credit terms in doing so.

Mr. Chairman, I feel it is important that FmHA adhere strictly to the business of keeping agriculture in business. My committee amendment to the reauthorization bill is aimed at keeping the FmHA out of the oil, gas, and mineral business. Current FmHA loan agreements secure the mineral rights as a matter of routine. I question the propriety of this practice. More importantly, past loan agreements did not specifically secure the mineral, oil, and gas rights as collateral. Land values at the time the loan was made would not have reflected the value of possible mineral deposits, since much of these now-valuable deposits were as yet undiscovered, or a lesser value was placed on them. It is improper for the FmHA to now claim authority over disposition of these rights, especially if the agricultural producing capacity of the land is not greatly impaired. My amendment was aimed at stopping this practice. The FmHA was established to serve family farms. Until prosperity returns to America's producers, I want to see FmHA as a responsible lending source keeping producers in business.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN).

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a young friend of mine from North Dakota is a family farmer in his early thirties and this year he received a notice from the Farmers Home Administration saying to him that "You are not making any financial progress, and we suggest that you either cut back your operations or consider quitting farming." This is a young fellow who is not delinquent. He is a good young farmer. He has a good record. He was written to by the Farmers Home Administration saying, "We think you ought to consider quitting farming."

What kind of a Federal agency is it that is supposed to be the lender of last resort and is writing to good young family farmers in this country suggesting they quit farming?

I think that is incompetent. The reason we are debating these bills today is because the Farmers Home Administration is not doing its proper job for our family farmers.

Now, the speaker before me talked about David Stockman. The letter that I received in my office today coming from the Secretary of Agriculture, apparently, was written by David Stockman. When is David Stockman going to get off agriculture's case? David Stockman says farmers are crybabies. I say David Stockman does not know what he is talking about.

Six months ago on the floor of the House I said that David Stockman could not tell the difference between a razorback hog and a pickup truck. I still do not think he can tell the difference. The fact is, he does not know anything about farming. He fights harder for foreign aid than he does for family farmers. Does he not understand that the health of this country's economy is dependent in a large part on the health of the American family farmer?

Now, we put a provision in this bill, an amendment that Congressman DASCHLE and I sponsored in subcommittee, that came through the committee, that provides for a deferral for young farmers in trouble. It does not say, "We are going to forgive the interest and principal payments on your loan," but it say, "If you are a good young farmer, who, through no fault of your own, because of high interest rates and low prices, you have gotten into some trouble, we are going to give you some time."

The Farmers Home Administration ought to be giving these farmers a helping hand. Instead, they are giving them a handcuff. We are saying, with this deferral, "We will give you some time," It does not say, "You do not have to repay the interest and you do not have to repay the principal," It does not say that at all. You still have to repay it all. It simply buys them some breathing space. It says that young farmers are the farming future in this country and we want to give them some time. That is all this says. We will get into it during the debate, but I think this is a very important issue for family farmers.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Nebraska (Mrs. SMITH).

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman, my good friend from Tennessee, Mr. JONES, and my friend from Vermont, the ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. JEFFORDS.

I rise to briefly point out a very serious concern of mine regarding the emergency disaster loan program administered by the Department of Agriculture. Currently, producers are eligible for low-interest loans if a natural disaster has wiped out 30 percent of the aggregate economic value of production for his particular county.

The committee in its wisdom has provided for a reduction from 30 to 20 percent loss of an applicant's production from a single enterprize based on a per acre or per animal calculation.

However, short of offering an amendment, I want to call attention to the practice of basing eligibility on loss to the county instead of loss to the individual producer.

As the program now operates, a producer who sustains 100 percent loss from a natural disaster may not be eligible for an emergency loan while his neighbor across the road, who was hit by the same storm, would be eligible for the disaster assistance.

This situation is possible because of the calculation based on county loss not individual producer loss. Also, the county designation procedure discriminates against large counties and counties with intensive production. This situation is very inequitable and unfair.

I suggest the Department of Agriculture and the committee address this obviously questionable policy, especially in light of the absence of direct payments for disaster assistance.

I include for the RECORD, with your permission, a copy of my letter to the Secretary of Agriculture, asking him to use the authority he has to provide the assistance that the spirit of the law demands.

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 2, 1982.

Hon. JOHN R. BLOCK,
Secretary of Agriculture,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Again I feel compelled to cite the need for greater flexibility in the rules under which the Department operates the disaster assistance program.

As presently applied, the guidelines require that there must be a 30 percent loss of all crops in a single county before any Federal disaster assistance can be approved. Since storms do not respect county lines there are many instances where deserving farm producers are ruled out because the storm damage is confined to their area of the county and it is not possible to meet the 30 percent requirement even though the losses of one farmer or a group of neighboring farmers might be 100 percent.

To deal with the inequities the strict application of this rule creates, I respectfully recommend that you exercise your authority to grant waivers of the 30 percent rule in those cases of exceptional merit.

I have one such case in mind where grain producers near Hay Springs, Sheridan County, Nebraska, have recently suffered etensive hail damage in the one major crop production area of the county and have lost as much as 100 percent of some of their crops. Unless the present rule is waived, however, disaster assistance will be denied them. This would be catastrophic in view of all of the other economic losses occuring as a result of the faltering farm economy.

Mr. Secretary, I know you will be interested in seeing the figures on the extent of these disaster losses in Sheridan County, Nebraska, and that you will see fit to approve an exemption so that the producers can recoup a percentage of their losses inflicted by the severe hail storm on August 23, 1982.

With best wishes, I am,
Sincerely,

VIRGINIA SMITH,
Member of Congress.

□ 1230

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GUNDERSON).

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5831 that establishes lending limits for farm and rural development programs of the Farmers Home Administration during the next 3 fiscal years.

The importance of these FmHA programs to our rural areas cannot be overemphasized. Besides being the "lead agency" in the area of rural development, the FmHA has played an increasingly important role in the farm credit picture in recent years.

In fact, as of January 1, 1981, 12.2 percent of all of the total outstanding farm debt—some $22 billion—was held by the Farmers Home Administration.

The importance of the FmHA as a "lender of last resort" for farmers has taken on even greater significance during the current recession when credit is tight. In many cases, the availability of a FmHA operating loan may make the difference for good, young farmers as to whether or not they will be in business a year from now.

Mr. Chairman, it is no secret that the Federal Government is facing a period of fiscal austerity when authorizations and actual spending on many Federal programs is being decreased rather than increased by the Congress. This is not the case with the FmHA farm lending programs.

Farm ownership loans are authorized at $1 billion for fiscal year 1983 under H.R. 5831. That is an 11-percent increase over their current authorization of $900 million and 29 percent more than requested by the President.

Farm operating loans are authorized at $1.51 billion for fiscal year 1983. Again, that is almost 10 percent more than the current authorization of $1.375 billion for this program.

H.R. 5831 also authorizes such sums as may be necessary for the natural disaster emergency loan program. More importantly, it decreases the eligibility requirements for such emergency loans from a 30-percent loss of a normal year's production to a 20-percent loss. This is particularly important during these times of economic austerity when even a 20-percent loss may result in the insolvency of many in our farming community.

Within the farm lending programs of the Farmers Home Administration are provisions permitting loans to limited resource farmers at interest rates less than those FmHA normally charge. The future of the family farm in America has been solidified since 1978 because of the existence of these provisions. That is why I am very pleased that H.R. 5831 continues the special treatment of limited resource farmers during the upcoming 3 fiscal years.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to guarantee the existence of the current family farm structure of agriculture, we need to provide opportunities for our good, young farmers to get in, and stay in, farming. The reauthorization of the ownership and operating programs at increased levels together with the special treatment of limited resource farmers all contained in H.R. 5831 will go a long way in achieving this goal.

I, therefore, urge my colleagues to support this valuable and most necessary legislation.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5811.

Mr. Chairman, the best case for passing this bill was made by the administration last week when they released at long last the projections for net farm income in 1982. Farmers in 1982—said the administration—will net $19 billion, down nearly 25 percent from last year's $25.1 billion.

In constant dollars, farm income this year will be at its lowest point since 1933. Farmers' return on equity will most likely be less than 1 percent, in 1982 and 1983, at this point does not look any better in fact it look worse.

Let me remind the Members that what we do with this bill will not just affect farmers. If one doubts that, ask an unemployed International Harvester worker whether agriculture's buying power affects him.

This bill is designed to assist a profoundly depressed segment of our economy. It is necessary although I wish it were not. It is fiscally responsible by House budget standards, reducing the authorized levels by 19 percent over 1979 budgeted levels, and I challenge a Member to find any other program levels with this type of funding reductions.

I do not like everything that is in the bill. I would rather see a declining requirement of Federal funds in the farm sector instead of an increasing requirement; but the truth of the matter is when one looks at the very real fact that at this very moment, 28 percent of all Farmers Home loans in the United States are now delinquent because farmers are unable to pay and with the income projections that we have just come out with, with the current farm bill which is totally inadequate in place, the truth of the matter is we are going to have increased needs for capital (from the Federal Government as a leader of last resort) in the agricultural sector in the very near future.

I repeat again: This bill is within the budget. It does meet the short-term needs. If we somehow can change our agricultural policy to provide for a more realistic net farm income, it will meet the needs in the future. If we do not, it will not.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ANTHONY).

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of passage of H.R. 5831. This important legislation has originated in the House Agriculture Committee's Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit and Rural Development, chaired by our able and distinguished colleague, ED JONES of Tennessee.

As a former member of this subcommittee, I am particularly aware of the critical nature of this bill for American agriculture. It is imperative that our farmers and the rural sector of the country have access to the financial assistance and credit provided by it as soon as possible.

In my State of Arkansas, the Farmers Home Administration is more than the lender of last resort. It is the only lifeline keeping many of my farmers afloat at this time of economic disaster for agriculture.

As many of my colleagues have noted in this and earlier debates on the economy, the farm sector has been suffering longer than any other during the recent economic recession. In Arkansas, we have suffered through the 3 worst years in my lifetime. The drought of 1980 destroyed crops all over the State and 1981 and 1982 have been years of economic disaster. Now, FmHA reports that there are 3,349 operating loans and 6,485 emergency loans in the State of Arkansas in which farmers may well be unable to meet existing payment obligations, given today's low prices.

The level of delinquency on these loans exceeded 60 percent in January of this year and will go higher by January of 1983. Even with extensive subordination by FmHA to other lenders and some refinancing of debts, the delinquency levels on loans in Arkansas could not be reduced below 30 percent this year.

The loan ceilings for the various FmHA programs have received modest and very necessary increases. More needs to be done but our farmers recognize that at this time of budgetary restraint, the levels proposed will have to be sufficient.

The bill also provides for borrowers to receive a 1-year deferral of principal and interest repayments when they can show that they have used good farming practices, but economic conditions prevent repayment as scheduled. This temporary relief will enable our farmers to gain a reprieve from possible foreclosure in the most extreme cases.

I urge my colleagues to join with the members of the Agriculture Committee in approving this very necessary legislation. A broad base of support for this bill will reassure our farmers that Congress will not abandon them at the time of their greatest need.

● Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the House Agriculture Committee, I urge my colleagues to support the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act which will be considered by the House of Representatives today. I support this legislation, more specifically, I support the provision that requires the Department of Agriculture to forgo foreclosure and permit an FmHA family farm borrower to defer principal and interest payments on ownership, operating, disaster, and economic emergency loans. This deferral is permitted if the family farmer demonstrates that he has used good management practices, and that he has a reasonable chance of paying the loan after the deferral. There is a third requisite to the deferral that I feel tells the whole story. That requisite is the ability of the farmer to demonstrate that his temporary inability to make payments is due to circumstances beyond his control.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to spell out exactly what those circumstances beyond the farmers control are, and who is in control of those conditions that are causing the American farmers' plight. Since this administration took office on January 20, 1981, the prices of the cash crops in Indiana have been on a disastrous plunge. The price of corn has dropped from $3.75 in January of 1981 to below $2 in some parts of Indiana, and are expected to stay well below $2 for the remainder of this year. Wheat and soybeans have dropped over 30 and 20 percent, respectfully.

All the while that the bottom is dropping out of the commodity prices, the administration is discouraging the export sales of grain to foreign countries because of an ideologue that threatens to lead the American farmer into bankruptcy.

In Indiana alone, there is a new foreclosure every 3 hours of every day, 7 days a week. The threat of losing your home or family farm is becoming a frightening reality to most Americans.

Make no mistake about the fact that I do not consider this section of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act as the savior of the farm community. The fact is that this provision will affect only a small amount of the farmers who need help. I do, however, consider this an effort to help those farmers that have called on the Government to assist them in producing the food of our Nation. The farmer that is helped by this provision is being put out of business because of the farm policies of this administration.

Again, I urge my colleagues to support this act and the provision calling on the Department of Agriculture to defer foreclosure on the family farmer. There is already enough foreclosures and business failures in America due to this administration's policies without the Government becoming active in the process of foreclosure themselves.●

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the Clerk will now read the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the reported bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5831

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. Section 306(a) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1926(a)) is amended by—

(1) in paragraph (1), inserting the designation "(A)" before the existing text thereof, and adding at the end thereof a new subparagraph as follows:

"(B) The Secretary is authorized to make a grant to any association which received a loan made or insured under subparagraph (A) to finance a water or waste disposal facility if—

"(i) such association is unable to repay such loan without suffering great economic hardship, and

"(ii) the inability to repay such loan results from an unanticipated diminution in the aggregate amount of fees or revenue received by such association, caused by a substantial decline in population or commercial activity in the area served by such facility.

The proceeds for such grant may be used only to repay such loan.";

(2) adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following: "The Secretary shall fix the grant rate for each project in conformity with regulations promulgated by the Secretary which shall provide for a graduated scale of grant rates prescribing higher rates for projects in communities having lower community population and income levels which can demonstrate a financial need: Provided, That for grants for projects in communities having a population of fifteen hundred or less and a median community income level below 80 per centum of the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income, the grant rate shall be the maximum rate permitted under this paragraph when the community can demonstrate a financial need.";

(3) amending paragraph (7) to read as follows:

"(7) As used in this title, the terms 'rural' and 'rural area' shall not include any area in any city or town having a population in excess of ten thousand, except that (A) for the purpose of loans for essential community facilities under subsection (a)(1) of this section, the terms 'rural' and 'rural area' may include any area in any city or town having a population not in excess of twenty thousand; and (B) for purposes of loans and grants for private business enterprises under sections 304(b), 310B, and 312 (b), (c), and (d), the terms 'rural' and 'rural area' may include all territory of a State that is not within the outer boundary of any city having a population in excess of twenty-five thousand and its immediately adjacent urbanized areas as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture according to the latest decennial census of the United States: Provided, That special consideration for such loans and grants shall be given to areas other than cities having a population in excess of ten thousand."; and

(4) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs (16), (17), (18), and (19), as follows:

"(16) In providing financial assistance for water and waste disposal facilities under this section, the Secretary shall utilize a project selection system to determine which of the applicants for assistance meeting the basic requirements of this section shall be selected to receive assistance. Such project selection system shall provide for the objective and uniform comparison of requests for assistance (in the form of preapplications) on the basis of relative need as reflected by (A) low community median income; (B) small population; and (C) severity of health hazards resulting from inadequate provision for the reliable supply of potable water or from inadequate means of disposing of waste. For purposes of the project selection system, each of these three factors shall be weighted equally.

"(17)(A) The Secretary is authorized to make payments to associations described in paragraph (1) of this subsection which are reasonably likely to receive financial assistance under paragraph (1) or paragraph (2) of this subsection for community water and waste disposal facilities, for predevelopment costs incurred in connection with the planning and design of such facilities. Such costs may include the costs of drilling test wells and of preparing alternative engineering designs to determine the most feasible and economical method to improve the water supply or waste disposal system of the community involved.

"(B)(i) The amount of any payment received under subparagraph (A) with respect to a project by an association which receives, before the expiration of the five-year period beginning on the date of such payment is received, a loan under paragraph (1) of a grant under paragraph (2) of this subsection to finance such project shall be treated as part of the amount of such loan or the amount of such grant, as the case may be; and

"(ii) the amount of any payment received under subparagraph (A) with respect to a project by an association which does not receive, before the expiration of the five-year period beginning on the date of such payment is received, a loan under paragraph (1) or a grant under paragraph (2) of this subsection to finance such project shall be repaid to the Secretary as if such payment were a loan made under paragraph (1) unless the Secretary waives the repayment requirement with respect to all or part of such amount.

"(C) The total of payments made by the Secretary under this paragraph for any fiscal year shall not be less than 5 per centum of any amount appropriated to carry out paragraph (2) of this subsection for the fiscal year unless the applications for payments received by the Secretary from eligible associations for the fiscal year total less than 5 per centum of such amount.

"(D) For purposes of section 346, each payment made under subparagraph (A) shall be deemed to be a loan unless and until such payment is offset against a grant or the Secretary waives the repayment of such payment.

"(18)(A) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to private nonprofit organizations for the purpose of enabling them to provide to associations described in paragraph (17) of this subsection technical assistance and training—

"(i) to identify, and evaluate alternative solutions to, problems relating to the development, storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water or the collection, treatment, or disposal of waste in rural areas;

"(ii) to prepare applications to receive financial assistance for any purpose specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection from any public or private source; and

"(iii) to improve the operation and maintenance practices at any existing works for the storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water or the collection, treatment, or disposal of waste in rural areas.

"(B) In selecting recipients of grants to be made under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall give priority to private nonprofit organizations which have experience in providing the technical assistance and training described in such subparagraph to such associations serving rural areas in which residents have low incomes and in which water supply systems or waste facilities are unhealthful.

"(C) The total of grants made by the Secretary under this paragraph for any fiscal year shall not be less than 2 per centum of any amount appropriated to carry out paragraph (2) of this subsection for the fiscal year unless the applications for grants received by the Secretary from eligible associations for the fiscal year total less than 2 per centum of such amount.

"(19) In the case of water and waste disposal projects serving more than one separate rural community, the Secretary shall utilize the median population level and the median community income level of all the separate communities to be served in applying the formulas provided in sections 306(a)(2), 306(a)(16), and 307(a)(3)(A).".

SEC. 2. Section 307 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1927) is amended by—

(1) in subsection (a)(3)(A)—

(A) striking out "the poverty line prescribed by the Office of Management and Budget as adjusted under section 624 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2971d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "80 per centum of the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income"; and

(B) inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; and not in excess of 7 per centum per annum on loans for such facilities which do not qualify for the 5 per centum per annum interest rate but are located in areas where the median family income of the persons to be served by the facilities does not exceed 100 per centum of the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(d) Unless appraised values of the rights to oil, gas or other minerals are specifically included as part of the appraised value of property securing a farm ownership loan, the rights to oil, gas or other minerals located under the property shall not be considered part of the collateral securing the loan.".

SEC. 3. Section 309(h) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1929(h)) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "In addition, the Secretary may provide financial assistance to persons eligible for financing under section 302 of this title by guaranteeing loans for the purposes specified in section 303(a)(1) of this title made by States or by agencies of States, including loans which involve tax-exempt bond funds.".

SEC. 4. Section 310B(d)(5) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1932(d)(5)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) No loan commitment issued under this section, section 304, or section 312 shall be conditioned upon the applicant investing in excess of 10 per centum in the business or industrial enterprise for which purpose the loan is to be made unless the Secretary determines there are special circumstances which necessitate an equity investment by the applicant of up to, but not exceeding, 20 per centum. The Secretary shall permit an applicant to make the required equity investment in the form of cash, tangible earning assets at book value, or appraisal surplus, or any combination thereof.".

SEC. 5. Section 316 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1946) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(c) The Secretary shall permit a borrower having an outstanding loan made under this subtitle who has adequate equity to protect the loan to use proceeds from the sale of property securing the loan to make prospective scheduled payments on the loan: Provided, That such sale does not impair the borrower's ability to continue the borrower's operation.".

SEC. 6. Section 329 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1970) is amended by—

(1) striking out "30 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "20 per centum"; and

(2) striking out "based upon the average monthly price in effect for the previous year".

SEC. 7. Section 331A of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1981a) is amended by—

(1) inserting the designation "(a)" before the existing text thereof;

(2) in the second sentence, striking out "section" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection"; and

(3) adding at the end thereof new subsections (b), (c), and (d) as follows:

"(b) During the period beginning with the date of enactment of this subsection and ending September 30, 1983, the Secretary shall permit, at the request of the borrower, the deferral of principal and interest on any outstanding loan made, insured, or held by the Secretary for farm ownership purposes under subtitle A, farm operating purposes under subtitle B, disaster emergency purposes under subtitle C, or economic emergency purposes under the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978, and shall forgo foreclosure of any such loan, in both cases upon a showing by the borrower that the borrower (1) has demonstrated good management practices, (2) due to circumstances beyond the borrower's control is temporarily unable to continue making payment on such principal and interest then due, and (3) has a reasonable chance of repayment of the loan after the deferral of principal and interest or the foregoing of foreclosure. Interest that accrues during the deferral period on any loan deferred under the provisions of this subsection shall bear no interest during or after such period. The foregoing provisions of this subsection shall be limited to borrowers who own or operate family-size farms, as certified by the county committee in accordance with section 333(b) of this Act. The Secretary shall promulgate regulations which provide (1) for notification of all farm borrowers of the provisions of this subsection and all other servicing alternatives offered by the Secretary; (2) clear procedures by which borrowers may petition the Secretary for relief under such provisions and alternatives; and (3) for appeal within the Department of Agriculture from a decision which denies relief under such provisions and alternatives.

"(c) Upon the expiration of any period of deferral of payment of principal and interest and foregoing of foreclosure by the Secretary under subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary shall make available to the borrower, upon the borrower's request, procedures whereby the loan can be consolidated, rescheduled, or reamortized to provide equitable repayment terms consistent with the borrower's farm and financial situation, and any loan so consolidated, rescheduled, or reamortized shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of the rate of interest on the original loan.

"(d) Any loan deferred, consolidated, rescheduled, or reamortized under any authority of the Secretary other than pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, bear interest for the balance of the original loan and for the term of the original loan at a rate not in excess of the rate of interest on the original loan.".

SEC. 8. Section 332 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1982) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(d) On the request of a borrower with respect to whom the committee has made a certification under section 333(b) of this title, the committee may meet with such borrower—

"(1) to discuss with such borrower any question regarding the farming operation of such borrower, or

"(2) to advise such borrower regarding farm management decisions such borrower may be required to make.".

SEC. 9. Section 333 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1983) is amended by—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) inserting "(1)" after "(b)";

(B) inserting before ": Provided, That", the following: ", and (2) the county committee to establish the maximum amount of credit which may be extended to such applicant under such certification to meet the actual needs of such applicant during the crop year involved"; and

(C) in the proviso, striking out "or recommendation required to be made by the county committee," and inserting in lieu thereof ", recommendation or limitation required to be made by the county committee under this subsection,";

(2) in subsection (d), striking out "and" following the semicolon;

(3) in subsection (e), striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(f) that a borrower having an outstanding loan made, insured or held by the Secretary for farm ownership purposes under subtitle A, farm operating purposes under subtitle B, disaster emergency purposes under subtitle C, or economic emergency purposes under the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978, be permitted to use the proceeds from the sale or lease of oil, gas, or other minerals and the proceeds from royalties generated from leases of oil or gas, located under the property securing the loan to make prospective scheduled payments on the loan.".

SEC. 10. Section 346 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1994) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) as follows:

"(e) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section—

"(1) loans for each of the fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985 are authorized to be insured, or made to be sold and insured, or guaranteed under the Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund as follows:

"(A) real estate loans, $1,000,000,000;

"(B) operating loans, $1,510,000,000; and

"(C) emergency loans in amounts necessary to meet the needs resulting from natural disasters.

Not less than 25 per centum of the insured loans authorized for farm ownership purposes and not less than 25 per centum of the insured loans authorized for farm operating purposes shall be for low-income, limited-resource applicants.

"(2) loans for each of the fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985 are authorized to be insured, or made to be sold and insured, or guaranteed under the Rural Development Insurance Fund as follows:

"(A) insured water and sewer facility loans, $500,000,000;

"(B) industrial development loans, $1,000,000,000: Provided, That such loans may be insured, or made to be sold and insured, or guaranteed only with respect to applicants which, in the case of insured loans, are unable to obtain sufficient credit elsewhere to finance their actual needs at reasonable rates and terms, taking into consideration prevailing private and cooperative rates and terms in the community in or near which the applicant is located for loans for similar purposes and periods of time, and, in the case of guaranteed loans, the lender certifies that the lender is unwilling to provide credit to the applicant at the same rate of interest in the absence of the guarantee authorized by this title; and

"(C) insured community facility loans, $300,000,000.".

SEC. 11. The Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1921 note) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 349 as follows:

"SEC. 349. (a) Not later than one month following the end of each calendar quarter beginning with the quarter ending June 30, 1982, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate, a report containing the information specified below with respect to loans made, insured, or guaranteed for farm ownership purposes under subtitle A of this title, farm operating purposes under subtitle B, disaster emergency purposes under subtitle C, and economic emergency purposes under the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978:

"(1) the estimated number and dollar value of loans designated delinquent;

"(2) the estimated number and dollar value of loans voluntarily liquidated;

"(3) the estimated number and dollar value of loans accelerated;

"(4) the estimated number and dollar value of loans in the process of foreclosure;

"(5) the estimated number and dollar value of loans foreclosed; and

"(6) the estimated number and dollar value of loans on which any other adverse action was taken.

"(b) Each report submitted under this section shall provide the required information on a State-by-State basis and shall list such information separately for each type of loan specified in subsection (a), and within each such type, separately for loans made or insured and for loans guaranteed, and separately for regular loans and for loans made to low-income, limited-resource borrowers.

"(c) In preparing the format of the report to be submitted under this section, the Secretary shall closely consult on a continuing basis with the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate, to ensure a common understanding of the terms employed in this section.

"(d) For purposes of this section—

"(1) 'loans described delinquent' means loans with respect to which (i) the amount repaid is more than $10 less than the amount due under the repayment schedule, or (ii) any payment is not made within fifteen days after the date the payment is due under the repayment schedule;

"(2) 'loans voluntarily liquidated' means loans with respect to which the borrower, on the borrower's own volition, or under threat of foreclosure and with the Secretary's agreement, has sold property securing the loan and applied the proceeds against the loan indebtedness;

"(3) 'loans accelerated' means loans with respect to which the borrower is notified by the Secretary that, because of a default, all principal and interest under the loan are due and payable;

"(4) 'loans in the process of foreclosure' means loans which have been referred by the Secretary to the Office of the General Counsel of the Department of Agriculture for initiation of action to foreclose the loans and such action is not completed;

"(5) 'loans foreclosed' means loans with respect to which legal proceedings have been concluded to sell the property securing the loan, or the property securing the loans has been sold by the Secretary under the terms of the loan agreement; and

"(6) 'loans on which other adverse action was taken' means loans with respect to which the Secretary has, because of delinquency or default, taken an action against the borrower other than those described in any other paragraph of this subsection.

"(e) The provisions of this section shall be effective through September 30, 1985.".

SEC. 12. (a) The amendments made by section 1(1) of this Act shall become effective on October 1, 1982, and shall apply to any association described in section 306(a)(1)(B) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, as added by section 1(1) of this Act, without regard to whether the loan involved was received by such association before such effective date.

(b) The amendments made by section 1(4) of this Act which added new paragraphs (17) and (18) to section 306(a) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act shall become effective on October 1, 1982.

(c) The amendments made by section 6 of this Act shall apply to financial assistance made available with respect to disasters occurring after January 1, 1981.

(d) All other amendments made by this Act shall become effective upon the date of enactment.

Mr. DE LA GARZA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. JEFFORDS

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JEFFORDS: Page 15, after line 24, insert the following new section (and redesignate succeeding sections accordingly):

SEC. 10. Section 335(c) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1985(c)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence—

(A) by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(B) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "Such property shall be determined to be suitable for such disposition if such property is being used, or customarily has been used, for the production of agricultural commodities and if such use is permitted under applicable land use laws in effect at the time of disposition under this subsection.";

(2) in the second sentence—

(A) by striking out ", whenever practicable,"; and

(B) by inserting before the period ", except that if such property is not sold to such persons within a period of two years after the date of acquisition, then such property shall be offered for sale to those States, units of local government, and private nonprofit organizations described in section 170(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 which agree to use such property for agricultural purposes and to convey such property to such persons as soon as practicable."; and

(3) in the third sentence by inserting "or any such State, unit of local government, or organization" after "such persons".

Mr. JEFFORDS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment I am offering today is to insure that Farmers Home Administration policy on disposition of agricultural land acquired through foreclosure is in compliance with the Farmland Protection Policy Act. This amendment does not make any major changes to the law, but instead simply clarifies the congressional intent expressed in existing statutes.

What this amendment would specifically do is to require that land in the possession of Farmers Home as a result of foreclosure that customarily has been used for agriculture be offered to eligible farmers as a matter of first priority, then to State and local governments, and nonprofit organizations; and only then be put on the open market. Rather than simply disposing of such land to the highest bidder, Farmers Home Administration would be required to make a good faith effort to keep such land in agricultural use. I believe this is the intent of existing statutes, and this amendment would specifically define that intent.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of Congress in enacting the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act and its predecessor legislation was to provide for the continuation of agriculture in the face of adverse market conditions by extending below-market credit to eligible farmers. A reading of this act, and in particular section 335(c), shows that this law establishes a hierarchy of priorities in the disposition of farm properties acquired by FmHA through foreclosure. The first priority it sets forth is to dispose of such property in a way that assures that it will be put back into the hands of farmers for continued agricultural use. The disposition of property in this preferred manner necessarily implies that sales need not bring the highest price.

Viewed in this light, the law assumes that farm property should be sold to eligible farmer purchasers unless circumstances other than its nonfarm value so dictate. Such circumstances might arise, for example, when local land use regulations no longer permit agricultural use of the property. But it is clear that the price of the property alone is not sufficient grounds for a secretarial determination that is not suitable for disposition to eligible farmers.

The fact that Congress did not intend CONACT to be a revenue generator for the Federal Treasury is reinforced by the provision of section 335(c) that the Secretary must keep open his offer to sell suitable property to eligible farmer purchasers for 3 years before going to public auction or negotiated sale. Three years is an extraordinarily long period of time to hold property acquired by foreclosure, and yet so strong was Congress apparent desire to assure that farms would eventually be put back into the hands of capable but financially disadvantaged farmers, that it provided for such a holding period in the statute.

Nor does CONACT stand in isolation as an expression of Congress intent to perpetuate the agricultural useage of agricultural land. The Farmland Protection Policy Act of 1981 (Public Law 97-8), title XV, subtitle I, section 1539, provides, for example, that its purpose is "to minimize the extent to which Federal programs contribute to the unnecessary and irreversible conversion of farmland to nonagricultural uses." The term "Federal program" is defined by the statute as including those "undertaking, financing or assisting construction or improvement projects; or acquiring, managing or disposing of Federal lands and facilities."

The disposition of farm properties by FmHA clearly falls within the purview of the Farmland Protection Policy Act, and FmHA is compelled by this statute to minimize the unnecessary and irreversible conversion of farmland in disposing of farmland it acquires by foreclosure. Because the CONACT does not require FmHA to sell farm property at the highest price, the conversion of farmland as a result of such a sale would be "unnecessary" within the meaning of the Policy Act.

Importantly, the underlying purpose of the Farmland Protection Policy Act is similar to that of CONACT—to strengthen rather than weaken the agriculture industry in the face of adverse economic conditions. In adopting the Policy Act, Congress found that "the extensive use of farmland for nonagricultural purposes undermines the economic base of many rural areas." Thus, these two statutes complement each other and their interpretation together strongly mandates that FmHA take every appropriate step to assure that good farmland remains in agricultural use under the private management of capable farmers. It is clear that this result was intended by the statutes to safeguard the long-run economic prospects of the agriculture industry, even if it means foregoing some potential Federal revenue in the short run. In the administration of these laws, the Executive must attempt to carry out Congress intentions. My amendment would clearly specify these intentions and require the Secretary to carry them out.

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not necessarily change the law, but merely clarifies the intent of existing statutes. I believe that by specifically requiring Farmers Home Administration to made a good faith attempt to convey farm properties acquired through foreclosure into the hands of farmers who might not otherwise be able to copetitively bid for such land, we will be granting Farmers Home the ability to enhance farming opportunities and strengthen a domestic agriculture industry that, as we all know, is in serious economic trouble.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to inform the gentleman I have discussed the matter with the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES). The gentleman in turn has discussed it with various members of the committee. We have arrived at the consensus the gentleman makes a very valid and useful contribution to the legislation, and it would be our purpose to accept his amendment on our side.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HARKIN

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARKIN: On page 12, after line 2, insert a new section 7 as follows and renumber the following sections accordingly:

"SEC. 7. Section 331 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1981) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'If the borrower under a loan made or insured by the Secretary under section 310B of this title establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that (1) the borrower is entitled to reimbursement for the principal and interest due under such loan from a third party that is involved in reorganization or liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act, and (2) the estate of such third party is likely to have sufficient assets to reimburse the borrower, the Secretary shall defer, at the request of the borrower, payment of the principal and interest for such time as the Secretary determines necessary to permit reimbursement of the borrower to be made under the bankruptcy proceedings.'."

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides for a postponement in the payment of a B. & I. loan in a special type of circumstance of considerable hardship. For example, a borrower can have a loan with Farmers Home and a contingent contract with another firm that is undergoing bankruptcy which requires that the amount be repaid because the bankrupt company cannot perform its responsibilities.

When Farmers Home finds such a circumstance and also finds that the bankrupt firm can make the required payment but must wait for the distribution of funds under our bankruptcy laws, then I believe the Farmers Home Administration should wait for the repayment of their loan.

To do so could force the borrower from Farmers Home into bankruptcy.

This amendment simply has Farmers Home wait for the payemnt to be made by the contingent borrower.

What if the bank or the firm that is the third borrower cannot make the payment at the end? Would the Farmers Home be out of money? No, it would not, because this amendment only takes effect when Farmers Home knows that there are sufficient funds to make the payment, and it will be made because of the contractual relationship between the primary borrower and secondary borrower.

This amendment will not cost any money. The payment will be made. The number of cases involved is small. However, the impact on the borrower could be very large. These types of loans are major ones in the view of the small businesses that are affected. The Farmers Home is taking a very tight view of this, and there are some special cases involved where borrowers have borrowed money from Farmers Home; they have loaned the money to another firm. That firm has performed some of its contractual liabilities, but that third borrower is now undergoing bankruptcy.

Under some special contracts with the first borrower, if the secondary borrower is liquidated in bankruptcy, they have to pay back the first borrower before any other creditors. Farmers Home knows they are going to get the money back in that situation. That is what my amendment speaks to. It just allows that first borrower to put off until such time as they get their proceeds from the contingent contractor under bankruptcy proceedings to then pay the money back to the Farmers Home Administration.

As I said in my remarks, to not do so may be, in fact, to force the first borrower into bankruptcy which they otherwise might not have to do if they can just wait until the third borrower pays the money back.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed the amendment. As I understand it, as the gentleman has stated it, it is to take care of those rare circumstances where the requirement by FmHA to pay the loan precedes the ability through bankruptcy to receive the money that is due the primary obligor.

Therefore, I have no objection to it, with that understanding.

Mr. HARKIN. I appreciate that.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this with the chairman of the subcommittee. As we understand the explanation of the gentleman, this would impose no obligation on the Government. Under the factual situation the gentleman has delineated for us, there is no possibility that it could be any loss to the Government but rather that a time sequence is all the gentleman is asking for but not a deferral of payment or a deferral of the loan but rather that the time sequence for foreclosure would be affected; is that correct?

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, let me try to be more clear than that. Let's take a specific case.

The primary borrower—let us say a group of business people—have borrowed the money under an association name. They have taken that money from Farmers Home and loaned it to a secondary borrower. That secondary borrower now is, let us say, undergoing bankruptcy proceedings. The secondary borrower has a contract with the primary borrower which says that the money which was borrowed from Farmers Home, and which was then loaned to the secondary borrower, that in case of bankruptcy, that amount of money is deemed to be cost of administration, which means under bankruptcy laws that is paid first.

We know they are going to pay it back to the primary borrower.

In a case like that, where Farmers Home knows they are going to get the money back, then Farmers Home would be obligated to, at the request of the primary borrower, put off repayment of that loan until such time as the bankruptcy court begins to distribute the funds, the first of which will be the cost of administration.

Of course, the primary borrowers would get their money back at that time. Then Farmers Home could go in and demand payment of that loan.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has explained it satisfactorily. It is a delay in time.

Mr. HARKIN. That is true. It is a delay in time. It will cost the Farmers Home Administration no money whatsoever.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the gentleman's amendment on this side.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1245

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. HARKIN).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WAMPLER

Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WAMPLER: Page 4, line 18, strike out "can demonstrate a financial need" and insert in lieu thereof "are unable to obtain sufficient credit elsewhere to finance their actual needs at reasonable rates and terms, taking into consideration prevailing rates and terms in the community in or near which the applicant is located for loans for similar purposes and periods of time".

Page 4, beginning on line 24, strike out "can demonstrate a financial need" and insert in lieu thereof "are unable to obtain sufficient credit elsewhere to finance their actual needs at reasonable rates and terms, taking into consideration prevailing rates and terms in the community in or near which the applicant is located for loans for similar purposes and periods of time".

Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to clarify language contained in section 1 of H.R. 5831 pertaining to the grant formula for rural communities seeking Farmers Home Administration grants for water and waste disposal systems. This amendment would strike the language in the bill requiring communities having a population of less than 1,500 and a median community income level below 80 percent to "demonstrate a financial need' in order to receive a maximum 75-percent grant rate. Instead of requiring this demonstration of financial need, such communities would have to show that they were unable to obtain sufficient credit at reasonable terms elsewhere to meet their financing needs.

During consideration of H.R. 5831, the House Committee on Agriculture unanimously approved provisions to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to provide for graduated grant assistance for water and sewer system development in rural communities. These provisions provided that grant size would be determined on the basis of two objective criteria—community income level and community size. In addition, those communities with median family income no greater than 80 percent of the State nonmetropolitan median family income and with populations which do not exced 1,500 would be assured a maximum 75 percent grant.

The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. EVANS) offered an amendment to H.R. 5831 which added a third criterion—demonstrable financial need—to the grant formula specified in the bill. The amendment was agreed to by voice vote even though several Members questioned whether any community with a population less than 1,500 and a median family income at or below 80 percent of State nonmetropolitan median income would not be demonstrably in need of financial assistance to construct or improve a water or waste disposal system. These criteria of size and income level in most, if not all, cases define a community's need for grant assistance.

The problem with this section of the bill, as it currently is worded, is that it requires the consideration of an extremely vague condition in determining grant assistance. It has the effect of opening up the criteria for grant assistance to other unspecified and possibly nonobjective measures of community need for financial aid, as defined by the Farmers Home Administration through regulations.

In order to avoid these possible problems while achieving the objective of the original language, I am offering an amendment to strike the "demonstrable financial need" language and substitute language which would establish a "credit elsewhere" test on those communities applying for maximum 75-percent grants which meet the two criteria of having a population less than 1,500 and median family income at or below 80 percent of State nonmetropolitan median income. Such language is much more specific and actually clarifies the intent of the original language. The "credit elsewhere" test also is an objective and established criterion which Farmers Home Administration is required to use in several of their loan and grant programs.

I have spoken with the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. EVANS) and understand that he is in agreement with this amendment. I also have spoken with the Members on the other side of the aisle and understand that this amendment has their support.

I therefore urge my colleagues to vote for passage of this amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAMPLER. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman for offering this amendment. I am most supportive of it.

When this came up in committee, I remember it was late in the day. As the gentleman knows, I had been involved in these amendments with the gentleman from Virginia and I was unavoidably absent at the time that this came up; but I think what the gentleman has done here is to take a very loosely worded thing on this "demonstrable need," tighten it down, and as the gentleman says, to make it a "credit elsewhere" test, which really tracks with what Farmers Home has done in all these other cases they have made loans for.

I believe, if the gentleman does not mind me saying so, that the gentleman has perhaps stopped an end run by OMB or others, I am not going to pick out any bad people here, ghosts or anything like that, but an end run to try to get around what we worked out in the subcommittee and in the full committee, to make sure that these waste water loans and grants——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WAMPLER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, to make sure that these small communities that really meet those criteria that we set down, those objective criteria of less than 80 precent of the State nonmetropolitan median income and less than 1,500 people are assured that they are available for the maximum grants and loans under the provisions that we put in the bill.

I think the "demonstrable financial need" was an attempt at an end run. I thank the gentleman for stopping the end run with his amendment.

Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for this contribution.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, we appreciate the contribution of the gentleman from Virginia. I just want to understand for the record that the gentleman's amendment in no way changes the responsibility of the Farmers Home to assure repayment and the responsibility to make loans to the full amount, or grants possible, but rather that the gentleman defines in a more exact nature the criteria, so that these small communities may be able to work and present their case to the Farmers Home Administration, is that a correct interpretation of the amendment?

Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield.

Mr. WAMPLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

That is correct and is an accurate statement of the intent of the amendment.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. With that, we have no objection to the amendment on this side, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WAMPLER).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DASCHLE

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DASCHLE: On page 13, line 7, strike out "The Secre-" and all that follows through line 15.

On page 13, insert after line 25 a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations which provide (1) for notification of all farm borrowers of the provisions of this section and all other servicing alternatives offered by the Secretary; (2) clear procedures by which borrowers may petition the Secretary for relief under such provisions and alternatives; and (3) for appeal within the Department of Agriculture from a decision which denies relief under such provisions and alternatives.".

On page 14, line 1, redesignate subsection (d) as subsection (e).

Mr. DASCHLE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment simply as an improvement in the language that we have in the bill. It is really technical in nature. It does not change the thrust of the legislation at all. It simply provides for the section dealing with the deferral in the bill to be split into two sections.

The way the bill reads now, the requirements that Farmers Home borrowers be notified of the existence of deferral and other servicing remedies would apply only to the deferral language in H.R. 5831. There are other deferral language and servicing loan provisions in current law. We always intended, that is, the committee always intended, to be certain that the notification procedures applied to them as well. It is simply a matter of clarification that we now offer this subsection change.

I ask the acceptance of the committee in that regard.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, we have examined the amendment.

I have just checked with counsel, though, with one clarification, that we would be prepared to accept the amendment.

The gentleman's amendment in item 3 provides for appeal within the Department of Agriculture from a decision which denies relief under such provisions and alternatives.

Is it the gentleman's intent to restate the appellate procedure that exists in the law at this time?

Mr. DASCHLE. The chairman is correct. We are not changing the appellate procedure at all. We are simply restating it for legislation clarification.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, we accept the gentleman's contribution and have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, what I understand this to be, this is the Farmers Home Administration Outreach program to notify farmers that they will be eligible at the request of the borrower to come in and seek deferral of their principal and interest; interest for 1 year and the principal to be amortized over the remainder of the life of the contract, they can show that for reasons beyond their control, being low market prices, had weather, high interest rates, they will be eligible for a waiver of interest and principal for 1 year and for no interest or compounding of interest waved for the balance of the contract; is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. My amendment only relates to the information required to be provided to them, not to the legislation itself.

As it stands right now, whether we are talking about loans under this section, this bill, or any other loan servicing mechanism the Farmers Home has, there is a requirement that farmers be notified that services such as that exist. We are simply breaking that down into two areas; one, dealing with the deferral language in this bill, the other dealing with other servicing provisions that currently exist in law.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I understand that; but Mr. Chairman, I do not know if there has been any estimate made of the cost of this provision which is included in notification, but when we get into deferral of interest and principal, there is not probably a farmer in the country that cannot come to the Government today, and remember that only 10 percent are financed by the Farmers Home Administration, explain why because of excessively high short-term interest rates, because of low farm prices, high fuel costs, that they are not in a cash-flow bind because of reasons beyond their own ability to control, they are in dire economic straits, and therefore meet the criteria Members of this Congress better be made aware that this is exactly what we are doing.

I will be amazed if virtually every single Farmers Home Administration borrower of ownership loans is not going to petition the Government for relief from 1 year's interest, and it is a lifelong gift, it is an outright gift.

I have a lot of support and sympathy for the people who are financed under this program, but for this Congress to award interest free gifts on the unpaid principal to people who have farm ownership loans, is a very serious thing that we are embarking on.

What are we going to do for the small business people? What are we going to do for the homeowners? What are we going to do for all the other people that come in during this time and show serious problems?

We are opening up a Pandora's box here, I think, that defies imagination.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, if I can reclaim my time, we are not providing any gift at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DASCHLE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DASCHLE. These borrowers are still going to be required to pay that money back. They are still bound by the responsibilities that they held from the moment they signed the contract for that loan. They are simply being deferred the responsibility of having to pay that for 1 year, not the responsibility for payment, just the deferral of that responsibility for 1 year.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding; but taking that statement, the gentleman's amendment and the reason for accepting it, recommending it to the committee, is that the concerns of the gentleman from Minnesota may be valid concerns and we share some of them.

□ 1300

What the gentleman is doing has nothing to do with the legislation, the interest rate, 1 year, 3 years, or anything. All the gentleman is saying is that when and if the legislation is in place or that the Secretary informs those who have an interest, which I think is worthwhile in many of the rural areas where there is a lack of the dissemination of information.

I think it would be unjust and many times cruel if we were to pass legislation providing for some assistance and that some farmer, because of the lack of receiving the information, might not at least petition so that his situation may be reviewed.

Granted, the bulk of them possibly would, but I think that we do no harm to responsible activity by the Farmers Home Administration, but we rather enhance it; that they not put themselves off in a corner, shut themselves off in a room and say, "Well, the Congress gave us authority but we are not going to let anyone know about it."

I think that is the thrust of the gentleman's amendment and the reason why we would accept it.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am not quarreling with the part of the fact that we are making the information available.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. DASCHLE) has expired.

(On request of Mr. ENGLISH and by unanimous consent, Mr. DASCHLE was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. HAGEDORN. My problem is the information that we are sending them, I say to the chairman of the committee and to the gentleman from South Dakota. That does concern me greatly because we are informing them of an outright gift. It says right here, "Interest that accrues during the deferral period on any loan deferred under the provisions of this subsection shall bear no interest during or after such period."

I would call that an interest-free gift. I think there are literally tens of millions of people throughout the Nation that would like one similar to that. I think in the area of agriculture there is hardly a farmer in the Nation, I do not care how rich or well off they are, that is not having cash flow problems and who would not be able to come in and qualify to their local banker. We are not doing anything at all for them.

That is the bad part, the news that we are sending to them and what this is going to allow if we pass this legislation intact and it actually becomes law.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DASCHLE. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, let me respond just one more time by saying, first of all, that the homeowners in this country already have that opportunity under certain conditions. I think what we are asking is that farmers be given the same opportunity.

Second, we have already seen in the courts down in Georgia earlier this year where the judge made it very clear that unless we legislate a clarification in this area, that is going to be dictated in the courts. I think it is up to us to insure that the responsibility rests here, that we clarify that, and that we do it right now.

Third, I think it is important that we recognize that here we are talking about the discretion of the Secretary, we are talking about the discretion of the Farmers Home Administration. Any program can be subject to abuse. Any program can be made unworkable or untenable. But it depends on how good a manager there is.

I would certainly hope that we have in the Farmers Home Administration or in the Department of Agriculture, and I think in this case we can give the power to the Secretary and to the Farmers Home Administration the opportunity to make the good judgment under which cases the deferral provisions of this law would be used.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ENGLISH).

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman for his amendment. I would like to make one other point that perhaps should be brought out here.

Many of us do not feel that the particular provision that the gentleman from Minnesota finds objectionable is strong enough. We made that point in committee. The point that I think has to be understood and the reason that this issue has even been addressed in this bill is the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Agriculture have failed to work with farmers, failed to work with farmers in trying to make certain that they have an opportunity to survive during these difficult times.

If they had shown a willingness to work with farmers this issue would not have even been addressed in this bill.

I think the provision in the bill itself is very weak because discretion is left up to the Secretary of Agriculture. The gentleman is certainly to be commended for at least letting the farmers know what is there and that the Secretary has the discretion to help farmers.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, if I may address the gentleman from Minnesota, the concern of the gentleman from Minnesota deals with another area in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

(On request of Mr. DE LA GARZA and by unanimous consent, Mr. DASCHLE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the chairman, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for yielding further to me.

Mr. Chairman, might not the gentleman from Minnesota address that issue in the bill, with the possibility that he might receive some support, rather than to obstruct at this time the intention of the gentleman from South Dakota? That information should be made available. If the gentleman is worried about the content of what information may be made available, then he should address that in the other section of the bill.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, with due respect to the chairman, I will probably take this up later, but I think it is important that when we talk about providing information to make sure that we know what is actually being told to them. I think I brought out a little bit of that in this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. DASCHLE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROSE

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROSE: On page 9, after line 14, insert a new subparagraph (A) as follows:

"(A) inserting after 'the upgrading of existing facilities or construction of new facilities' the following: '(i) for providing firefighting, emergency transportation, or rescue services, and (ii)';".

On page 9, lines 15 and 22, redesignate subparagraphs (A) and (B) as subparagraphs (B) and (C), respectively.

Mr. ROSE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, what I would like to show you is, I think, what you will find is a very simple and very fair amendment.

To best explain it to you, let us look for a moment at existing law and then what this bill does to the existing law.

The existing law allows 5-percent community facility-type loans for the upgrading of existing facilities or construction of new facilities as required to meet applicable health or sanitary standards in the area where the median income for the people to be served is below the poverty line. That is in our current law.

The committee bill does away with the test of the poverty line as provided by the Office of Management and Budget and substitutes as a test for eligibility for 5-percent loans that the income level must be less than 80 percent of the statewide nonmetropolitan median-family income.

In other words, it is a liberalization of the poverty line test that is the current law.

To that package, I want to add only one thing because I feel very strongly that providing volunteer firefighting, emergency transportation, and rescue service to those types of areas with 5-percent loans is just as important as helping upgrade health or sanitary standards.

I believe the cost is modest; I believe that we all realize that the health and security of people who live in those kinds of areas is just as important as their sanitary requirements.

I am told by many rescue and volunteer fire department people across the South that they are finding it, in these types of depressed areas, very, very difficult to get these loans and to make these kinds of payments.

I wish that we could provide a 5-percent loan for volunteer rescue squads and volunteer fire departments regardless of their economic situation, regardless of the income that is received, that is paid in that area, as we did prior to the 1981 reconciliation.

But, realizing the realities of the current budgetary situation, it is my intention that the words that I insert with my amendment only apply in those areas that equally are qualified for the 5-percent loans to meet health or sanitary standards, which is already in the current law.

I urge my colleagues to support me in this. I do not believe this is controversial and I hope it is not, and I yield back the balance of my time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HARKIN AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROSE

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARKIN as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. ROSE: On page 9, after line 14, insert a new subparagraph (A) as follows:

"(A) inserting after 'the upgrading of existing facilities or construction of new facilities' the following: 'for providing firefighting, emergency transportation, or rescue services, or';".

On page 9, lines 15 and 22, redesignate subparagraphs (A) and (B) as subparagraphs (B) and (C), respectively.

Mr. HARKIN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have checked with the initial offeror of the amendment. All my amendment does is to strike the "(i)" and to strike the "and, (ii)," that was in the initial amendment, which means that the firefighting, the ambulance, or emergency rescue and transportation services will still have to meet the same criteria of 80 percent of standard, nonmetropolitan median income and 1,500 population to be eligible for the 5-percent loans.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ROSE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has perfected my amendment. That is my intention, and I thank him for offering it. I totally support it.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. HARKIN) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ROSE).

The amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ROSE) as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MORRISON

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORRISON: Page 20, after line 17, insert the following new section:

SEC. 12. The Secretary of Agriculture, at the request of the borrower, shall release such borrower (without payment of any consideration or penalty) from personal liability on any outstanding loan insured or guaranteed under the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. prec. 1961 note) before the effective date of this Act if such borrower transfers the property securing such loan to another person who—

(1) satisfies the conditions of eligibility specified in section 202 of the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. prec. 1961 note), as in effect on September 29, 1982;

(2) agrees to assume the full amount of the outstanding indebtedness and the obligations of such borrower under the terms of such loan (including the payment of interest in accordance with the provisions of such loan in effect immediately before such transfer); and

(3) is reasonably likely to repay such indebtedness and to fulfill such obligations considering the financial condition of such person.

Page 20, line 18, strike out "SEC. 12." and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 13.".

Page 21, line 8, strike out "All" and insert in lieu thereof "This Act and all".

Mr. MORRISON (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I am offering seeks to modify current Farmers Home Administration regulations regarding sale of a farm operation by a farmer who has an outstanding FmHA economic emergency loan. I believe that this amendment will allow slightly improved credit terms for some new farm borrowers without adversely affecting the Federal budget.

Under current FmHA regulations, a person who purchases a farm operation from someone carrying an economic emergency loan can, if he wishes, assume the loan. However, FmHA regulations require him to assume the loan at current rates and terms rather than at the original conditions of the loan. This situation is in effect at Farmers Home Administration because the economic emergency program, while still authorized, is operated at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture and currently is not being implemented. If the program were implemented, the farm buyer would be able to assume the economic emergency loan at the loan's original rates and terms.

All my amendment would do is allow a purchaser of a farm operation to assume an outstanding economic emergency loan from the seller at the original rates and terms of the loan, whether the economic emergency program is implemented or not at the time. The buyer would still have to meet all eligibility criteria of the economic emergency program before he could assume the loan.

Mr. Chairman, when the farm economy is facing one of the most severe credit squeezes in history, this amendment will allow slightly better credit terms for a very small number of borrowers interested in keeping a farm operation in production. The alternative is usually foreclosure, and no repayment at all to the Treasury. Local Farmers Home officials have asked for this flexibility, and I believe it can help the current crisis with little impact on the Treasury.

I urge support of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MORRISON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DORGAN OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota: On page 16, line 18, after "applicants.", insert the following: "The Secretary shall inform in writing all applicants for loans for farm ownership and farm operating purposes of the availability of the loan program for low-income, limited-resource borrowers and the general nature of the program.".

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will not take all my time, but this amendment is a very simple amendment that provides that the Farmers Home Administration shall do their job. That is, they shall notify potential borrowers of the operating loans and ownership loans of the Farmers Home Administration funds that there does exist a limited resource loan program. The limited resource program was targeted by this Congress to try and provide some help to some folks out there who are trying to make a go of family farming. These are the smaller family farmers.

The Farmers Home Administration operates as a lender of last resort. We say to the Farmers Home Administration by law that we want 20 percent of these funds for operating and ownership loans to be set aside for the marginal borrowers, for the smaller family farmers, for the ones who are in the most difficulty.

What I have discovered is that nearly one-half of the operating loans nationwide in the limited resources programs are unused. From my own State's experience and other States' experiences, there are a lot of farmers who could well use these funds. They could well qualify for limited resource loans but they are not notified by the Farmer Home Administration that those opportunities exist.

The day before I came back from the recess I received a call from a young borrower, a fellow that has two quarter sections of land. He was in serious trouble—not delinquent with anybody, but he needed a operating loan. His total income last year was $6,000. This was a small farmer who has very limited income and who went to the Farmers Home Administration, asked for some operating loan money. He was told no.

I asked the fellow, "Did the Farmers Home Administration tell you there was a limited resource program available specifically targeted for smaller farmers?"

His answer was, "No, I was not aware of it."

That is the answer almost universally when you speak to folks who have been to Farmers Home offices around the country. I think it is our job to make sure that the farmers understand that the limited resources program is there. This amendment does that, and I ask for its passage.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by Mr. DORGAN and myself which requires that written notification be given to operating and ownership loan applicants of the existence of the limited resource loan program. As far as we can tell, and GAO has confirmed this to us in their preliminary briefing as part of an FmHA investigation they are doing at our request, the national FmHA office is not in any way encouraging the use of this congressionally mandated program.

States have widely varying records with regard to how much of the loan authority they have obligated this year—nationwide, only 48 percent of the limited resource operating funds were obligated as of July 7, 1982. North Dakota, for instance, had obligated only 19 percent of their limited resource operating funds on July 7, while South Dakota has an excellent record of 87 percent of its funds obligated on the same date.

But even if there were not a problem this year with regard to the limited resource loan operating funds not being obligated in a timely fashion, there would be the need for this amendment. There has always been a flaw in the administration of the limited resource loan program is that there is no such thing as an application procedure for it. The program is actually an earmark of funds within the regular operating and ownership loan programs. A farmer fills out an application form for an operating or ownership loan, on which there is no mention of the limited resource interest rate. The county supervisor then, in determining approval or disapproval of the application, decides whether to recommend the farmer for the limited resource interest rate. Again, I am sure there are wide variances with regard to whether county supervisors are inclined to use the program or not. The point is, however, that the farmer is not required to be informed of the program and may not even know whether he is being considered for the limited resource program.

This amendment would require that operating and ownership loan applicants be given something in writing which explains the limited resource loan program—a farmer has every right to know about a program created by Congress for which he or she may be eligible.

Something that is not in the amendment, but a suggestion I would make to FmHA is that they put a checkoff box on their operating and ownership application forms which asks a farmer if he/she wants to be considered for the limited resource loan program, and would be an easy way to verify that farmers have been informed of the program.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment by the gentleman from South Dakota. The amendment would simply require the Secretary to inform loan applicants of the availability of the limited resource program.

I am deeply concerned that the 25 percent of the funds in the farm ownership and farm operating loan programs which are to be devoted to the limited resource program have, in most States, not been fully utilized. In my own State of Nebraska, for example, as of July 14 of this year, only 48 percent of the limited resource operating loan funds had been disbursed. Considering the current depressed state of the farm economy, I simply cannot believe that there is so little need for operating loans under the limited resource program.

We must send a clear signal to USDA that the Congress maintains its commitment to providing these low-interest funds to those many farmers who are struggling to meet their costs and retain their operations. I understand that there is some consideration of holding hearings into the operations of the limited resource program after the election, and I strongly urge that the committee do so.

At a minimum, I urge my colleagues to support the adoption of this amendment, so that our farmers and ranchers will at least be made aware of the existence of the program and have a fair opportunity to apply.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to thank the gentleman for his support of the amendment. I thought the gentleman's statement was right on target. I would like to say that the General Accounting Office is in the process of conducting a study of the use of the limited resource funds and the procedures under which they are used. I think we will see some interesting results from that study, but I do appreciate the gentleman's comments and I hope this body will adopt this amendment.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the gentleman from North Dakota for his comments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HIGHTOWER

Mr. HIGHTOWER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HIGHTOWER: On page 20, insert after line 18 a new section 14 as follows, and renumber the following section accordingly:

SEC. 12. (a) Section 202 of the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. prec. 1961) is amended by striking out "The Secretary of Agriculture may" and inserting in lieu thereof "The Secretary of Agriculture shall".

(b)(1) Section 207(b) of the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. prec. 1961) is amended—

(A) by striking out "$400,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$200,000", and

(B) by striking out "$650,000" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$450,000".

(2) The amendments made by paragraph (1) shall not be construed to affect any loan insured or guaranteed before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) Section 211 of the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. prec. 1961) is amended by striking out "September 30, 1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1983".

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the amendments made by this section shall become effective on October 1, 1982.

Mr. HIGHTOWER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HIGHTOWER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment pertains to the economic emergency loan program that is authorized by section 202 of the Emergency Agricultural Credit Adjustment Act of 1978, which will expire on September 30 of this year.

In 1982 $600 million was budgeted for this program and was not used. The Secretary of Agriculture said on more than one occasion that he wanted to use the economic emergency loan program, but it has not been done.

This amendment would continue the program for an additional year, would reduce the loan amount per borrower on a direct loan from $400,000 to $200,000, and on a guaranteed loan from $650,000 to $450,000. It does also change the wording of the law from, "The Secretary may" to "The Secretary shall."

Mr. Chairman, it has been said over and over again, and I hope every Member of Congress fully understands the extent of the economic disaster that is faced by many areas of agriculture. This is a good program that was put into the law several years ago. This Secretary of Agriculture has not seen fit to use it, but it is needed and it should be used. We have people that did not want or need Farmers Home Administration loans for a long time. They were able to go to their local banks. They were able to find the kind of financing that they needed, but now they have not been able to continue.

Yet, we know that if given the opportunity, if they are just given a chance to survive, to dig in a little bit deeper, they will be able to survive and stay in production, pay back their FmHA loans, and pay back their bank loans, but we need to provide the economic emergency loan program.

It has been in the law, as I said. We need to extend it another year, and that is all this section does—it extends the program for 1 additional year.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGHTOWER. I will be happy to yield to my distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the 1981 omnibus farm bill authorized a 1-year extension, through September 30, 1982, of the economic emergency loan program with a total lending ceiling of $600 million per year. Unfortunately, the authorization was made discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture.

We are now into the 12th month of the fiscal year and the Secretary has yet to implement and utilize his authority to make loans to farmers under the EE program.

In spite of numerous letters and requests from Members of Congress and nearly every major farm organization, the Secretary has ignored the need for the program and has allowed $600 million in potential credit assistance to American farmers to go unused.

On March 15 of this year, I received a letter from Secretary Block in which he stated his intention to implement the EE program, and he stated that Farmers Home regulations would be issued shortly. It has now been 6 months since the Secretary made this announcement, but he still has not issued regulations.

To say I am disappointed would be an understatement. I still believe the economic emergency loan program has been a vitally important source of agricultural credit since its establishment in 1979. It should have been used in 1982, but it is too late now to expect much cooperation from USDA in making use of these needed funds.

Therefore, I support the gentleman's amendment, and urge its adoption.

Mr. HIGHTOWER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. We certainly know that we are not going to be able to solve all the problems of agriculture by extending loans or getting larger loans. We want to address it in other ways, but we also think that spare tires are not included in cars just because they want to have flats. It might be that it will be needed. It is needed, and it should be implemented. It is a good program, and the authorization should continue for an additional year.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGHTOWER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in looking at the amendment which the gentleman offers, I guess I have a question. There are a number of people following this debate who would be interested. The gentleman has not increased the authorization level. He has not mandated a Federal appropriation or anything. He is just saying that we ought to have the program available, and he is reflecting the remarks of the chairman of our distinguished subcommittee, is that correct?

Mr. HIGHTOWER. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and of course in addition to that we are reducing the amount a borrower can get, reducing the loan levels from the existing level.

Mr. GUNDERSON. So, if anything, the gentleman is actually tightening up the program. He is just saying that is what we need to do, this program ought to be available, the Secretary said he was going to use it, and let us get on with it.

Mr. HIGHTOWER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GUNDERSON. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HIGHTOWER).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DORGAN OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota: Page 17, line 15, insert before before the semicolon the following: ": And provided further, That it is the sense of the Congress that insured loans and guaranteed loans for industrial development also be available for facilities for the conversion of agricultural commodities into alcohol or hydrocarbons for use as motor fuel or other fuel, and that the Congress encourages the USDA to be more aggressive in pursuing opportunities to assist in the development of an alcohol fuels industry in the United States through the proper use of industrial development funds.".

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is a sense of Congress resolution. I originally wanted to provide the 25 percent of the B. & I. loans to be made available for the use in construction of plants that would produce ethanol alcohol from agricultural products. I have decided not to include the percentage figure, but this sense of Congress resolution does encourage the USDA to be more aggressive in pursuing oportunities to assist in the development of an alcohol fuels program in this country.

I really believe that this is not only a step toward energy independence but also a step toward developing new and important markets for agricultural products which can be achieved through the development of a strong ethanol alcohol industry in this country. I think it needs the kind of incentive that we can give it through the B. & I. program in the USDA. I think a sense of Congress ought to be expressed to the USDA that we believe this program should have the kind of support we have always expected it to get from the USDA.

Mr. Chairman, that is why I offered the amendment, and I hope the House will give the amendment its approval.

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Chairman, I kind of wish the gentleman had left the amendment the other way, with the 25 percent in it, but I know there are only a certain number of things that can be accomplished with a small amount of money. Certainly this is one of the types of things that the Department of Agriculture, along with the Farmers Home Administration or through the Farmers Home Administration, can use to really do something to try to help accomplish the goal in this country of energy independence.

Besides that, as the gentleman has stated, we have got huge crops of corn and huge crops of wheat that right now could be put to another use for consumers, other than through animals for the meat or poultry for the eggs, and so forth. So, we ought to be encouraging the Secretary to move in this direction.

Mr. Chairman, I compliment the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN) on offering his amendment.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ALBOSTA) for his support.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I think the amendment recognizes that while we have not been hearing much about gasohol or alcohol fuels in the last year, the issue is not only not dead but it is going to spring back again in America as more and more motorists realize that they need an octane improver for their gasoline. We have taken the lead out of gasoline, and alcohol is an environmentally safe, productive octane improver.

The fact of the matter is, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ALBOSTA) noted, that we have enormous surpluses of corn and wheat that have been piling up on the ground all over America, and alcohol is a way of using those surpluses for productive purposes.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's amendment recognizes that alcohol, as well as all sorts of alternative fuels, is not dead and it will come back again in America.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN) for his comments.

It should be noted that we can develop an ethanol alcohol industry that extracts alcohol from a large number of farm products in this country and still retain much of the feedstock protein and other capabilities from the residue of the development. I think this is an awfully good approach.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the feedstocks I think human food is also a byproduct of the conversion process, and I am wondering about this. This is a good amendment and I support the amendment, but I am wondering if the gentleman would accept an amendment to his amendment to say, after the comma on line 5, after the words "or other fuel," "and or byproducts and that the Congress encourages," and so forth.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, let me say that I would be happy to accept that language.

Mr. MARLENEE. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, this would allow the loans to be made on that basis and not strictly for fuel, but in addition to that, they could utilize the byproducts for food or the processing of such food.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will suspend, the Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 of the Dorgan amendment after "other fuel" insert "and or byproducts."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana (Mr. MARLENEE) that the amendment be modified?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The language is incorporated in the amendment by modification.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the point that the gentleman from Montana makes is an important one. The feasibility of developing an ethanol alcohol industry relates in part to the ability to use byproducts from that industry, and I certainly think the amemdment makes good sense.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN) for his amendment.

The oil glut today is beginning to go away, and in just a few years we will probably have another oil squeeze. It is so seldom that we here in Congress anticipate future needs, and I certainly feel that we need to get on with the business of developing a synthetic fuels industry.

Mr. Chairman, I think this sense of Congress resolution certainly makes sense, and again I commend the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN).

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if I may conclude, we are choking on one of the record crops that we have had in this country with very low prices, and yet in North Dakota there are now six applications for developing ethanol alcohol plants to be built on the prairie to use agricultural products. I think it makes good sense for this country's agricultural future. It also makes inherent good sense as a step toward energy independence.

It is not a cure-all, but it is looking at the right kinds of things for this country's future. It is time that we started to do that, and I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. HUCKABY).

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to rise in opposition to the amendment because it is really a sense of Congress resolution and I do not think that fighting it would be worth while. But I do want to express a sense of caution about what we are doing here.

Let us understand the business and industry loan program from day one. The whole purpose of that program, since its inception, was to provide financial credit to industry in rural areas that did not happen to have the financial institutions in those rural areas that had the resources to provide the necessary financial capital for that industry. When we take a look at the appropriation level we are dealing with for the business and industry loan program in this country, we are looking at a total appropriation of about $300 million for business and industry loans. Let us just very simply divide that up among all the 50 States, and that comes out to about $6 million per State. That is not very much money.

When we start dividing that even further to the various industries presently in trouble in one of those states, we very quickly get an idea that there is not much money to go around at the present time to deal with the wide array of industry that we have in our total constituencies that presently is suffering and undergoing the same financial difficulties that the farmers are. When the farmers have depressed prices, they do not buy. When they do not buy, the machinery dealer does not sell and nobody else sells, and those people also run into some very difficult conditions.

For us to go into the legislative language and insist that USDA ought to be more aggressive in placing this money in alcohol fuels, as opposed to any of the other business and industry programs, I think, is a questionable policy.

It is questionable, No. 1, because of the limited resources, and it is also questionable because I think we are facing a second problem of misleading our farmers.

We talk about the glut of grain that we have in this country, and I am aware of that. But I think part of the reason we have a glut of grain in this country is because this Congress for too long has told the farmer to "produce, produce, produce, and we will simply export your food and you will have all kinds of financial success." That has not happened, and that is unrealistic. Now we are telling them to "keep on producing, and we will make alcohol fuels out of your grain and you will go into a financially successful area."

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman's point, and I do not minimize the need out there to give some help to some small businesses that are suffering. But I think the record is pretty clear from the Farmers Home Administration and from this administration when they came to testify before the Agriculture Committee that they are not very interested in or very happy with the business and industry I loans in the first instance. They have not used them a great deal. They have not been very excited about the appropriations or the authorization of money for them.

I am saying, since the business and industry program is authorized and funded by this Congress, let us at least do something for the future of this country that makes sense for agriculture. That is what the Farmers Home Administration Agency is all about, helping agriculture and helping rural America.

I cannot think of anything that would help this country more or help family farmers more than trying to develop seed money for an industry called the alcohol fuels industry because that would move us a step toward energy independence and also a step toward higher grain prices. That makes good sense to me. I am not suggesting that we bleed it off of funds that would otherwise be going to small business on Main Street. I think the record is clear that that is not what is happening today anyway.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's remarks, and I am not opposing the amendment. I am just expressing a word of caution about what we are doing here.

I was one of those Members who, when we started consideration of this bill in our subcommittee, was not intending to support the business and industry loan program because I thought we ought to restore it to the farmer's program, in the Farmers Home Administration, and yet as we went through the hearings and the testimony, it became obvious that in these economic times we need a business and industry program.

I am saying that if there are some reasons that came out of that testimony justifying this need, let us not today say that none of that testimony matters and we are going to expand and start a new program. That is my only caution.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield once again, my only point is that in the past this Congress has specifically designated a portion, 25 percent, of the business and industry loan program to be expended for the development of an alcohol fuels industry. We are moving away from that with no targeted money here at all.

I am saying that with a sense-of-Congress resolution we still care about that. We still think that alcohol fuels represent part of our agricultural future.

The major oil companies put ads in newspapers saying that "we don't think alcohol fuels means much and we don't think it is worth much," and right away I think it is something that we ought to start looking into.

So I think we ought to be expressing our interest to the USDA that we believe that this holds some hope for the future and we want to be aggressive in looking into it. That is all I am concerned with, and that is the intent of the amendment.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's remarks, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN), as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STANGELAND

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STANGELAND: On page 14, insert at the end of line 9 a dash and strike line 10 and insert in lieu thereof—

(1) inserting the following proviso immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence in subsection (a): "Provided, That the Secretary shall obtain at least three recommendations for each such county committee vacancy from the board of county commissioners in each county or area in the state (or the equivalent of such board of county commissioners in each State)"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof a new subsection (d) to read as follows:

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I am offering an amendment today that is designed to allow farmers some input into the nomination process for appointing Farmers Home Administration county committee members.

Current FmHA policy calls for the 3-year terms of the county committeemen to be staggered so that there is one term expiring each year. To fill the annual opening on the county committee, the Farmers Home county supervisor recommends three names to the State director who he feels are qualified for the position. The State director is then authorized to act on behalf of the Secretary of Agriculture in making the final selection.

My amendment would simply require that Farmers Home obtain at least three recommendations from the county board of commissioners, or its equivalent, when filling the open position on the county committee. The Secretary of Agriculture, or the State director as his designee, would still retain authority for making the final selection.

It is no secret that Farmers Home has been under increasing attack from farm groups and individual farmers in recent months. One common criticism heard from farmers is that they have no input into the selection of the FmHA county committee members. By transferring the nominating authority from the Farmers Home county supervisor to the county board of commissioners, or its local government equivalent in various States, farmers who are subject to the decisions made by the county committee will have some input into the appointment process through their own locally elected officials.

An added advantage is that while this amendment provides for democratic input from farmers in the appointment of FmHA county committeemen, there would be no added costs or excessive agency paperwork required as might be the case if an election were held instead.

Again, I want to emphasize that under my amendment final decisionmaking authority would continue to rest with the Secretary of Agriculture, or the FmHA State director acting as his designee. However, it would provide farmers with the opportunity to participate in the nomination process and allow them to have some input into the appointment of Farmers Home Administration county committee members.

□ 1345

I understand there are potential problems with this legislation in some areas. If those problems can be recited I will not push for this amendment at this time. But I would urge a colloquy so that we might discuss this with the Department of Agriculture to see if they can change the method of appointing or nominating people to serve on the Farmers Home Administration county committee.

If we cannot convince them to make some changes in these rules and regulations then it would be my intent to introduce this amendment as a piece of legislation in the next session of Congress.

If there is anyone that would care to comment on this amendment I would be most happy to try to respond to questions.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANGELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. We have discussed this before as we did in subcommittee to some extent. I assure the gentleman that if he wants this, too, we will have hearings without doubt next year on the Farmers Home Administration. We will make this one of the necessary items to be discussed.

I share some of the problems with the gentleman on this. I do not really have the answer to it. I do not know just exactly where we should go because of the wording the gentleman has. So many people, the commissioners come from the urban areas of some of these counties and I do not know if that is the answer or not. But I will certainly be glad to confer with the gentleman and members of the subcommittee and also the USDA and see what we should come up with.

Mr. STANGELAND. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. STANGELAND) has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. STANGELAND was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. STANGELAND. I understand that local government units may be structured differently in different parts of the country from what they are in mine.

My purpose in offering this amendment is as an option and an alternative to election. If we are going to give a county Farmers Home Administration committee some authority for management assistance to the county director, then I think to elect them would run the risk of electing people to this board who would not have that management expertise or ability to advise and counsel.

So I would urge and appreciate the assurance of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) that we have hearings and I would hope that we could talk to the Department about this in the meantime.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, (Mr. BROWN of California) having assumed the chair, Mr. PEASE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5831) to provide lending limits for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985 for programs under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, pursuant to House Resolution 509, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, adopted by the Committee of the Whole. If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 372, nays 39, not voting 21, as follows:

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois changed her vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to provide lending limits for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO HAVE UNTIL 5 P.M., FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1982, TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 6946, THE FALSE IDENTIFICATION ACT OF 1982

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until 5 p.m., Friday, September 10, 1982, to file a report on H.R. 6946, the False Identification Act of 1982.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO FILE PRIVILEGED REPORT ON AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1983

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Apporopriations may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on a bill making appropriations for agriculture, rural development, and related agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and for other purposes.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska reserved all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO FILE PRIVILEGED REPORT ON LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATION BILL, 1983

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on a bill making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURGENER reserved all points order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1982—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the veto message of the President of the United States on the bill (H.R. 6863) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) is recognized for 1 hour.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the veto message of the President to the bill (H.R. 6863) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes, and that I may include extraneous and tabular matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) for purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker as we all realize, under present conditions—those that have existed for the last year and a half—we have the House with a majority of one party, the Senate with a majority of another party, and, of course, the President, the head of the executive branch.

As we come here today, I have no complaint about the use of the veto, because that is clearly within the rights of the executive branch. By the same token, however, for our system of government to work, there must be cooperation between the three branches of Government. Otherwise, as I have pointed out before, it is like the old Russian chariot with three horses; if we do not pull together, we do not get anywhere.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to point out it is my opinion that the Congress, particularly the House of Representatives, and our Committee on Appropriations, which deals with this bill, has leaned over backward trying to cooperate with the executive branch. I say for the record the Committee on Appropriations through the years has been below the budget 37 out of 39 times. That is the budget recommended by our President.

I was senior cochairman of the study group that led to the Budget Act and the establishment of the Budget Committee. That came about largely because 58 percent of the spending by the Government was bypassing the Committee on Appropriations, its annual review, and its actions and recommendations to the Congress.

Last year, at the request of the President and due to the circumstances which we faced, we were asked to rescind funds previously appropriated by some $15.1 billion. The committee recommended, and the Congress went along with, rescinding $14.3 billion of that total. We were also asked to go along with budget amendments carrying an additional 10-percent cut for the 1982 fiscal year. We went along with that. Last November, we had a request for a further reduction for 1982, and the Congress went along again. Colleagues on both sides of the aisle signed that agreement and that in turn was vetoed. Again the President was acting within the powers and the rights of the executive branch.

As we come to the Members today, I want to point out two or three things to the House that I think are significant. In the first place, may I say that the vetoed bill is $1.9 billion below the budget request. What we have done, and what the committee did do in the bill, is we took care of domestic programs. Funds are included for education programs and jobs for the aged and many other things that I think are vital. In addition, we did reduce some spending in the military. We asserted congressional priorities.

Some of the Members will recall when Mr. Weidenbaum, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, resigned he said the benefits of our cuts were not being felt because the spending was being done in another area. The unprecedented cuts in civilian programs have been offset by a rapid expansion of military outlays, according to Mr. Weidenbaum.

Do the Members realize that in the last 25 years, through the defense appropriations bill, we have spent $2.137 trillion? But under the Pesident's proposals, we are asked to spend $1.7 trillion in the next 5 years. I say here candidly, if conditions continue to deteriorate, in 3 years we will not have any money for anything else, because the money will all have been committed to military contracts.

May I say, too, at the end of fiscal year 1983, it is estimated that there will be an unexpended balance of $142 billion for the Defense Department. May I also point out that the reduction of approximately $2 billion from the President's requests for the Defense Department should be compared with the $200 billion which has already been appropriated this fiscal year.

I understand the need to carry over some money. With the situation being as it is, however, when they have a $142 billion expected carryover—certainly to cut a very small part of 1 percent from that amount, when it will not be spent the next year, in order to take care of these domestic programs that we have facing us, for which there is a need is a valid congressional action.

I believe in a balanced budget. No one has talked more about a balanced budget or worked harder for it. Mr. Speaker, certainly we need to have a balanced budget. We need interest rates to be brought down so we can have some stability in our Government.

One says, "What have we done about it?" I asked the General Accounting Office on April 26 to make a review of the Federal Reserve System. They have been doing that. Their final report just came in. During the period they have studied the Federal Reserve, we have had three reductions in interest rates. What else have we done? We reported out of our Committee on Appropriations a jobs bill that creates productive jobs instead of funding unemployment compensation.

We all believe in a balanced budget; but we are going to have to balance that budget at a level that carries on those things essential to our well being. We are going to have to protect the land. We will have to protect the highways. We will have to protect the things essential to us carrying on our economy. May I say we better give a thought to what level we balance the budget at. I recall some years ago somebody said Ethiopia is the only country in the world with a balanced budget. They did not owe a dollar and did not have one either. So it is just as essential that we carry on the necessary things as it is that we cut out that which is unnecessary.

I do not believe in the history of this Nation any Congress or any committee has cooperated more than we have here. Let me point out to the Members, in a country like ours, with a Constitution like ours, with three equal, independent branches of Government, under the Constitution, the Congress cannot be silent at a time like this. I believe that the President should propose and the Congress should dispose.

I say here and now, we need a President who will hold spending down. The overall amount is largely up to the President; what it is for specifically is the responsibility of this Congress.

I say to the Members that the responsibility is up to this legislative body to protect the rights of the people, the right of the Congress to say what for.

I say to the Members in overriding this budget, it is not a case of who wins, the Executive or the Congress. It is a case of whether we protect and live up to our responsibility of looking after the people's branch. Any time we sacrifice something given to us in the Constitution, to that degree we let the people down. When they cramp our style as authorized and as obligated as we are under our rules, you have taken rights away from the people.

So this is not said in anger or ill feeling. It is the responsibility of the President to veto when he sees fit. I do say it is our obligation to see that the Congress retains the right to say what for, and the President's recommendations should be how much.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. PERKINS) and I have said this before: Some of the people that go along with all those cuts in domestic programs think the reductions are being applied to the debt. My friend knows this is not the case. It is being spent for more military spending.

I tell the Members more and more there is so much money, and the Defense Department has not been tight in the handling of it. I think one reads about that every day. For example, it took 11 years to complete the Trident submarine. I say to the Members that this slight reduction of the amount requested by the Defense Department is necessary so that we maintain these domestic programs so essential to our welfare.

I leave the Members with one thing to keep in mind, those who believe in defense—and we all do. A strong national defense is based on a sound economy, public support, and military capability and readiness, perhaps in equal amounts.

I say to the Members: It is just as important we keep the economy as strong as any part of defense. I say to the Members when the Congress took it upon itself to say what for, while cutting the budget $2.7 billion in certain areas we increased others by approximately $900 million. I say we acted wisely. I think we should insist on taking care of the people's programs and the things essential to our economy as best we can.

This bill is below the President's request considerably. It is within the totals of the budget resolution for fiscal year 1982 for both budget authority and outlays. I urge my colleagues to override the President's veto of this legislation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I believe the President was poorly served by those who counseled him to veto this supplemental appropriations measure.

While I am not generally numbered among his allies, I urge my colleagues to help him retrieve that unfortunate error and vote to override his veto.

It takes a mind more clever than honest to argue that this bill "busts" the budget. How in the name of sense can he argue in paragraph 4 of the veto message that the bill provides an unacceptable total of $918 million in domestic spending increases, and in paragraph 6 complain that Congress gave him only a half billion dollars of the $2.6 billion he had asked for defense program supplementals?

Is there some mathematical magic by which dollars spent for domestic programs bust the budget, while those spent for military programs do not?

The budget estimates of new obligational authority for fiscal year 1982 for the activities funded by the supplemental amount to $16.3 billion. The conference committee recommended $14.5 billion—more than $1.7 below the budget authority.

That is hardly "budget busting" legislation, and the people who advise the President on this kind of business know it.

The conference report had strong bipartisan backing in both Senate and House. It was not considered by the distinguished chairmen and ranking minority members of either Appropriations Committee to be a partisan vehicle. And it was not voted upon on that basis.

This veto has produced a needless confusion and disruption of the Government, and has brought about a pointless confrontation between the President and the Congress.

The major components of the supplemental have to do with pay increases that are obligator on the part of the Government. It contains $4.4 billion for increases in military pay costs in the Department of Defense alone. This is the greatest single item in the bill.

I am especially concerned by the antipathy this administration has shown for the programs that benefit the poor and the disabled and disadvantaged. Those programs are virtually singled out by the veto message which speaks of "unrequested and unwarranted increases in domestic spending programs."

Is it "unwarranted" for this Congress to appropriate $210.6 million for employment of older Americans under the community service employment program, at a time when unemployment among older people is at or near an alltime high?

Is it "unwarranted" to appropriate $148 million for added assistance to local school districts in meeting the special needs of educationally disadvantaged children under the title I program of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act?

Is it "unwarranted" to put in an additional $2.5 million for vocational education assistance at a time when the national employment rate is running at its highest level since the Great Depression?

Is it "unwarranted" to appropriate another $140 million for the Pell grants that enable children of poor families to go to college at a time when educational and technological skills are so needed?

And is it "unwarranted" to appropriate $26.5 million more funds for the education of handicapped children? That is not a message I want to send to those children, and to their parents.

At a more personal level, am I supposed to tell the people of the Tug and Levisa Valleys of the Big Sandy River in my district that it is "unwarranted" to spend money to save their lives and homes and businesses from the floods that roar down those hollows with tragic regularity?

If that is the message the President and his advisers want to send to those people of Appalachia, then he can deliver it himself—preferably on a dark midnight when the torrents come and the streams rise out of their banks and engulf the little homes of people who have to run up the hillsides in their night clothes to escape being washed away.

I am not going to say to those people that flood control is an "uwarranted" expenditure, and I do not believe this House wants to tell them that, either.

I submit that scaring thousands of loyal and hardworking Government employees to death with the threat of unpaid furloughs is not a reasonable or decent way to run this Government. Nor does the threat of payless paydays for the military do much to improve the morale of our armed services.

I also submit that the people who are benefited by the supplemental appropriations contained in this bill are not the enemies of fiscal solvency. Even if one could say that the $918 million complained of by the President as "unwarranted," it is pocket change compared with the $155 billion budget deficit the President himself has embraced for the fiscal year beginning next month.

Let us bail the President out of his mess by overriding his veto of this supplemental appropriations bill and get on with the business of legislating for a sorely troubled country.

□ 1430

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my distinguished leader, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL).

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I have heard all of the arguments for overriding the veto, and they are unconvincing.

This is not a terribly bad bill compared with some appropriations bills I have seen around here.

Our distinguished majority leader turned newspaper columnist was correct when he wrote that this bill is technically under the budget. Technically, we do not have to sustain this veto to comply with our budget. Technically, we can sit back and say what is all the fuss about?

The problem is that the growth in Government spending and the high deficits we face are not mere technicalities.

A supplemental appropriation bill is supposed to do no more than make up for deficiencies in existing appropriations. This supplemental, like most others in recent years, goes far beyond that. It adds new legislative language; it expands programs and provides additional funding—far more than what is essential.

I will have to admit that in this bill is a $3 million item to replace an antiquated railroad bridge in my district, but I cannot allow that project to sway my judgment on a $14 billion bill that our President says is too much to spend at this time.

And I am not suggesting that we restore the defense cuts proposed in this supplemental. It is my understanding that if we sustain this veto, the President can live with the reduced defense figures that have been recommended. Defense spending is not an issue here. Nor is the issue cutting out programs or cutting out essential services.

The title V older Americans employment program, for example, is not threatened. The media tried to light that fire but such preying on the emotions of people is unfounded.

The President called me personally this afternoon to assure us of his support for this program.

What we are talking about here is forward funding for the program after September 30. If the money is not included in the supplemental, as I feel it should be, it will be included in the regular 1983 Labor-HHS appropriations bill or in the continuing resolution.

It is not my intention to see any disruption in that program, and I have told the administration that a revised bill will have to include that item.

Nor is the issue here that of providing additional funding to maintain vital services.

It is not absolutely essential to increase urban mass transit funding by 1 percent right now. Nor is there an emergency requiring more money in the interstate transfer program.

Will student aid programs fall flat on their face if we do not increase Pell grants by $56 per student? Of course not.

Is there some emergency that requires us to maintain higher levels of employment in the Department of Energy? Of course not.

Is it essential to spend $148 million in ESEA title I to resolve an argument over census figures? Of course not.

There are Members who may prefer all of these add-ons. I am sure the President would prefer the additional money for defense procurement. But doing everything we would like is not good economics.

The President is not going to get everything he wants, and we must not allow ourselves to dig deeper into the pockets of American taxpayers for what we want. The issue here is whether we stay on course or turn back.

A substantial percentage of the domestic increase in this bill represents restoration of the reductions made in last year's continuing resolution. You remember how hard we worked to achieve an extra billion or two in savings—how we sweated over the weekend and into the late hours of the evening to put together a continuing resolution that met our responsibility to bring down the deficit.

We should not wipe out that effort.

We are not just sustaining a Presidential veto, we are sustaining the momentum of the monumental task we set out to accomplish 20 months ago. If we lose that momentum, we lose the confidence of the American people and the confidence of those in the marketplace who are just beginning to believe we will back up our rhetoric with touch decisions and decisive action.

I would urge Members to vote "no" on the motion to override the President's veto of this supplemental appropriation bill.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TRIBLE).

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. Speaker, at a time of burgeoning budget deficits, I do not believe we should add nearly $1 billion in spending not requested by the President.

Since the bill passed the House on July 29, revised estimates have revealed ominous implications for the budget in fiscal 1983. The deficit is now estimated to reach an unacceptably high $155 billion—and this bill would add nearly $655 million to the deficit.

This bill would constitute a substantial and unwarranted addition to the $760 million contained in already enacted supplemental appropriations.

We must draw the line.

My vote to sustain this veto is a vote to curtail Federal spending; it is not a vote for the additional defense funding requested by the administration.

The supplemental request for defense lacked merit, and I support the committee's reductions. Moneys cut from defense should be used to reduce the deficit—and for that purpose only.

In 1980, Virginians voted to make America better. They rejected the tax-and-tax, spend-and-spend policies of the past.

We have made progress. We have reduced interest rates. We have cut taxes. And we have cut the growth of Government spending. We must continue this effort.

That is why I am voting to sustain the veto.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to by good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of President Reagan's veto and do so with the full knowledge, if I can consult with my ranking Republican member, that we are assured that either in the continuing resolution and/or any subsequent supplemental that title V for the senior citizens will be preserved; is that correct?

Mr. CONTE. Well, if the gentleman will yield, I hope so. I have a letter here, though, on July 23 from the White House telling me they were opposed to this program and that they were going to turn this program over to CETA. I will have more to say about that when I speak.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Well, my understanding is that our leadership, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL), and the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT), have received absolute assurances that this program will continue to be funded and will be covered either in a continuing resolution or with the guidance of the gentleman from Massachusetts, another supplemental; is that not correct? We know the gentleman from Massachusetts is supportive of it.

Mr. CONTE. Oh, definitely, I am 100 percent for it.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the President is correct in stating that Congress has fallen back on its responsibility to stop spending over what we have originally appropriated.

I wish to say to my colleagues that I have always felt that supplemental appropriations were just that, above and beyond what the House had already committed to spend. We are only kidding the public when we try to lead them to believe that these programs will be drastically cut if we do not override this veto. That is just not true. A supplemental bill such as this provides billions of dollars.

For instance, the handicapped and disadvantaged will have well over $4 billion that we have already appropriated. In this supplemental I think there is $138 million additional spending; so we are not tromping on the disadvantaged or the handicapped if we support this veto.

That just is not true. As an example let me review for my colleagues just one area of substantial add-on spending in health programs contained in this bill.

The bill provides add-on money for three health program areas—health resources, Indian health facilities, and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration—that have already been fully funded, and operated throughout the fiscal year, at a $1.1 billion level.

None of these funds are needed to cover agency costs before the end of the year; year-end payroll and related costs will be covered by the pay supplementals provided elsewhere in the bill.

Providing new program funds of this magnitude—$28 million—will force the Department of Health and Human Services to conduct a wasteful year-end spending operation in the last 20 days of the fiscal year.

If program levels for fiscal year 1983 need to be adjusted for changing circumstances, these can be accommodated by the $27.8 billion in discretionary spending authority provided to the Labor/HHS/Education Appropriations Subcommittee under the budget resolution for fiscal year 1983.

I say to my colleagues that I think we make a mistake when we try to mislead the public into believing that when we turn down a supplemental such as this—which is $14 billion in total costs, substantially over what we have originally appropriated—that we mislead the public into believing that programs will be drastically cut back. That just is not true.

So I will support the President's veto, because I think he is correct in what he has done.

Now I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California, a member of the Budget Committee, who I know is trying to keep from spending unnecessarily.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK).

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

In advance, I will associate myself with the gentleman's remarks in support of the override attempt.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to join me in voting to override the President's veto of H.R. 6863, the $14.2 billion supplemental appropriations measure. I disagree with the President's assertion that H.R. 6863 would bust the budget by nearly $1 billion. On the contrary, I have been told by the Congressional Budget Office that the supplemental is $3.2 billion less in budget authority than the budget ceiling established in the revised fiscal year 1982 budget resolution and $1.1 billion less in outlays.

What is more, this supplemental appropriations measure is not only below the Reagan budget enacted by Congress, it is also below the supplemental amount requested by the President himself. H.R. 6863 is $1.5 billion less than the President's request in budget authority and $1.3 billion less than his request in outlays. Why then I ask has the President decided to veto this measure? Simply stated, I believe the President has confused his spending priorities and the veto is an attempt by the Executive to force Congress to accept these questionable priorities.

President Reagan vetoed H.R. 6863 because it appropriated funds for education, jobs for older Americans and other domestic programs while reducing his request for an additional increase in military spending. Of the $2.6 billion requested for military purposes, about $2 billion was either previously denied by Congress or was intended to start new military programs. Despite the fact that Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger argued against a veto, the President contended the requested defense money was necessary.

In order to secure his increase in defense spending, the President is asking Congress to sustain his veto and oppose $211 million for jobs for older Americans, $217 million for student financial assistance, $148 million for compensatory education for the disadvantaged, $112.5 million for Federal highways, $26.5 million for handicapped education, $37 million for urban mass transportation, $39 million for the U.S. Postal Service, $20 million for advances to the unemployment trust fund, $11.5 million for preventitive health services, $10 million for alcohol, drug abuse and mental health, and $11 million for the Railroad Retirement Board.

At a time when we have already made significant cuts in discretionary domestic spending and provided for real defense increases unmatched in our history during peacetime, I find it ironic that the President would veto a measure which falls well within his budget parameters on the grounds that a nonessential defense increase should be funded at the expense of domestic programs which have already borne their fair share of budget cuts. I, for one, cannot and will not support the President in his veto of this supplemental appropriation. I urge my colleagues to join with me in voting to override the veto and, in so doing, sending a message to the White House voicing our consternation over the spending priorities being pursued by the Executive.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLOMON).

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the supplemental budget in its present form. Mr. Speaker I voted against the recent tax increase legislation because I was concerned that this greedy Congress would not use the additional $98 billion in new revenues to reduce the deficit but would try to spend every nickel of it resulting in a huge tax increase and no smaller deficit. Mr. Speaker, this bill before us justifies those concerns because it is more than 1 billion over the budget enacted earlier in the year and it is only the beginning of the budget busting bills due to come before us in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the same supplemental that many of us voted for when the bill left this House some weeks ago. There are many changes such as the $1 billion pork barrel water project in Tug Fork, W. Va., which was secreted into the bill during the conference between the House and the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, one of the worthwhile programs contained in this supplemental is title V, Older Americans Act, providing continued funding for the Senior Aid or Green Thumb program. This is an excellent program that actually spends money to save money in the long run. I have been assured by the White House that regardless of whether this bill goes down these funds will be included in a cleared up version of a smaller supplemental and President Reagan guaranteed the continued funding of this program in his call to Minority Leader BOB MICHEL earlier today.

With that guarantee, I am going to vote to sustain the President's veto in hope that we can come back with a supplemental that is void of all the "pork," and within the budget that we all pledged to support just a few weeks ago. If we do this consistently with this and all future bills, we will be doing the American people a favor because it is the only way we will ever get a handle on higher and higher deficits and it is the only way we will ever get interest rates down to an acceptable level, the one major ingredient needed to reduce unemployment and get our economy rolling again.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), a member of the committee.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is now before the House of Representatives is $1.9 billion under the President's request.

The amount pertaining to the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, is $960 million less than the subcommittee's allocation under the Gramm-Latta budget resolution which the Congress adopted for 1982.

We are $960 million under the congressional budget for fiscal year 1982, including all of the supplemental appropriations that have come before this body.

In our section, Mr. Speaker, we have about 15 major items that are of great concern to every Member in this House. We have the community services employment for older Americans in the bill, $210,572,000. This would continue this program for 54,000 community service jobs for the elderly through June 30 of next year.

There is $217 million for financial assistance to low-income college students and other matters that I will point out before I finish, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a copy of a letter from the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. David Stockman. I recall when Dave Stockman served in this House and I considered him one of the able Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, a portion of this letter reads as follows:

> The reason for the administration's objection to including the fiscal year 1983 program funds in the fiscal year 1982 supplemental is that it is a pure and simple gimmick designed to prevent funds provided for this program from being counted under the 302(b) appropriation ceiling for fiscal year 1983 in the Labor, Health and Human Services bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that statement is wholly inaccurate, and Dave Stockman knows it.

My friend, the ranking minority member on the Appropriations Committee, will tell you why we put this money in this bill. Unless this older Americans money goes in the supplemental bill that is now before the House, there will be no jobs, there will be no employment of the 54,000 Americans after October 1. The Older Americans Act passed by this Congress provided for forward funding. We have to have forward funding. The funding cannot take effect until July 1 of each year. This means that funds appropriated in the 1983 bill could not be obligated until next July. The program would have to shut down since there is no funding in place for the period from October 1 to June 30. The funds in this supplemental bill are to cover that period.

Furthermore, this program has been forward-funded in this manner since it began in the midseventies, and the budget resolution certainly takes account of this. The money in the 1983 bill will fund the program from July 1, 1983, to June 30, 1984. This has been the practice for years. This is not a "gimmick" or a "back door attempt to excape the discipline of the budget process" as Mr. Stockman would have you believe. That is absolutely false and I wanted the Members to know it.

It is absolutely untrue to say, as the letter does, that "the President's veto of the supplemental bill will have absolutely no effect on the continuation of this program next year." We understand that layoff notices have already gone out to these workers.

The administration proposed to eliminate this program in the 1983 budget. We have never been able to figure out why.

Now, in our regular bill for 1982, Mr. Speaker, we placed in the House bill $277 million.

□ 1445

On the other side, in the other body, they cut that amount back to $66 million. That is why we are here today with this supplemental. We must restore the full amount required for the program to operate at the current level from October 1, 1982, through June 30, 1983, in accordance with the authorizing legislation

Mr. Speaker, we have a number of other major matters in this bill that are of great importance to this House: $26.5 million for additional funds for education for the handicapped; $148 million in this bill for compensatory education of the disadvantaged children; $11.5 million here for preventive health services, and $6 million of that is for childhood immunization, the balance being for the control of venereal diseases and tuberculosis; $40 million for college housing loans; $11 million for railroad retirement dual benefits; $10 million for research on alcoholism, drug abuse, and mental health; $10 million for aid for developing institutions of higher education; and $11 million for school assistance in federally affected areas, as well as important provisions related to the payment of Federal supplemental unemployment benefits.

I hope the House of Representatives votes to override this veto.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to our distinguished whip, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT).

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to remember that this is a supplemental appropriations bill, and that means an add-on, an addition, an increase, any way you cut it.

Now, it is beyond me to explain why we always have two or three supplementals every year. I am sure there are good reasons for it. I am not being critical of the members of the Appropriations Committee or the administration, because the administration requested a lot of these supplementals. But remember, this is a supplemental, which means more spending.

Neither should we forget that this bill is not chicken feed. There are $14 billion in supplemental requests in this bill. What we are trying to save is a few hundred million dollars, maybe $700 million, maybe $800 million, maybe as much as $1 billion.

Is that not a worthwhile effort? We have been talking about doing it all year.

With regard to title V, the older Americans employment program, I support that program. We all support that program. I want to tell you right now that we are going to support the full $211 million of forward funding in the next supplemental when this veto is sustained and I—and the minority leader—have been assured that the administration is going to go along with that.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN. Telexes have been sent out today by the Office of Special Targeted Programs of the Department of Labor. I think this is very germane, following the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky. The beginning of the Telex says that it is directed to all sponsors of title V employment for senior citizens:

You are hereby authorized a 90-day no cost extension and to begin planning for a fiscal year 1983 program at a level consistent with your 1982 activity. While his authorization cannot serve as a fiscal year 1983 funding commitment, it does allow the use of your remaining 1982 funds for continuation of the program. As you know, the Congress has not appropriated funds for the SCSEP at this point. Upon completion of appropriation action by the Congress, we will provide appropriate funding commitments and associated instructions. However, the information behind the budget resolution indicates congressional intent that this program will be continued. This TWX is based on the assumption that Congress will carry out that intent.

DAVID T. COPENHAFER,
Acting Director, Office of Special Targeted Programs.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman for those comments.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LOTT. If the gentlewoman will give me just a moment to complete my statement. I have only 3 minutes, and I know that there are a lot of people who would like to be yielded to and I will be glad to do that in a moment.

But first, there are two other points I would like to make. The next one is on defense.

As I understand it, the next supplemental will contain the same amount for defense as is in this bill. The administration is not going to come back and say we have to put the full $2 billion for defense in the supplemental even though, clearly, they would like to have it. So that issue is not going to be there. Those of us who are cheap hawks or just plain hawks, there is a recognition that for defense the additional money will not be in there.

Just a final point, and I then want to yield to a couple of my colleagues.

Everything we have been doing this year so far has been show and tell, show and tell, so we could go home and say, "Hey, we are cutting back. We are getting the budget under control." That is what we do in the budget resolution. That is what we do in authorization bills, but this is an appropriations bill, when we get down to the real thing; whether or not we are going to spend more and more money or not.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that when we are discussing whether this bill busts the budget or not, that the budget is already busted. The deficit is $68 billion over the initial budget for fiscal year 1982, and $47 billion over budget for fiscal year 1983.

The question is: Are we going to make it $918 million higher? I say no. Let us sustain this veto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT) has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute. I do so in order to correct some wrong impressions that have been left.

The President requested $16.1 billion in supplemental funding and the Congress reduced these requests by $1.9 billion. So this bill by no means exceeds the budget but is $1.9 billion below the budget. The President objects to the fact that Congress wants to put the funds in different programs then where he wants to put them.

Involved here is whether you want to cut the bill below the budget requests by $1.9 billion from other program areas and save the domestic programs, as we do, or let the President tell you what to do in the bill. May I say, that out of the $16.1 billion requested by the President about $12 billion is mandatory in nature. The Congress has very little control over these items. The Budget Act was supposed to place more of the Federal budget under the annual review process and correct this situation but that has yet to be realized.

The Congress has a wonderful track record on this supplemental bill. We are under the budget by $1.9 billion. We are helping the President save money, and the gentleman from Texas as well.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. KEMP).

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, this is a difficult position for a lot of us today on the floor. Many of us who supported this supplemental did so in good faith. We did it after working out a compromise, particularly on the President's Caribbean/Central American Initiative so vital to our foreign policy objectives in this hemisphere.

Let me say this is not the end of the process. I will support sustaining the President's veto, but it does not mean that these worthwhile programs will not receive additional funding. We will still have a chance for compromise. We will still have a chance to save money while providing for the legitimate funding requirements. The entire legislative process is one of compromise. We need a little more work on this bill to reach an agreement but we will do so—an agreement that will provide for Pell grants, for education for the disadvantaged and handicapped, for unemployment benefit administration, for health programs and, most importantly of all, for the title V senior citizen employment program which the House has so overwhelmingly supported. We will reach agreement on these programs and save some money in the process for the taxpayer.

I stress to my colleagues that a compromise will be reached because I fear that in the heat of the debate we may be tempted to take measure which we will later regret deeply. I am speaking here of President Reagan's Caribbean/Central American Initiative.

The House supported this initiative as an amendment to the conference report by a vote of 281 to 129—a strong showing of bipartisan support. Indeed, this initiative was a part of a package of economic and security assistance fashioned by Congressmen LONG, MCHUGH, OBEY, GRAY, WILSON, and DIXON on this side of the aisle and Congressmen CONTE, EDWARDS, LIVINGSTON, LEWIS, and PORTER on our side. All political persuasions, all regions of the Nation were included.

The common ground which we reached was a belief that American foreign policy should display a marked concern for the economic and security interests of our neighbors in this hemisphere. The reiteration of the Monroe Doctine which this bill contained must be supported by the financial, industrial, and intellectual resources of our Nation. I believe that our agreement was based on a very correct evaluation of the economic and military situation in Latin America and President Reagan is to be commended for this Marshall-aid-type strategy for this hemisphere.

The financial crisis which is now engulfing Central and South America and the Caribbean makes it imperative that we take action to protect the most vulnerable nations. As we all know, Mexico is in need of immediate assistance. Even without congressional action, we have sent $1 billion in advanced oil payments and have entered the foreign exchange markets to help stabilize the peso. This assistance we provided to a relatively strong developing nation with abundant oil reserves and a record of high real growth. Mexico is so vital to this Nation that we cannot afford to let them down.

In the near future we may be called upon to assist other neighbors and friends in the region during this time of crisis in foreign exchange. I do not believe that we will or should turn them down.

At the same time we simply cannot turn our backs on our smaller, most vulnerable neighbors. The nations of Central America and the Caribbean depend on our support and friendship. I might add that friendship on their part has been constant in the face of vascillating American policies over the past three decades. We cannot again fail to provide the support urgently needed.

When we begin writing a new supplemental, I intend to offer an amendment to restore the Caribbean/Central American Initiative and the security assistance package which accompanied it. This total package was not part of the controversy surrounding the President's veto. It was recognized by all parties as a truly emergency measure. Events since the vote have shown this to be a correct decision.

As I vote for sustaining this veto, I just want to announce that the vote today is not the end of the process. We will meet again in the Appropriations Committee to work out a new compromise. That product will incorporate the criticisms of the President and the wishes of the Congress. I urge my colleagues to approach this veto in a spirit of compromise and as a part of a process delicately designed to provide for the welfare of the Nation.

Before my time has expired I just want to make reference of the fact that I particularly appreciated the gentleman who is now standing up and wants me to yield—and I will yield to him and thank him for his support and spirit of compromise in helping bring forth the President's Caribbean Basin Initiative.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KEMP. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman well knows, after a great deal of hard work, late-night wrangling, we came out with a Caribbean Basin Initiative plus the other money that the President wanted for supplemental overseas military aid, which was half of what the President asked.

Now, that was substantial. I gather that the President is very much disturbed that we cut that in half. Now, is the gentleman proposing then that we sustain this veto?

Mr. KEMP. In the spirit expressed above, that is what I propose.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. And does the gentleman——

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further. I have only 30 seconds.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. I understand why the gentleman does not want me to talk any longer.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, may we have order? I am not shutting off the chairman, Mr. Speaker, I have just 25 seconds left, and I just wanted to have a chance to answer the question.

It is simply this as I said before, that this is not the end of the process. We are going to go back in the committee. We are still able to come up with a supplemental that will include the projects and programs mentioned on the floor and supported by both sides of the aisle.

I just wanted everyone to know that I think the Caribbean Basin Initiative is so important and the foreign exchange crisis in Latin America and on our borders is so critical that I just plan to try to help resurrect the Caribbean Basin Initiative if the veto is sustained.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Does the gentleman want to take money away from domestic programs in order to resurrect?

Mr. KEMP. The answer is "Yes."

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. YATES), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Interior of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Mississippi, and the gentleman from California who look to the passage of the older Americans program at some time in the future are deluding themselves and deluding the country when they say they are willing to accept the promise of the White House that that program will be taken care of. The facts are directly to the contrary.

The letter read by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), indicated the White House was opposed to the program in July. Subsequently, the President vetoed the older Americans program in the urgent supplemental bill; now he vetoes this bill because this program is in it. Now we are supposed to accept the President's assurance that this program will be approved at some time in the future.

The fact is that the President does not want this program. He insists upon defense, defense, and more defense. He refuses to agree to any kind of programs which provide funds for the needs of senior citizens of this country, for the older Americans, for people who are in need of health, education, food, and the other programs for which this bill is intended. The defense program is overfunded now. As the gentleman from Mississippi stated the military now has $143 billion which has not been obligated.

Mr. Speaker, it is time President Reagan realized the people of this country do have problems which need Government help. Our older citizens need help. They need the community services program which provides needed constructive employment for them.

This bill is needed for the students of this country so that they may complete their education. They should have the funds for Pell grants which this bill provides.

There are other programs in this bill which should be sustained. There is no valid reason the President has advanced for his veto. It is not a budget busting bill as he has charged. It is almost $2 billion below the amount he himself requested from the Congress.

I shall vote to override President Reagan's veto of this bill.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. HAGEDORN).

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of our President and I want to applaud him for his courageous action in vetoeing this spending bill. If we do not support our President, we are sending a clearcut signal to those Members currently working on 1983 appropriations to spend and spend again.

History does indeed repeat itself. Congress did this same thing to Gerald Ford in 1976. We overloaded appropriations bills, forcing President Ford to veto, making him the bad guy. I think the American people are smarter than that. It should be congressional leaders who take the lead in this difficult area and I believe we are wrong to force this decision, and subsequent blame, upon President Reagan.

All four significant areas funded by this bill in excess are worthy but all four areas are funded at levels beyond what we can afford. We are busting our own budget resolution. Our economy is finally showing a little life. Do we want to kill the beginnings of growth which we have seen in recent weeks?

If there is one of you that did not talk about Government spending and the effect it is having on our economy during your recent visit home, then you can go right ahead and override. I know that I talked about it a great deal—to farmers, small businesses, and individuals who had a glimmer of hope that interest rates were responding. They believed, that perhaps, just maybe, Congress was on the right track for once. I cannot vote to override and damper that optimism; $1 billion to us is pittance. We deal in vast numbers daily. However, $41 billion is not so small and we are already $41 billion over target on the $695 billion we passed in the fiscal year 1982 budget resolution; $1 billion is a beginning.

We can begin to show that we did indeed pass those budget resolutions in earnest or we can begin to bellyflop and slip back in all that money we struggled to remove.

Almost half of the domestic spending add-ons in this supplemental were vetoed by President Reagan earlier this year in an urgent supplemental. We sustained that veto. We should sustain this veto also.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN).

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to commend my colleagues' attention to an article that appeared in the Los Angeles Times of Monday, September 6, by Mr. Bowman Cutter, a senior official at the Office of Management and Budget during the Carter administration. The article appeared in the Los Angeles Times. It was entitled "Reagan's Veto Was Right—It's Part of the System."

He points out, as one of the prior speakers just mentioned, that the veto "does not finish an issue; Washington does not work that way." He goes on to say: "Those of us who have been there know only too well that nothing finishes an issue. Once an issue is on the public agenda, it remains."

A lot of what we are hearing is pure rhetoric. We say this program is going to go down unless we pass this particular instrument that is before us. That is not true. This is part of a very good process, which has worked well so far.

We have only had two attempts at working out the supplemental. They have not worked. So what happens now? We have shown that we do not want the total amount of defense that the President wants. He now agrees that he will accept the defense cuts we have asked for. He is asking that we accept some of the domestic cuts that he wants. That is in the spirit of compromise. It gets us closer to what the people are saying back home. They are saying "Bring down that spending." Now, there are a lot of things we would like to have money spent on. We know we do not have all that money, so try to do what the people back home are asking us to do, bring us back within our own means.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder that people in this country are confused. Last December when we passed a continuing resolution, we were told, "Leave out the older Americans $210 million and the administration will approve, including it in the next bill."

The next bill was requested in February but they did not request the money needed to fund employment for older Americans. But the President requested items that we told him ought to have been in the bill in December which he vetoed because they were included. But he did not include money for older Americans. We put the money in but then that bill was vetoed. At that time, they said sustain the veto and we will approve money for older Americans in the next one. The veto was sustained.

Here is the next supplemental. Now they say, "Oh, older Americans funding need not be involved. Leave it out of this one and wait for the next supplemental."

It is no wonder the people of this country are confused at these inconsistent statements and actions by the administration. The fact of the matter is that there is a fundamental difference of opinion as to whether or not we should fund older Americans, college student programs, grants to local school districts impacted with large numbers of disadvantaged children, whether we should fund some of these immediately important things while making a slight reduction in the President's request for a huge increase in military spending. The President wants more for military, although the bill includes giving him 99 percent of what he requested. I urge Members to vote to override the veto.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote to override the President's veto of H.R. 6863, the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982.

The President was not well served by those who advised him on this issue.

The veto message states that "this bill would bust the budget by nearly a billion dollars." In fact, the conference agreement was $1.9 billion in budget authority under the President's budget estimates.

The veto message states that the bill "fails to provide required funding in virtually every major defense program * * *." In fact, cuts in defense were made precisely because the administration did not convince the House and the Senate that the funds requested were required. In fact, an estimated $2 billion in defense supplementals was proposed to restore funds previously denied by the Congress, or to start new programs which should and could have been proposed for consideration in the defense appropriations bill for fiscal 1983.

The veto message emphasizes "that if we are to keep deficits down we must also keep Federal spending down." As we have been told by Mr. Stockman—again and again—deficits are driven by outlays, and outlays under the conference agreement would be an estimated $1.5 billion less in fiscal 1982 than under the President's budget estimates.

Let me read to the Members a letter that I saw today, written to all of the Governors of the country on September 1. I will use the one to Governor Matheson of Salt Lake City:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D.C. September 1, 1982.

Hon. SCOTT M. MATHESON,
Governor State of Utah, State Capitol, Salt Lake City, Utah

DEAR GOVERNOR MATHESON: The Senate leadership has taken seriously the recommendations of the nation's Governors regarding budget decisions for FY 1983 and supplemental appropriations for FY 1982. As you have suggested, we froze discretionary funding at 1982 levels and reduced the deficit through cuts in military expenditures, indexed entitlements and tax reform.

You are no doubt aware of the President's recent veto of the regular supplemental for FY 1982. I disagree strongly with the President's decision and hope that the veto will be overturned.

It should be made clear that this bill is not a "budget buster". It is a total of nearly $2 billion less than the President's request and within the budget ceiling for FY 1982 by $8.1 billion. Congress did add funding for high priority domestic programs such as Community Service Employment for Older Americans ($211 million), Compensatory Education for the Disadvantaged ($148 million), and Interstate Transfer Grants ($112 million) which the Administration opposes. It also approved over $400 million requested by the President for foreign economic and military assistance.

Congress chose also to defer or deny nearly $2 billion worth of inappropriate military spending requests. They will be considered in conjunction with the regular FY 1983 budget. However, the bill still contains over $5.2 billion for pay supplementals for the Department of Defense. In this manner, we have tried to balance the competing demands for scarce federal resources. I strongly believe we have been fair and prudent in this regard.

Now I need the Governors' assistance to override the veto of this bill. Upon its return, Congress will attempt to overturn this veto. The public support and assistance of the Governors would be very helpful and appreciated.

Warm regards.

Sincerely,

MARK O. HATFIELD,
U.S. Senator.

Go back and tell your people you are for cutting older Americans and aid to education and compensatory education for the disadvantaged. They are going to love that.

A lot has been said about title V. I am concerned about the mixed signals that we are getting on title V. I will read a White House letter I received on July 23:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 23, 1982.

Hon. SILVIO O. CONTE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIL: This is in further response to the letter you and 114 of your colleagues sent to the President in follow-up to our previous correspondence concerning the Senior Community Service Employment Program authorized under title V of the Older Americans Act. That letter raises a number of issues that I hope I can answer to your satisfaction.

While we can appreciate the Congressional interest in retaining title V as a categorical program, the Administration's policy not to seek financing for title V in 1983 has not changed since my March 15 reply. The Administration still believes that programs to meet the training and employment needs of the elderly can be operated under the Federal jobs training program proposed by the Administration to replace the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) which expires at the end of this fiscal year.

Your letter to the President suggests that this approach to meeting the needs of the older worker is flawed because the older worker has been consistently underrepresented in CETA and because working through contractors, not States, has been the strong point of the title V program. It may be true that older workers have been underserved statistically in the CETA training programs. One explanation for that may be found in the views recently expressed by some program administrators at a workshop on job training at the annual meeting of the National Council on Aging. Several viewed categorical financing for the program for older workers as a hindrance to greater participation in other job training programs. Given constrained resources for job training, CETA prime sponsors could be expected to concentrate their efforts on programs for youth or other low-income adults if there were already categorical programs or setasides for the older worker. Categorical financing in effect becomes a ceiling, not a floor.

In addition, a number of program operators at this workshop argued that it was their experience that States had been more responsive to their needs than their local communities and that it was often easier to work through the State capital than their local government to secure services. This supports our view that the proposal to service the training needs of the older worker through State grants will be a positive help to the elderly rather than a flaw as your letter suggests. It is also not accurate to suggest that the States have not performed as well as the national contractors in title V. A recent study of title V by the Federal Council on Aging notes that national sponsors operate in areas that are most congenial for them while States, under ground rules for equitable distribution of services, must fill the gaps by taking what is left. States have had to take on the more difficult tasks, yet program data show their performance is in line with that of contractors. None of the available evidence, therefore, indicates that States are ill-equipped to serve the older worker.

Your letter is correct in stating that the Administration's job training legislation specifically prohibits the use of resources for wages or stipends. This would prohibit establishing subsidized jobs of the type that title V participants now hold. These jobs provide only short-term income maintenance similar to that provided through the CETA public service employment programs that Congress agreed last year should be phased out. The arguments for discontinuing the authority for title V type jobs are the same as for the CETA-financed jobs—the program does not provide long term benefits to participants by moving them into unsubsidized employment. The transition rate from title V to unsubsidized jobs is less than 15 percent, which is far below that of the CETA public service employment programs. As your letter suggests by citing the Philadelphia title V job counseling program, it is not necessary for the transition rate to be so low. As another example, the National Retired Teachers Association—American Association of Retired Persons (NRTA-AARP) consistently places 33-40 percent of its participants in unsubsidized jobs; a rate three to four times higher than any other national contractor. According to the Federal Council on Aging study, some NRTA-AARP local programs place over 100 percent of their participants in unsubsidized employment. This argues that a program that emphasizes training for jobs can benefit older workers without the need for subsidized jobs as an intermediate step to private sector employment.

Finally, I believe it is necessary to correct what appears to be a popular misperception of the benefits derived from title V programs. Your letter, and others, have cited as fact that title V returns $1.15 to the taxpayer for every dollar spent on the programs. The Department of Labor has been unable to document that statistic, but believes it must have been drawn from the 1978 study of the Senior Community Service Employment Program done by NRTA-AARP. The conclusions reached by this study, which only surveys experience in 1976 with a very small number of title V participants in the NRTA-AARP program, do not support the cost-benefit estimate for all of the title V as your letter suggests. The report specifically states that "the cost-benefit calculations refer to the successful placement of an enrollee in a permanent job, not to all aspects of S.C.S.E.P." In addition the evaluators note that since the study did not have a control group, they could not say what might have happened to the enrollees in the absence of the program. Clearly, the survey size and design are not statistically reliable enough to use for generalizations about the benefits of title V.

I hope this letter has helped to clarify the Administration's position concerning title V.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

KENNETH M. DUBERSTEIN,
Assistant to the President.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CONTE. I would be glad to yield to my good friend from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Who wrote that letter?

Mr. CONTE. It was written by Ken Duberstein, assistant to the President.

Mr. MICHEL. What was the date of that letter?

Mr. CONTE. That letter is dated July 23.

Mr. MICHEL. Well, I do not know—the President—whether or not he was misinformed at the time or whether he had all the facts, but I have to reiterate what he told me this afternoon and in unequivocal terms, that he would support the program and in any kind of new supplemental he would certainly support the addition of that.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman, but we have mixed signals.

I also have a letter here from Cyril F. Brickfield, executive director of the American Association of Retired Persons:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED PERSONS,
Washington, D.C., September 9, 1982.

Hon. SILVIO O. CONTE,
House of Representatives, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CONTE: We understand from press accounts that the Administration has dropped its opposition to provision of $210.6 million for the Title V Senior Community Service Employment Program to extend it beyond October 1st. While the American Association of Retired Persons is pleased that the Administration appears to have changed its position, we are fearful that in deliberations over a second supplemental appropriations bill, Title V will be held hostage for radically altered expenditures in other areas. The Administration appears to be willing to trade a $211 million Title V program for a $600 million reduction in other domestic spending and a $2 billion increase in defense spending. It is hard to believe that a second supplemental will be agreed to on these terms. We are therefore continuing to urge Congress to vote to override the President's veto of H.R. 6863.

Thank you again for your continuing support of the Title V program and the nation's elderly.

Sincerely,

CYRIL F. BRICKFIELD,
Executive Director.

Let me say that the programs that I mentioned under title V really are very small programs that do not cost a considerable amount of money, but they do provide jobs. It is ironic that we just came back from the Labor Day weekend, when many of us attended Labor Day breakfasts and marched in Labor Day parades, and here we are saying that we are going to fire 54,200 people when we have one of the highest unemployment rates we have ever had in this country.

The $210.6 million that we provided to continue title V has been vetoed before, and it is the single largest item to which the President and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget object to. The President's executive office made it clear they wanted to terminate the program before, and to fill the gap with a new job training program, but I can assure you that there is no substitute for this program. Their proposal will not provide a single community service job, let alone 54,200 jobs, because the legislation does not authorize payment of wages, and because it vastly reduces funding specifically for the elderly.

Unless this Congress acts, the title V program will end, I believe, on September 30. Unless we act now, those termination notices that older Americans have been receiving will take effect in a matter of days as the program starts phasing out for good.

At this point I include the following:

MEMORANDUM

To: All NCOA and Department of Senior Citizen Affairs Enrollees.

From: Natalie Gold, Project Director.

Subject: Termination Notice.

Date: August 20, 1982.

The National Council on the Aging Inc. (NCOA) receives funds each year from the U.S. Department of Labor and the Department of Senior Citizen Affairs, to employ low income older workers under Title V of the Older Americans Act. As you know, the NCOA Title V Program is called The Senior Community Service Project (SCSP).

The President did not include Title V in the Administration's Proposed Budget for fiscal year 1983 (10/1/82-9/30/82). The President also recently vetoed two versions of a supplemental appropriations bill that contained $210.6 million to fund Title V. This amount plus the $66.5 million already appropriated for July 1, 1982 through September 30, 1982 would have provided a total of $277.1 million for Title V and fully funded the program through June 30, 1983.

Another supplemental appropriations bill (H.R. 6863) containing $210.6 million for Title V was approved by a House-Senate Conference Committee on August 2. It is expected to be sent to the President prior to Congress adjournment (from August 20 until September 8). It faces a possible veto by the President.

NCOA is continuing to press for refunding of this highly effective program in order to protect the program enrollees and the valuable services that they perform in their communities. As of today, the fate of this program is uncertain and there are currently no funds available to NCOA for continuation of the program after September 30. There is no assurance that such funds will become available. Therefore, prudent management requires that we plan, on a contingency basis, for an orderly close-down of the program.

This is to notify you that your SCSP enrollment will terminate effective at the close of business on September 17, 1982. It will not be possible to pay you in cash for any vacation time that you have accumulated. Therefore, you should immediately contact our Fiscal Department to find out how much vacation you have earned. All such vacation time must be used before the close of business on the termination date.

If you are entitled to job related mileage reimbursement, payment will be included in you final check. The final check will be mailed to your address of record unless some other arrangement is requested and approved.

Many friends of the SCSP in Congress and elsewhere have worked hard to secure continued funding for the program. These efforts may yet succeed, either through H.R. 6873 being enacted or by some other means. If refunding occurs, we will notify you immediately to rescind this notice of termination.

Please do not hesitate to contact your Worksite Representative if you have any questions.

GREEN THUMB, INC.,
Arlington, Va., August 30, 1982.

To Green Thumb Workers and Staff:

As most of you are no doubt aware, Congress passed a supplemental appropriations bill before it recessed for Labor Day that included funds to continue Title V and Green Thumb from September 30, 1982 until June 30, 1983.

President Reagan has vetoed this bill, and if Congress does not override this veto, it is likely that the Title V program and Green Thumb will end on September 30, 1982.

Because we must plan to close out our activities in a responsible manner, you are hereby notified that it may become necessary for Green Thumb to terminate the employment of all enrollees as of the close of business, September 24, 1982. Although I deeply regret having to convey this news to you, I feel a moral obligation to give you as much notice as possible so that you can begin making plans for a future that may not include Green Thumb employment.

If some action is taken that permits Green Thumb to continue beyond September 30th, you will be notified immediately by the State Green Thumb office.

I would like to thank you for all the hard work and support you have given the program and your community in the past, as I am sure you will continue to do in the future.

Sincerely,

CARL A. LARSON.

The administration would have you believe that we are playing games with the funding for this program. What we are doing is correcting a $67 million Senate funding level that we got stuck with in the continuing resolution. The $210 million will bring the level up to the full funding this House approved in its regular 1982 Labor/HHS appropriations bill. This $210 million will not be outlayed until 1983, so it will not have an effect on the deficit any different from funding the program in fiscal year 1983. It will not increase the deficit in fiscal year 1982. Rather the 3-year reauthorization passed in December requires that the program be forward funded, which is what we are doing here.

In response to the administration's intent to end the program on September 30, the gentleman from California, Mr. PANETTA, and myself sponsored House Concurrent Resolution 278, which over half of you joined, to continue this program at current levels through 1983. That resolution passed the House overwhelmingly, with only four negative votes. During the debate on that resolution, I warned my colleagues that they had better be ready to stand firm on that vote when push came to shove and the funding to keep these 54,200 needy older Americans working was at stake. Push has come to shove. If you meant your vote on House Concurrent Resolution 278, then you will vote to override the veto. It has become a battle of wills on this program between Congress and the President, and we have been given no choice but to back our words with definitive action

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to remind the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) that he has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. CONTE. In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this is a worthwhile program. It is a program that keeps a lot of old people off the poverty rolls. If the program does not continue, a lot of them will have to go on welfare, and, therefore, it will cost the taxpayers. They drive people to the congregate meal centers, they drive people to the stores, they drive them to the dentist, the hospital, and to the doctor. It is one of the finest programs for elderly people that we have in this country.

But let me go one step further. Everyone is concentrating on this program and saying, "All right, we will put that back." But there is also $217 million in here for Pell grants and SEOG grants. On one hand you want to say, "All right, we are going to take care of the elderly, but the heck with students who need it to enroll this year in college." I emphasize this is a supplemental for fiscal year 1982, so we are affecting the students who are in college for this 1982-83 school year.

There is $26.5 million in there that my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PORTER) fought so hard for—education for the handicapped. Are we going to say, "All right, there is $211 million here for title V, but the heck with that program for the handicapped"?

There is $21 million for the Coast Guard. They are closing stations all over the country. They do not have gasoline to run their patrols to go after the drug dealers. Are we saying, "All right, we are going to go for the $211 million for title V, but you know what the Coast Guard can do"?

Mr. PURCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PURCELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the ranking Republican member on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), for an outstanding statement which I wholeheartedly support.

I am disturbed here today that my party, through its whip, has come to the floor and said that we are going to have to have a lock on the military piece of this supplemental and that is already decided and in place for the next time we meet in committee, assuming the budget veto is sustained without any commitments on some of these other programs.

If we had an across-the-board reduction here to take out the $918 million, maybe that might have some merit if we are looking for dollar savings. But to come on to the floor and make commitments on program A versus program B at this hour to attempt to gain votes for the veto is disturbing to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the ranking Republican member on the committee for his comments.

As in most every agency in the Government, the agencies under the jurisdiction of the Labor/HHS/Education Subcommittee are on a short time fuse if they do not receive their requested pay supplementals. Just about the entire Department of Education is facing 10 working days of furlough. The entire Bureau of Labor Statistics and a majority of the Employment Standards Administration in the Department of Labor will be furloughed. At least 10 States are facing serious problems continuing their occupational safety and health inspection programs without the $3.8 million transfer authorized in this supplemental. The Health and Human Services Department is potentially faced with an agencywide shutdown, with the exception of essential health-related personnel.

These increases in spending are all very important and targeted at the needy, be they children, college students, handicapped, or elderly. If the veto is not overridden, we will not be able to go back to the President with the same bill. There will need to be changes. We may very well lose some of these items. If you supported title V, as 407 of you did, as well as these education supplementals, I urge you to vote to override this veto.

If the veto is not overridden, the Patent and Trademark Office will be forced to furlough 2,700 employees, virtually the entire agency, on September 17.

The Department of Justice has completely run out of funds in two important law enforcement programs: The support of U.S. prisoners now housed in State and local jails, and fees and expenses of witnesses. They simply cannot pay the bills for these functions. So far, State and local law enforcement agencies are picking up the tab for the support of prisoners who are the responsibility of the Federal Government, but they cannot be expected to continue this indefinitely. The lack of funds for the fees and expenses of witnesses involved in Federal trials has made it necessary to postpone a number of trials, further delaying due process and adding to the already unacceptable backlog of such trials.

Two Department of Justice offices, the Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Attorneys and Marshals, will have to furlough personnel on or about September 15, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation is not far behind.

Due to some early and prudent management decisions, the State Department will not have to furlough employees through the end of the fiscal year, but this is at the cost of seriously delaying the security enhancement program at our overseas posts. Funds which were to have been used for such items as safe havens, locks, teargas, and other security-related projects have been postponed in order to continue to pay salaries. In addition, the vetoed bill includes $49 million, as requested by the President, for new personal security activities at overseas posts.

The bill includes a number of appropriations and language provisions which are important to many of your districts and which may not be provided if this veto is not overridden.

For example, language is needed and is included authorizing the Economic Development Administration to issue $30 million in direct loans and $150 million in loan guarantees during the remainder of fiscal 1982 from the economic development revolving fund. This is in accord with the clear intent of Congress in the continuing resolution, but the language is necessary if these loans are to be made available.

The bill includes funding for the coastal zone management program for the State of New York. Whaling research and activities are funded for Alaska. Ten million dollars is included for the 1984 Louisiana World's Fair. Law enforcement assistance funding is provided through the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration, U.S. attorney's and marshals and the Federal prison system for the expenses of the south Florida task force against drug traffic and organized crime.

Money is in here for the long-delayed alien detention center to be located in either Louisiana or Oklahoma, both of which are lobbying to get it. A new Federal prison to house 4,000 inmates is included for Arizona, as well as a minimum security prison camp for California. And $1.6 million is included to conduct the U.S. case in the Gulf of Maine boundary dispute, which is critical to New England and to the entire country in terms of future resources.

As I mentioned earlier, funding is provided in this bill in the amount of $49 million for additional security requirements at overseas posts in Western Europe and other highly threatened areas. The appropriations of this money is timely and important if we are to do all we can to avoid future attacks and kidnapings against our personnel serving in these countries.

And finally, $3.4 million is provided in the bill for the Iran-United States claims tribunal, an activity which must be funded regardless of our individual feelings about that whole ugly episode.

The Defense Department military personnel account is out of money. There is no money to pay the troops on September 15 and there is grave doubt enough money can be found to meet the civilian payroll.

We heard the same thing last month and some may think this is just another horror story from Defense.

But the fact is that the August 31 payroll was met only by using money which should have gone to the Treasury for withholding taxes and by deferring the transfer of social security withholding. That was a one-time shot. The well is empty. There is no more. If we do not get a pay supplemental, the troops will not be paid next week.

There is little or no impact on defense programs in this supplemental.

We are too far along in the fiscal year for anything to help straighten out the impact of deferring operations and maintenance activities in order to make the payroll.

But we cannot allow the millions of uniformed personnel to miss a payday next week together with the real likelihood some civilians will not be paid either. We must pay the troops. We cannot put the entire Armed Forces structure on furlough.

The supplemental also includes $30.5 million for Coast Guard operating expenses and $78.1 million in supplemental pay. The Coast Guard is the service we always seem to forget when it comes to funding, but which we never forget when it comes to adding new responsibilities.

We want active drug interdiction efforts from the Coast Guard along with responsive search and rescue performance, and they do a fine job at both of these tasks even though their funding posture is often in question, and certainly strained now.

What happens if a Coast Guard rescue plane takes off from New York, and after searching a wide-ranging area, needs to refuel at the Atlantic City, N.J., Airport using a Government credit card backed up with no obligational authority. If the card is refused, the plane cannot refuel and continue its mission. Such a situation has not occurred, but it is not out of the realm of possibility if the Coast Guard has to continue operations with no funding authority.

Coast Guard activities such as drug interdiction, because of their nature, require constant use of equipment. Therefore, spare parts replacement is a very high priority, particularly given the age of many of the ships and rotary and fixed wing aircraft. The operating moneys in the supplemental are essential for continued Coast Guard performance of the duties which we in Congress have mandated.

Right now, the Coast Guard is calling operating funds in from the field to pay its nonuniformed personnel, who incidently face furlough after the 14th of this month. That means that for operating activities, the Coast Guard would have to deficiency spend to continue to keep its ships and airplanes running, as we here in Congress expect them to do. In other words, the Coast Guard is close to broke. Think about that when you consider how you are going to vote on this Presidential veto because right now, the Coast Guard is in jeopardy.

The vetoed bill provides $350 million in economic assistance for the President's Caribbean Basin Initiative. This is the aid portion of the total CBI package of trade and aid initiative proposed last February.

In my view, if this money is not included in this bill, and if this veto is not overridden, the Caribbean Basin aid package will not be funded. And that would send the wrong signal to our neighbors to the south, a very damaging signal that we do not care and that we do not follow through on our promises.

If we do not come through with this money after it has been so well publicized, we cut the legs out from under those in the Caribbean and Central America who would be friendly with the United States. Those friends are in Costa Rica, Jamaica, the Eastern Caribbean, the Dominican Republic, the new, democratically elected government in Honduras, the new and hopefully less repressive government in Guatemala, and the new constituent assembly in El Salvador.

The bill reduces the administration's request for economic aid to El Salvador from $128 million to $75 million, and we have eliminated the $20 million request for military assistance to that country entirely. As you will recall, our House conferees compromised with the Senate Members, who wanted to include all of the requests for El Salvador. I believe it is a reasonable compromise.

The bill also includes $3.5 million, as requested, for international military education and training. These funds represent the best investment we can make with foreign assistance money—for a very small amount of funding, we expose the rising military leaders in many countries to the U.S. system of a civilian-controlled, restrained military and to our way of domestic life.

The bill also includes $50 million in forgiven military credits for Sudan, as requested by the President. Sudan has proven itself a good and loyal friend to the United States and to our friends in the Middle East region, and that country is now directly threatened by Soviet and Cuban-inspired forces from Libya and Ethiopia. We must continue our support.

As mentioned in the veto message, the bill includes a transfer of $50 million for relief and rehabilitation in Lebanon, and earmarks $10 million of this for the American University of Beirut and its hospital. The Senate also included report language, which we have no difficulty in accepting, proposing that up to $1.9 million of the total $50 million, be made available for Beirut University College. These are American institutions of long standing which are located right in the heart of some of the most severe fighting and damage. We intend to continue our support for them during this very difficult period, just as we intend to support our Lebanese friends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. FAZIO).

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I think we are observing a very embarrassing process for the minority here today, with all this shucking and jiving and slipping and sliding, they are trying to avoid responsibility for the very specific rejection of the priorities that are included in this bill.

This is a bipartisan committee. I think it is well known in the House in fact in both Houses that we do our work in a collegial way. Most Members of both parties supported this bill, in fact the other bodies fiscal leaders on the Republican side strongly advocated it. But now, because it is time for the President to run against the Congress, we all are supposed to get in line with the minority and let our appropriation responsibilities be dictated to us. And that is what is happening here. Congress is being told that our priorities are unimportant, that the Executive's priorities will have to take precedence and be implemented despite the input we are providing in adjusting downward by $1.9 million the President's request.

The President would have us retain $200 million for operation and maintenance money for the military in this bill that has already been provided for by transferring unobligated funds. And yet he would remove the $200 million for job programs for senior citizens who will end up going on SSI if they do not receive their minimal $3.25 an hour as this bill would provide. This is the clearest case of a priorities debate that we have had in the 3½ years I have been in Congress, and if anybody votes to sustain this veto, their constituents will not be confused, they will not be fooled. They will know in fact whose side the minority in this House is on. This is no vague budget resolution that allows Members to plea that they were against any particularly unpopular budget cut but for a budget reduction in general. This as Mr. LOTT the minority leader has said is a specific up or down vote on whether we force feed the military while starving the poor, the aged, the disabled, and the young. You cannot hide that fact.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER).

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, farm prices are depressed, in part, because exports are down. And, one immediate action that Government can take to boost farm prices is to sell more products in foreign trade.

This vetoed bill would make export trade a national priority by appropriating $500 million for the CCC export credit revolving fund.

Farmers do not want a handout. They want a helping hand.

This bill is not a budget-buster, and just because Ronald Reagan says it, that does not make it true. It sets national priorities that the President has ignored.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a vote to override the veto.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, let me just say as chairman of the subcommittee which has the Older Americans Act, in title V that what the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. SMITH) and others have said is true. They have simply been out to get this program all year, and it is not what is going to happen, it is happening. The pink slips went out and a number of them were discharged as of September 3, and another group as of September 13 has already been notified.

Mr. Speaker, the hour is late. It is going to be after midnight in about an hour unless we vote to override this veto.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR).

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, one of the things that was interesting to me was that the committee cut $106 million in cost overruns in the Trident submarine program, but they wanted to have an immunization program for children and a jobs program for the elderly and an education program for our handicapped. They also included a program that means very, very much to the city of Cleveland. It is just amazing that anyone could vote to sustain the President when the committee is trying to do away with all of these exorbitant cost overruns in the military budget.

Mr. Speaker, therefore today, I rise in support of overriding the President's veto of H.R. 6863. The 1982 supplemental appropriations bill will, if passed, provide necessary funds for programs which affect constituents in every Member's district. The supplemental provides vital services for our elderly, our disadvantaged, the unemployed, and our Federal employees. Where is our conscience? Where are our priorities? While the Pentagon continues to fund billions of dollars in military hardware around the world, we continue to cut the very basics from those in our own country.

Let us look briefly at some of the specifics of what has been vetoed.

FUNDING FOR EDUCATION

The President's veto would be devastating to education at all levels; $399 million in education money has been carelessly labeled as "wasteful and unnecessary spending." Included in this figure are programs which have proven to be more than mere success stories. It is vital to education at all levels, but particularly to higher education, that the supplemental appropriations bill be passed—we must override the President's veto. Unless we do, programs such as compensatory education for the handicapped, handicapped education, vocational education, student financial assistance—including Pell grants and higher and continuing education, will be severely diminished. If we do not override this veto the neediest students receiving Pell grant money will lose over $100 each since the maximum grant will be cut from $1,800 to $1,674.

FUNDING FOR IMMUNIZATION

The administration is asking us to turn our backs on preventive health services and childhood immunizations. If we do not override this veto, $6 million targeted for childhood immunization against such diseases as polio, measles, rubella, dyptheria, whooping cough, and tetanus will be lost. This is $6 million which is administered by the States in various ways to prevent outbreaks of illnesses which we all know to be cripplers. Without this money school systems, health facilities, and visiting nurses programs throughout the United States would be unable to provide these innoculations to needy and vulnerable children. Fifty percent of all these immunizations are administered through these State programs. Can we afford to deny this life-saving protection to these children? Can we at the same time say "No, you can't have your immunizations and if you do become crippled or disabled we won't be able to take care of you down the road either." It is a well-established fact that prevention of disease is less costly than the treatment of disease.

FUNDING FOR OUR UNEMPLOYED

Failure to override the President's veto would mean the loss of $20 million in grants to the States for unemployment insurance and employment services. This money is needed to cover the initial administrative expenses of the Federal supplemental benefits program which the House approved in passing the Tax Equity Act last month. Certainly, now is not the time to put this supplemental benefits program in jeopardy when the unemployment rate is hovering near 10 percent and hundreds of thousands of jobless Americans are depending on additional weeks of unemployment benefits to tide them over until the labor market improves.

FUNDING FOR OUR ELDERLY

The supplemental also contains $112 million in grants to States to help pay for the medicaid health care program for the poor. The medicaid program has been the victim of substantial cutbacks in the last two budgets. Last year's budget reduced the Federal matching rate to the States by 3 percent in fiscal year 1982, 4 percent in fiscal year 1983, and 4.5 percent in fiscal year 1984. These reductions drastically hurt the States and consequently the recipients.

This year's budget allowed for copayments or medical services as well as liens on real property, including homes of medicaid recipients who are institutionalized. These changes directly penalized the recipients.

It is not fair to jeopardize the financial status of the States or the medical care of the poor by delaying this supplemental funding any longer.

One of the most severe results of the President's veto involves 54,200 elderly citizens participating in the title V senior community service employment program. Depriving these seniors of the $210 million appropriated through H.R. 6863 is self-defeating because it will put more people in the unemployment lines and make them more dependent on the Government through SSI and food stamp benefits.

As all of you are aware, the title V program is offered to those low-income persons 55 years of age and older. The shock of a senior citizen receiving a pink slip could be devastating. At the present time, approximately 86 percent of the participants on community services have incomes below the poverty level. In 1981, the cutoff income for a single title V participant was $5,387. Thirty-three percent of the participants are from minority groups and 58 percent have less than a high school education.

These workers have proven the success of the program. In Ohio alone, $12 million were allocated to employ 2,355 people during last year; 1,313 of the 2,355 provided direct services to the elderly, while 1,042 provided services to the general community; 362 seniors provided services through nutrition sites. It should be noted that approximately 100 of these participants were able to assist others in their homes in the areas of health and home care. Institutionalized care is far more costly. Further, title V returns to the taxpayers $1.15 for every dollar spent on the program; and it was found that SSI and food stamp costs were reduced an average of $24 a month when a new person joined the title V program.

FUNDING FOR CIVIL SERVICE RETIREES' HEALTH BENEFITS

Some $607 million would be appropriated to the civil service retirement fund and the Federal employees' health benefits program. The amount does not represent a superfluous sum of money, but, actually, equals the amount of money owed to the insurance carriers and annuitants who are awaiting their claims to be processed. I do not need to speak at length about the FEHBP, whose financial difficulties have been used by this administration to make drastic cuts in benefit coverage and cause sharp increases in premium payments.

FUNDING FOR MASS TRANSIT, HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES

There is no question that our elderly are dependent upon public transportation. In addition, our roads, bridges, and highways are badly in need of repair. I am especially concerned about a particular project in this bill that is vital for the city of Cleveland. In the heart of our downtown, the bridge streets which support the downtown area Terminal Tower, Huron Road, and the Old Post Office are eroding. These supports must be repaired for the safety of the hundreds of thousands who daily commute in that area and to revitalize our downtown. The supplemental provides $12.5 million for this vital work. If we do not override this veto today, the city of Cleveland has lost a critical opportunity to provide jobs and to revitalize itself.

Of course, human worth as demonstrated by these important programs can never be measured in dollars and cents. If in principle, we seek to encourage a sense of self-sufficiency, self-worth, and pride of achievement; then, in practice, we should feel honor-bound to support funding for these programs sufficient to match our deeds to our words.

We have demonstrated our support of these programs in the past, Mr. Speaker. I urge my colleagues to consider the alternatives and regard the beneficiaries of these programs not just in abstract statistics, but rather as individuals contributing to our society.

Thank you.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AuCoin).

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, what it all comes down to is that this veto is a sham. This is not an argument here over how "much" is to be spent; this is an argument over "where" to spend.

That is significant because you can tell the political differences between people and political parties by where they choose to put money and where they choose to take it away. It is a dollars and cents statement of political values.

It is pretty clear what the White House's values are. You will find it reflected in their spending request.

They want to spend hundreds of millions of dollars more on defense and in foreign aid, particularly for the military junta in El Salvador.

Our bill, instead, says that is too much—and that with a mere fraction of the savings we will just as surely build a strong nation by keeping the U.S. Coast Guard afloat, keeping young minds from being priced out of college, providing economic opportunities for the elderly and providing unemployment assistance for jobless Americans.

That is the argument. The only argument.

When the men in the White House call this bill a "budget buster" they are betting that the American people will believe anything. Someone called this tactic a "sideshow." I agree. It is right out of P. T. Barnum, who said, "A sucker is born every minute."

Well, the administration is wrong about the American people being suckers. And the administration is wrong on this bill.

I urge my colleagues to override this veto.

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, as the elections draw closer we can no doubt expect more and more partisan politics; it is the nature of things. But I was dismayed to learn that the President had vetoed H.R. 6863, the latest supplemental appropriation package. He contended wrongly that it was over budget merely because it set different priorities from his own. Priorities which I felt then, and feel now, are sound and sensible.

Our national defense budget has increased geometrically placing a strain not only upon those programs reduced to offset the added costs, but also upon the military-industrial complex as it spends money too fast and inefficiently. Both Secretary of Defense Weinberger and Secretary of State Shultz supported this package as a reasonable and well thought out alternative to the President's proposals. It in no way endangered the defense buildup, nor our national security. And in fact, it came under the President's proposals by a full $1 billion, in a small, but significant way reducing our astronomical deficit.

What are some of the moneys the President has decided are not important? Among other items, this package includes $211 million for jobs for older Americans; $217 million for student financial aid; $148 million for compensatory education for the disadvantaged; $26.5 million for handicapped education; $112.5 million for Federal highways; $11.5 million for preventive health services; and $20 million for advances to the unemployment trust funds. These are reasonable, worthwhile programs which should not be continually jerked around by the whim of politics.

While I was in my district, I witnessed the distress felt by my constituents regarding this veto measure. Hundreds of my senior constituents will be out of jobs without this bill, students will either have to sacrifice more or completely give up their ambitions for further education; and unemployment in my district jumped 2 percentage points to 13.6 percent in just 1 month. My constituents want and need help. The veto of this measure gave them little hope that it would be forthcoming. It is now Congress responsibility to renew that promise.

As a politician, I expect politics in an election year, but not to the detriment of the American people. It is time, Mr. Speaker, for the President to stop playing politics, to put away his playthings, and get on with the business of Government—that of serving the American public. This bill is a solid piece of legislation, and I urge my colleagues to join me in overriding the President's veto.●

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote to override the President's veto of the fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriations bill.

The supplemental appropriations bill was the product of a considerable effort on the part of the members of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. That effort involved the fashioning of numerous compromises required when the funding needs of various important programs had to be reconciled with the fiscal constraints that we all realize we have to operate under. The margin by which the conference report on the supplemental appropriations bill passed the House was evidence that the Members were satisfied with the compromises that had been made. We sent to the President a bill that was not only substantially below his request, but below the budget outlay and authority levels in the 1982 budget ceilings as well.

When the President vetoed the supplemental, he indicated that his action was premised on his belief that the bill was a "budget buster." This contention is not supported by fact. What the veto actually represents is a dispute with Congress over spending priorities. These disputes often occur but it seems to me that they can be most rationally dealt with if all parties recognize them for what they are, rather than misrepresent them. Let us look at the facts. The vetoed supplemental contained $0.5 billion of the $2.6 billion requested by the President in budget authority for defense. Of the money not provided, a substantial amount represented funds no longer sought by the Department of Defense, funds to pay cost overruns, funds previously denied by Congress, or funds to begin new programs. In contrast, the supplemental contained $918 million more for domestic programs than requested by the President. These funds were for programs for which Congress has, time and time again, given its approval.

The President took exception to our making available an additional $217 million to assist our young people in obtaining a college education, an additional $210 million to provide community service jobs to 52,000 of our low-income elderly, an additional $148 million to assist school districts in meeting the educational needs of the disadvantaged, and an additional $26 million to educate our handicapped children. I happen to believe that these programs are vital to the future of our country, as vital in the long run as many aspects of our defense programs. I also happen to believe in a strong national defense. I know, however, that the cuts the supplemental made in defense were not going to make or break our national security. The domestic programs that were selected for additional funding, however, need supplemental funds to sustain those Americans who depend on them. It is imperative that those funds be provided.

Mr. Speaker, the question of whether or not to override this veto really is a question of priorities. I believe that the bill we sent to the President appropriately reflected our priorities. The veto was unjustified and should be overridden.●

● Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to protest one of the most ludicrous actions I have seen this year. The President's veto of the regular supplemental was nothing but a blatant attempt to play political baseball. Unfortunately, the ball that is getting tossed back and forth is the quality of many people's lives.

The President maintains that the veto was necessary because the bill is a "budget buster." But this allegation simply does not stand up under the facts. The total amount of this bill is $1.3 billion less than the President's request. In fact, his own request would have "busted the budget" by more than $250 million.

But the President is not playing with facts, he is using mirrors. Is he trying to regain preelection credentials as a tough antispending conservative? Is this part of an effort to shift national attention away from the failure of Republican economic policies? Is the President trying to portray Congress, especially Democrats, as big spenders right before election?

The only other justification I can find for the veto is that the President is peeved because Congress did not agree to his every wish. In a bipartisan move, $2 billion in extra defense spending was denied that the President wanted for housekeeping items and some early starts on weapons buying planned for next year. Then Congress spent $900 million on some social programs that cannot finish the present fiscal year uninterrupted without the supplemental funds.

Let us look at some of the programs the President does not want to fund.

First and foremost, there is the older workers program. We all know how important that $210 million is to the 55,000 senior citizens who are anxiously awaiting word of our action today. Last July, a sense of the Congress resolution in support of title V passed the House overwhelmingly. I hope that every Member who voted for that resolution is ready today to put their vote where their mouth was last summer, and prove to their seniors that they pay more than lipservice to the program.

Hundreds of thousands of students are waiting for word on the quality of their education. One million Pell grant recipients and 128,000 SEOG beneficiaries will have their financial aid reduced because the President does not want to live up to his commitment to them. And the quality of education for many thousands of handicapped and learning disabled children will also be determined by today's vote.

Unemployment has risen to post-World War II records, and last month we agreed to a new extended benefits program for unemployed workers. There is money for this program in the supplemental, too.

Numerous health programs need additional money to finish off this fiscal year without curtailment. Basic health research by the Center for Disease Control, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, and Health Resources will be stalled because the President's priorities are elsewhere.

Despite promises in recent television commercials, the President does not want to pay full retirement benefits to approximately 400,000 railroad retirees.

President Reagan's veto was also spurred by a request to fund programs that serve the deaf and blind.

The most absurd aspect of the situation we find ourselves in today is that the President did not veto this bill because it spends too much. Rather, it was vetoed because it spends too little.

I urge all Members to end this political game by voting to override the veto. It is time to send a message to the President that enough is enough.●

● Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to reject the President's veto of the urgent supplemental. Not only has Mr. Reagan vetoed a bill that is clearly within the guidelines of the fiscal year 1982 second budget resolution, he has vetoed a bill essential to the handicapped, the elderly, the unemployed, the disadvantaged, and to the American city. Mr. Reagan has complained that Congress has funded programs he does not want, and not funded programs that he does want. And he is right. We funded human needs programs. Mr. Reagan wanted us to forget human needs and build a bigger military.

The bill we passed provided $211 million for jobs for our older Americans. It provided $217 million for student financial assistance; $148 million for compensatory education; $37 million for urban mass transit; $20 million for the unemployment compensation trust fund. That was not quite what the President had in mind.

So what if the senior community service employment program runs out of money—so long as the military gets a bigger budget. So what if the unemployment fund runs out of cash—so long as the military gets more money. Mr. Speaker, Congress rejected the President's requests because the needs of the Nation demanded that we do so.

This urgent supplemental provides money needed by people from all walks of life in all parts of the country. The President had no legitimate reason to reject it. It is within spending targets, and it deals with need. If the President cannot accept our obligation to fund social programs, but can only see bigger defense budgets, then I suggest that his priorities are backward.

What we have done is right. I urge the House to stick to its convictions, and override this veto.●

● Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, contrary to President Reagan's rhetoric, this bill is not a "budget-buster." The bill is not only well below budget, it is also $1.4 billion below the amount the President recommended.

When the President vetoed the bill he said it contained $900 million more than he wanted for social programs and about $2 billion less than he requested for defense.

Congress did add a much needed $217 million in financial aid to college students. Education is just as necessary as defense. A strong and adequate education is just as important for our citizens as a strong national defense. If the veto is sustained, several hundred thousand young people will not be able to attend college this fall.

Congress also added funds for elderly employment, education for the handicapped, and advances to the State unemployment funds. But we reduced other programs, such as defense, by $2.8 billion.

When the President opposes providing funds sorely needed for education and older American programs, I have to vote against him. This bill provides those funds, while keeping within our goal of holding down Federal spending. For these reasons, I intend to vote to override the President's veto.●

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the veto override of the fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863.

My support for the override is founded on my profound belief that the Congress of the United States serves as a coequal constitutional body to the Presidency in the establishment of this Nation's budget priorities. As the elected representatives of the people, we have a fundamental duty to govern over our national spending programs. To do otherwise is to abdicate our essential constitutional responsibilities.

It must be made clear that the supplemental appropriations bill which was submitted to the President for his signature conformed to the overall guidelines prescribed by the final budget resolution for 1982. Moreover, the measure was $1.5 billion below the total funds requested by the President for supplemental appropriations budget authority. For the President to frame his veto of H.R. 6863 in such terms as "budget busting" is simply distortive and unfair to the American people.

What must be made clear is that the President's veto of this measure was based solely on his disagreement with the spending priorities specified by the Congress in the bill. Given the unprecedented recession confronting this land, the Congress authorized in H.R. 6863 more money for domestic programs and less for military projects. By reducing the defense funding allocation by merely 1 percent, $918 million was made available to meet numerous critical domestic needs.

For the citizens of my congressional district, this funding differential is not a mere abstraction. H.R. 6863 insures that $16,000 per month is available to the Sacramento Office of Urban Indian Health Services for the provision of basic health care to my local Indian community. H.R. 6863 provides the necessary moneys to fund both supplementary educational opportunity grants and Pell grants. Hundreds of low-income young people from my district would not be able to attend such institutions as the University of California or the University of the Pacific without these grants. The opportunity for a higher education for needy and deserving students is a national priority deserving of support.

H.R. 6863 allocates $5.5 million for the Sacramento light rail project, a system which is being built today to meet tomorrow's transportation needs. Without this form of investment in our Nation's urban infrastructure, we sacrifice the future of our cities and communities.

Most importantly, H.R. 6863 invests in people. It contains moneys for childhood immunization, for the research efforts of the National Institutes of Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health, and for our struggle against tuberculosis. These programs are as essential for the security and well-being of my constituents as is a reasonable investment in our national defense. For our Nation's disabled, H.R. 6863 provides critical funds for handicapped education services. We are not too callous of a people not to recognize the right of all children to a decent education. For this country's senior citizens, H.R. 6863 authorizes over $210 million for title V jobs. This funding authority translates into 129 jobs for senior citizens in my district. For these Americans, H.R. 6863 represents the dignity of employment through public service.

To override the President's veto of H.R. 6863 is the responsible congressional action. Funding for these domestic programs must be preserved if pressing human needs are to be adequately answered. To override the President's veto will constitute the reaffirmation of our constitutional responsibility of representation.●

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, today this House is called upon to assert its constitutional prerogative as a coequal branch of Government. On July 29 the House adopted H.R. 6863, the fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriations bill. It was common knowledge in the House at that time that this bill was a candidate for Presidential veto. Nevertheless, the House passed the bill 282 to 111—with 41 Members not being recorded. Subsequently the House overwhelmingly adopted the conference report on this bill 348 to 67.

This bill is not a "budget buster" the President has alleged. Rather it is the Congress assertion of its legislative authority to establish spending priorities for the Federal Government. We have chosen a balanced approach to spending—providing more funds for domestic programs and less for defense than the President wishes. I personally believe those spending priorities currently reflect what the American people want, and just as importantly, what they need.

In the area of education, the supplemental appropriations bill provides additional funds for the following programs in the 1982–83 school year:

Compensatory education for the disadvantaged (chapter I, ECIA) $140 million;

Pell grants for low- and middle-income college students $140 million;

Supplemental educational opportunity grants (SEOG) $77 million;

Education for the handicapped $26 million;

College housing loans (continuing lending authority) $75 million;

Title III, institutional aid ($10 million in carryover authority plus $10 million in new spending authority) $20 million.

Let me explain to my colleagues the importance of these supplemental student aid funds to higher education. Without the additional $140 million in Pell grants, more than 200,000 low-income students from families with incomes below $9,000 will receive a $1,674 maximum grant instead of the $1,800 provided for in the March continuing resolution. Because of the rising costs of attending public and private postsecondary institutions—increases this year are as high as 21 percent—many of these low-income students will be denied the opportunity to pursue or continue their college education. In addition to the 200,000 low-income students who will have their maximum grants reduced, as many as 800,000 others will receive smaller awards.

The bill vetoed by the President would also restore $77 million of the $92 million in supplemental educational opportunity grant (SEOG) funds cut last year, eliminating or reducing SEOG awards to 128,000 students.

While many of my colleagues may view these amounts as small or insignificant in the context of a $14.1 billion supplemental appropriations bill, these funds represent an important contribution to thousands of low- and middle-income students who need these funds to obtain a higher education. Many of you have also heard horror stories about students defaulting on loans and misusing or abusing Federal student aid funds. A major new study of more than 2 million public college student aid recipients, by three major higher education associations, tells a very important story about the beneficiaries of Federal student aid. The typical student at a public 2-year or 4-year college or university who receives Federal student aid earns a substantial part of college expenses, has parents who can provide little or no help, and could not attend college without student aid. About one-third are self-supporting. I would like to share some of the study's major findings with my colleagues:

Over two-thirds of self-supporting or independent students have incomes below $6,000, and 94% have incomes below $12,000. For those with some help from their families, average family income was $16,500;

The average self-supporting student in 1981–82 needed about $6,000 a year for college and living costs, and was often an older person helping to support a family. Such a student received no help from family, earned about $450 in college work study, and contributed other earnings of about $1,900. He or she also received about $1,100 in grants, mostly Pell Grants, and borrowed about $700;

The average students getting family help faced college costs of about $3,800 a year, received about $469 from parents, and earned about $500. He or she received about $1,000 in grants and borrowed about $700. Minority students generally received less family help than white students. The average black student at a public four-year college received about $180 from his or her family, the average Hispanic student about $142 and the average white student about $600.

This is the true story of the average student from a working class or poor family, who wants to improve his chances for success and contribute to the growth of this great Nation. We would not read about these students in the New York Times or Washington Post, but these students are the success stories of our Federal student aid program.

I want to ask unanimous consent to insert the "Fact Sheet on Stampen Study of Student Aid at Public Colleges" in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

I urge my colleagues to stand by their votes on the conference report and to support the right of this body and the Congress as a whole to establish the Nation's spending priorities.

FACT SHEET ON STAMPEN STUDY OF STUDENT AID AT PUBLIC COLLEGES

Dr. Jacob Stampen of the University of Wisconsin is completing a research study of student aid recipients at public community colleges, four-year colleges, and universities. This is the first such survey ever made, and is based on a representative sample of recipients at all types of public institutions. The data represents about 2,200,000 students, of whom about one-third are self-supporting or independent, and about two-thirds dependent to some extent on their families' assistance.

The project was carried out under the sponsorship of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU), the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges (NASULGC), and the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC) with support from the Ford and Exxon Foundations.

The study included students receiving at least one form of federal, state, or institutional need-based student aid, including grants loans, and work-study. Data is also available on cost of attendance, family income, student earnings, and other information. The data will be presented in a variety of ways—type of institution, race, sex, students on-campus and off-campus, etc.

Some data is expected to throw light on what most observers feel to be a very discriminatory feature of student aid: students living on campus are allowed to count the entire cost of room and board as an expense, but those living off campus are allowed only an arbitrary $1100 "commuter allowance," far below actual living costs. Proportionately, this affects far more public college students than private college students.

The data also shows clearly, in the judgement of the association, that students receiving aid are not getting a "free ride." Most students, even those with very low incomes, receive aid equal to only a fraction of their costs. Almost no students receive aid equal to total costs of college, even counting their own earnings and any family assistance.

So far, only preliminary data is available; the study is expected to be completed in October. Because of the urgent nature of Congressional decisions about federal student aid for fiscal years 1982 and 1983—which may be in the next two or three weeks—and because of strong public interest in student aid as colleges re-open this fall under difficult circumstances, the associations have decided to issue a short news release and this accompanying fact sheet at this time.

The attached tables are indicative of the method used and the kinds of information revealed. The first table (labelled No. 2) deals with about 1,300,000 "dependent" undergraduate students—those receiving some family help. It includes students at two-year colleges, four-year colleges, and universities. It shows the average student budget—a total to $3,833 for tuition and fees, room and board, and all other budgeted expenses. The table then shows expected parental contribution and assistance from need-based grants, student employment, loans, and student earnings or contributions, as well as all other sources. The budget shows that the average student faces an unmet need of $443, to be made up in what ever way he or she can.

The second table (labelled No. 3) gives the same data for independent or self-supporting students. These students represent about one-third of those receiving aid. Self-supporting students are heavily concentrated in public college; many are older—many public two-year and four year college students averaged 30 to 40 years in age—a good number are married and helping to support families. As a result, most have considerably higher living expenses than dependent students, and also much greater unmet need.

For general information about this study, please call John Mallan at 202/293-7070. For detailed research information, please call Dr. Jacob Stampen, 608/263-4485.

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr Speaker, I rise in support of the veto override.

This supplemental appropriations bill does not bust the budget as the President would like us to believe. In fact, it is below President Reagan's request by $1.9 billion and below the 1982 budget authority ceiling by $3.2 billion.

President Reagan vetoed this bill because he wanted more for the military, in the amount of $2.6 billion, than for needed domestic programs. For example, he objects to $211 million for the older Americans workers program; $217 million for student assistance; $174 million for education of the disadvantaged and the handicapped; $12 million for immunization and disease control; $10 million for alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health research; and $39 million for postal rate subsidy for charitable organizations and other preferred-rate mailers.

With regard to the older American workers program, let me caution my colleagues not to be swayed by last minute assurances that the program will be saved at the end of this process in yet another supplemental or continuing resolution. The fact is that precious time is passing by, before this program's current funding ends on September 30. Last year we reauthorized this program as a forward-funded activity. This supplemental provides that forward funding through June 30, 1983. The President's veto eliminates those funds. We should not allow this program to be bandied about like a political football—54,200 older workers' jobs are at stake; and the hours of dedicated service they provide to our communities and schools are being jeopardized. It should be remembered that the President's budget submission for fiscal year 1983 eliminates community service employment for older Americans as a separate program.

I would also like to share with you the petitions that I have received from senior citizens living in California who are affected directly by the action we take today. So far I have received 15,000 signatures from individual senior citizens throughout the State. I am sure that other Members have received similar petitions and correspondence from senior citizens of their district and thoughout the United States.

I urge every Member of this Chamber to look closely at the human impact of the President's veto and support our efforts to override it today.●

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to override the President's veto.

The issue before us is not one of cold cash—it is a question of priorities, of choices, of how we want to allocate our resources.

The President cannot really be upset about how much we spent—we spent less than he requested. The President is upset about where we spent it.

The President would rather spend for foreign aid, than for elderly employment, student loans, and education for the handicapped.

The President would rather spend for exotic weaponry that does not work very well and would not give us any more security if it did, than for advances to State unemployment funds.

So we have got a choice today. We can either help this country get back on her feet, or we can continue to pay for waste.

I do not believe that there is any question about what we should do. In the name of fairness and credibility, we should vote to override the veto.●

● Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriation, H.R. 6863, is some $2 billion below the administration's request. It is over $3 billion below the budget ceiling established in the present fiscal year 1982 budget.

This bill does not rob from defense to fund social programs. After massive increases, it slices $2 billion, including $700 million the administration's own Secretary of Defense had marked for cuts.

This bill does not bust the budget or sap vital defense spending. This veto cannot be justified by economic policy and the need to control Federal spending. It cannot be wrapped in the flag and justified by reason of national defense.

Mr. Speaker, the bird is out of the bush. We can see it for what it is. This veto reflects one policy and only one policy—a determined distaste for any program that dares put the Federal Government to work in service of a better society. Listen to the litany:

This is the veto of an administration opposed to older Americans earning dignity through community service. This is the veto of an administration opposed to education for handicapped children. This is the veto of an administration opposed to helping beleaguered families finance the spiraling costs of higher education.

Having overseen the worse recession since the Great Depression, this is the veto of an administration opposed to advances to the unemployment trust fund.

Are these programs examples of waste, fraud, and abuse? If so, then let those who support the veto clearly say so. If not, then let us all acknowledge that this veto is not a battle over budget policy but a battle over the nature of our society.

When the young and the old, the struggling middle class and unemployed workers, cannot turn to their Government, then they are truly condemned to a closed society with limited and predefined opportunities. The growing train of administration vetoes forces a direct question. Will this Congress, simply and without hedging complexity, pledge this Government to the service of its people?

I urge my colleagues to override the veto.●

● Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting the continuation of the title V senior community service employment program by voting to override the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill. Without the funding contained in this bill, many of the 54,000 workers currently employed under title V will find themselves laid off work in October. Not only will this cause hardship for them, but it will also result in the disruption of nutrition programs and other services for older Americans that rely on the labor supplied by title V for their operation.

Title V of the Older Americans Act was reauthorized for fiscal year 1983–85 by the Congress last December. However, because of its funding structure, title V requires the $210 million contained in the supplemental appropriations bill to continue operations. Without this money, the older workers who rely on the income the program provides will find themselves out of work and dependent on SSI, food stamps, medicaid, and other welfare programs for their livelihood.

Unemployment levels for people 55 and older reached the second highest mark ever recorded for older Americans this summer. Never before has a senior employment program been so important. At a time when the threat of poverty faces many of our country's senior citizens, title V provides a dignified and productive alternative for the low-income elderly.

Once again, let me encourage each and every one of you to think seriously of the implications of your vote for the elderly workers in your district. I know that, like me, you have heard from hundreds of concerned citizens as to the importance and value of this program. I urge you to cast your vote for title V and vote to override the President's veto.●

● Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, we are faced today with yet another example of President Reagan's callous disregard for the needs of American citizens, as he plays politics with the funding of Federal programs for the next few weeks and puts thousands of Federal workers in suspense about their jobs.

Mr. Reagan calls this supplemental appropriations bill budget-busting—but it is well below the spending bill he sent us. What it does cut is spending on military programs and Pentagon boondoggles, and it adds funding for older Americans, urban mass transportation, student funding, handicapped assistance, and other programs he seems hellbent on eliminating from the Federal Government.

This political game Mr. Reagan is playing with the lives of our constituents must be ended. I urge my colleagues to vote with me in overriding this outrageous veto.●

● Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to override the President's veto of H.R. 6863, the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

I will vote to override the veto because I think this bill meets the needs of the American people in a fiscally and economically responsible way.

The President, in his veto message, labeled this bill a budget-buster. But the label will not stick.

Rather than busting the budget, the bill is actually $1.1 billion under the budget ceiling. The President's charge is particularly weak in view of the fact that the bill spends $1.5 billion less than he wanted to spend.

This bill contains funding for several programs that are strongly supported by the American people and that have proved successful in making ours a better society.

It includes $211 million for the title V senior community service employment program, which employs 54,200 older Americans who provide services to hundreds of thousands more senior citizens.

The Reagan administration has repeatedly tried to eliminate this program. This House went on record on title V on July 20, when we voted 407 to 4 for a resolution which I cosponsored which reaffirmed our support for continued title V funding. That vote will be a hollow gesture if we do not vote today to override this veto.

The bill also contains some $400 million for education programs. Included in that total are $148 million for education aid for disadvantaged children and $26.5 million for education of handicapped children.

The funds also include $217 million for college student assistance. The American Council on Education estimates that without these funds, 1 million students will have their aid reduced, and 128,000 will lose their aid completely. My own State of New York will lose $54 million overall in education funds, and thousands of elementary, secondary, and postsecondary students will be denied opportunity.

In addition to the title V jobs and the education programs, the bill also includes funds for mental health programs, alcohol and drug abuse research, unemployment compensation, and mass transit aid. All of these programs have been cut severely in the past 2 years, and the small increases in this bill do not fully restore funding to previous levels. But they will help Americans cope during this recession.

The President has attempted to justify his veto on the ground that he is trying to save taxpayers dollars. But this bill spends less than the President requested, and the veto raises the spectre of another Government shutdown, such as occurred last November. At that time, when President Reagan vetoed the continuing resolution, the cost of the resulting 1-day shutdown of the Government was over $80 million. By overriding this veto, we can avoid having that happen again, and thereby spare Federal employees the uncertainty of indefinite job loss while we save money and keep Government services flowing.

As I have stated, this bill is not a budget buster. I urge my colleagues to stand by the senior citizens, students, and handicapped children who need the help provided in this bill, and vote to override the President's veto.●

● Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this effort to override the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill.

I voted for this bill when it first passed, and I intend to continue my support for the important programs funded by this legislation.

The supplemental appropriations provides approximately $210 million to fund community service jobs for older Americans, $217 million to help economically disadvantaged students, and $148 million for education of handicapped children.

There are few programs more deserving of our full support than these important efforts to provide assistance to older Americans, handicapped children, and low-income students.

I would ask my colleagues: What more important obligations do we have than providing job opportunities for older Americans, and the human dignity associated with productive employment? What greater investment in the future of this Nation can we make than providing educational opportunities for low-income students so that they might lift themselves out of the viscious cycle of poverty? And what more compassionate and worthwhile help can we extend to handicapped children than insuring they get an appropriate education in the same public schools we provide for all children.

As for the administration's desire to shift funds from these programs into the Department of Defense; I believe we have already increased the Pentagon's budget enough this year. We also just passed legislation that provides for substantial increases in defense spending for fiscal year 1983. With this in mind, I believe that we simply do not have to pour millions more into the Pentagon in the 21-odd days left in the current fiscal year.

This measure will not seriously add to the Federal budget deficit. In fact, the bottom line figure in the bill is over $1 billion below the total of the President's original supplemental request. What this bill comes down to is simply a matter of priorities, and as far as I am concerned, senior Americans, handicapped children, and low-income students deserve our support. I urge my colleagues to join me in overriding the President's veto.●

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am gravely disappointed that the President chose to veto the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1982.

Many of us were elected by voters who were sick and tired of the same old policies of tax and spend. That message was made abundantly clear in 1980. I believe that this Congress has taken that message seriously and we have carried out their wishes by drastically cutting back on Federal spending.

Therefore, the President's logic eludes me. In its present form, the supplemental appropriations bill is almost $2 billion less than the President's request. It is also well within the ceiling prescribed under the budget resolution. Given that, it is difficult to fathom how this bill can be a budget buster.

The President wants to remove most of the funds for domestic social programs and substitute an additional $2 billion for the defense function. An additional $2 billion, whether spent on domestic or defense programs, is still $2 billion. One cannot bust the budget while the other does not.

Even Secretary Weinberger admitted to the Senate Armed Services Committee that the Defense Department could operate very well without additional funds requested by the President. Total funds allocated for the defense function represent a 19-percent increase over fiscal year 1981 levels, giving the President 99 percent of his defense budget request.

Congress reauthorized the Older Americans Act last year. Included in that bill was the promise that money would be available for title V senior citizen employment programs. Again on July 20, the House overwhelmingly restated its support for title V. The Senate did the same. More than 54,000 low-income elderly across the country need and depend on this program. Title V workers are worried now for good reason. Unless this bill passes, current participants will receive termination notices. With unemployment of those over 55 at record high levels, this is hardly the time to terminate the program.

If the veto hurts the old, it also hurts the young: $148 million for compensatory education for the disadvantaged is sorely needed by local school districts; $217 million is included in this bill for student financial assistance. The academic year has begun and students are counting on this aid. Are we to pull the rug from underneath them now? I think not.

The responsible position for Members of this body is to override the President's veto. In so doing, we will demonstrate fiscal prudence and our commitment to those who sent us to Washington to set our national priorities.●

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, this urgent supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863, is the successor to two previous vetoed supplementals. In each of those cases, the President made his objections to overspending very clear.

He has made his objections clear on this bill, too. Nevertheless, each time, including this one, the Appropriations Committees of both Houses have been unwilling to accept even modest reductions in their favorite spending programs. Now that each House has satisfied all of its pet spending urges, domestic spending in this bill is nearly $1 billion over the President's requests made 6 months ago.

This vote is no test of congressional authority. Rather, it is a test of congressional willingness, or unwillingness, to work with the President to hold down deficits. It will take only one-third of us to pass that test today.

There has been a lot of talk about the specifics of the bill. It is said that the President wants to increase money for defense and foreign aid. I do not. My suppport of the veto is based on the need to reduce spending, not to increase it. Support of the veto need not increase defense spending.

There has been talk of reductions in student assistance programs and in senior citizen employment programs. Those need not be reduced in a new bill if the veto is sustained. There is plenty of room for cuts in other areas, like housing assistance, CETA, transportation, and others. Nobody expects us to save the full $1 billion, but we can surely carve out a couple of hundred million without inconvenience. Some of our taxpayers probably still believe that $200 million is worth saving.

Yes, we need to pay our essential Federal employees, and in addition to student assistance and senior employment, we need the funding for the Caribbean Basin Initiative which is necessary for our national security.

But we do not need the mandatory floor on Energy Department employees provided in this bill. We are trying to phase out some of that Department's activities. And we surely do not need the Tug Fork, W. Va., porkbarrel item which will ultimately cost $1 billion.

Finally, we will have a hard time convincing our constituents that an urgent supplemental request for funds made 6 months ago, is needed in its entirety when there are only 3 weeks left in the fiscal year. That is pretty hard for anyone to swallow.

We can redeem ourselves by sustaining this veto. We can prove our resolve to manage the fiscal problem. We can help reduce deficits and lower interest rates.

We have to set aside the old spending habits, the back scratching, the porkbarrel, and the logrolling. But it has to be done.●

● Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr Speaker, this bill is not the budget-buster the President claims. In fact, it provides for spending $1.3 billion less than the President had proposed. The bill also assures compliance with the budget resolution. While the administration's supplemental budget request called for breaching the overall spending ceiling established by the resolution by $250 million, the appropriations measure the President has vetoed holds spending $1.1 billion below that level.

The veto message further implies that the President objects to the priorities reflected in this bill. He attacks the $918 million provided for domestic programs while decrying a $2 billion reduction in military spending.

This argument is specious. The Pentagon does not want the additional appropriation and claims it cannot spend the money before the end of the fiscal year. In fact, Defense Secretary Weinberger urged the President to sign the bill.

In short, I cannot see any justification for this veto. The supplemental appropriation is a remarkably modest measure providing only the minimum amount of money needed to keep the Government running smoothly through the end of the fiscal year. It does not bust the budget, but rather it represents responsible budget policy. I will, therefore, vote in favor of overriding the President's veto.●

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, funding for title V, senior community service employment program, the Federal community jobs program for low-income elderly, continues its struggle for survival in spite of the repeated efforts by the administration to eliminate it.

On July 20, I voted with 406 of my colleagues to pass House Concurrent Resolution 278. This resolution expresses the sense of the House that the title V, senior community service employment program must be fully funded. A similar resolution also passed the Senate by a vote of 89 to 6.

The senior community service employment program employs 54,000 low-income elderly workers. In my own congressional district, I am personally aware of the great value of this program to the community and its participants. If for no other reason than this program, I urge my colleagues to vote to override the President's veto. If we do not, the senior community service employment program, including Green Thumb and Senior Aides, will lose their jobs before the end of this month. This productive program should not be eliminated.●

● Mr. ERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to override President Reagan's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill. President Reagan is misleading the American people when he claims he vetoed the supplemental funding bill because it would "bust the budget."

The President is not moving the Nation toward a balanced Federal budget. His own supplemental funding request would add $1.3 billion more to the deficit than this supplemental funding bill. The President objects to $918 million Congress added to domestic programs. But he is requesting that over $2 billion be added to a defense budget which is already bloated with unnecessary spending.

When Mr. Reagan accuses Congress of "sliding back into old spendthrift habits," he really means that the appropriations in this bill do not coincide with his own priorities. Mr. Reagan voted a bill that would keep in operation a program employing over 54,000 low-income older Americans in community service jobs. The President derided Congress for adding such unwarranted expenditures as funding for State administration of the unemployment compensation program. The President also described as "wasteful and unnecessary" increases in funds for handicapped and disadvantaged schoolchildren, financial assistance to college students, preventive health services, abandoned mine reclamation, highways and urban mass transportation.

Mr. Speaker, increased funding for these programs is not "unwarranted." It is now, when our country is in the depths of recession, when 1 in 9 Americans is unemployed, and 1.5 million are to discouraged even to look for work, that we need to sustain our investment in education and jobs and infrastructure.●

● Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the override measure before us, and wish to direct the attention of my colleagues to the inclusion in this bill of long-overdue funds for title V of the Older Americans Act, the senior community service employment program.

Mr. Speaker, the veto of this measure creates a particular crisis for the low-income senior citizens entering and reentering the work force through title V. They have already received termination slips and will be laid off by the end of this month if we fail to act today.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, which is $3.2 billion less than the budget resolution we approved, and $1.5 billion less than the administration's version of this bill, provides funds necessary to prevent title V from ending this month. Anxious title V workers, pink slips in hand, are distraught at the thought of losing their jobs, opportunities for training and private employment, and being forced back onto medicaid, food stamps, SSI, and Federal and State welfare roles. And, Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of any political strategy, of any party, which includes throwing people out of work and placing them on welfare.

Title V is a paradigm of efficiency. It has been shown to return to all levels of government $1,039 per worker in tax revenues, FICA contributions of over $1.5 million per year, and services which, if we had to hire regular part-time workers to do them, would cost us nearly double in salaries alone.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues tell me they see the logic of continuing this program which, with its 16-percent rate of profit, is now a better investment than money market funds. But they say we can put title V dollars in yet another appropriations bill.

The time has come to face up to our responsibilities. We have a myriad of other matters, including appropriations bills for fiscal year 1983, awaiting our attention. Yet we face a bill which is under budget and less than the administration's request, and again we hear mutters of "next time, next time."

This is the third time this vital appropriation has been before us, and each time we have been pressured into bouncing it back and forth between this Congress and the administration. Starting September 17, title V workers are going to be out of jobs and back on welfare, and programs will begin to spend funds to close doors a majority of Members say they intend to reopen, that is wasteful—in financial and human terms.

Mr. Speaker, this supplemental appropriations bill has become urgent, our other duties have become increasingly pressing, and the time to stop playing ping-pong with every spending measure coming before this body has arrived. I urge my colleagues to take David Stockman and the President behind the woodshed by overriding this veto.●

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my concern over the veto of the general supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 6863. At the outset, I would like to point out that this measure is $1.5 billion below the President's request.

I have been a supporter of this administration's efforts to achieve economic recovery and I will continue to do so. I support a policy of strong national defense and have consistently supported the President in the past on spending measures for the Department of Defense, including funding for foreign aid support for the Caribbean Basin which is contained in this appropriations bill. In a period of budget austerity, I do not believe, however, that we can afford to support increased defense spending at the expense of all else.

I firmly believe H.R. 6863 provided fair and adequate funding to maintain a strong defense posture, while it also recognized the importance of necessary domestic programs. I supported the original passage of H.R. 6863 because I believe it established a crucial balance in national spending priorities, while maintaining a level of funding that was $1.5 billion less than the President's request.

I agree with many of the points and programs supported by the President in the veto message, however, the President objected to several programs which I support. Of particular concern to me is the administration's request to reduce the $210.6 million funding for the senior community service employment program—a program where senior citizens assist other elderly individuals through community service. In Virginia, this translates into the loss of funding for jobs for 593 senior citizens. This figure does not even reflect, however, the scores of elderly residents who will lose the benefits offered by this community service.

I also have reservations regarding this proposal to reduce funding for education assistance. Universities nationwide are suffering due to the lack of commitment by the Congress to fund authorized student loan programs. I support these loan programs as a means of allowing young people the opportunity to attend college. I disagree with the administration's opposition to $148.8 million for educational programs designed to assist the disadvantaged, or objections to the $46.5 million appropriated for education for the handicapped.

I also disagree with the administration's position denying $39 million for the U.S. Postal Service. This will directly impact second-class mailers such as small daily and weekly newspapers and their abilities to continue to publish and distribute.

H.R. 6863 also included $112.5 million for Federal highways, $37 million for urban mass transportation, $10 million for alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health programs and $11.5 million in childhood immunization and other health programs—all of which I support.

Moreover, I feel strongly that an important factor was overlooked when the President decided to reject this bill. Some 200,000 Americans working for the Federal Government will face furloughs as a result of the President's veto if funds are not appropriated by September 15. These individuals were not targetted by the veto; however, they will be victims of furloughs without pay if these funds are not appropriated. This action poses unnecessary hardship for these employees and their families which is completely unjustified.

I believe we have the responsibility to legislate fairly and take actions to prevent the disruption of Government services and programs on which American citizens depend. I submit that we cannot afford this veto and urge the President's action on H.R. 6863 be overturned.●

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, in August, I joined with a majority of my Democratic colleagues in voting to pass the Tax Equity Act of 1982 which President Reagan had so strongly supported. Enactment of that legislation required a level of bipartisanship which has been rarely present in this body during the past 2 years.

It required Members on this side of the aisle to put aside partisan concerns and questions of political advantage, and respond, instead, to the overwhelming national interest in reduction of the Federal deficit.

Today, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are faced with a similar decision. They must put aside political considerations and recognize that the national interest requires that the veto be overridden. To vote to override the veto of a President of one's own party is a courageous act, particularly the veto of an appropriations bill which the President has made yet another symbol of his economic policies. It is an inappropriate symbol, and the Congress cannot allow it to stand in the way of the operations of the Government or the essential services upon which millions of people depend. We must pass this appropriations bill.

The President has called this bill a budget buster. It is, in fact, $1.9 billion below the request made by the President. The Senate, controlled by the President's own party, passed this bill by voice vote. The House passed it 348–67.

The President's objections are not very convincing. The bill does not give him the further increases in defense spending he sought. The defense budget is already increasing at record levels, at a time when spending on domestic programs is being slashed.

The current rate of military spending puts us on course, almost unavoidably, toward a $1.7 trillion military budget over the next 4 years. At that rate, there would not be much room in the budget for spending on any other sector of human and social needs—a dangerous and very unwise policy.

The President finds it objectionable that Congress has voted to appropriate: $211 million for jobs for older Americans; $217 million for student financial assistance; $26.5 million for handicapped education; and $20 million for advances to the unemployment trust fund.

The administration, stung by public reaction against the President's veto of funding for the community services employment for the elderly program is now attempting, clumsily to cover up that blunder by saying that it affects only the "forward funding" of this program. I have checked this matter out thoroughly and want senior citizens to know, particularly those in my district who have been outraged by this veto, that killing the foward funding means killing the older Americans jobs program altogether.

That means that if the veto is not overridden, funds for community services employment for the elderly will be cut off and the program will end on September 30—there is no second chance.

I think it is also important for the public to understand the facts about this supplemental appropriations bill. The President asked Congress for $16 billion in supplemental appropriations a few weeks ago. The Congress cut $1.9 billion from that request. We did not exceed his budget; we reduced it. It is the President's prerogative to proposes levels of spending for Government programs; it is the responsibility of Congress to determine which programs shall receive the funds and how much shall be spent on them. We made that determination and we did so responsibly, within the budget limitations, and below the level of the President's request.

I think it is also important for people to understand that money saved by cuts in spending for the programs I mentioned earlier are not being applied to reduction of the deficit. Not at all—they will just be spent in some other area of the budget. And in the case of this supplemental appropriation, it means taking from the elderly, students, the handicapped, and the jobless and increasing military spending. That is the wrong course; those are the wrong programs to cut, particularly in a year in which we have already increased military spending more than 18 percent above last year.

I urge this House to join me in overriding the President's veto. I particularly urge my colleagues across the aisle to stick to your convictions of scarcely 2 weeks ago and vote to restore funding for these programs that so urgently need your support.●

● Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I voted against passage of this same supplemental appropriation bill some 4 weeks ago, because it was over budget in a number of key areas and, I thought, contained excessive funds for foreign aid and for the sale of military weapons to foreign countries on easy credit.

In the past 4 weeks neither my feelings about this bill nor the excessive spending in this bill has changed. Therefore, I applaud the President's veto and will vote to sustain.

There is some necessary and on-budget spending in the bill that should be supported when the revised supplemental bill returns to the House. Of particular interest to me is adequate funding for title V. This program is working and ought to be supported by Congress and the President. The same is true of handicapped education.

Frankly, I was tempted to change my position to override the President's veto when I heard the President's stated reason for the veto. He said that the bill cut military spending too much. He is wrong on that issue in my opinion. The $2 billion in military savings is but a fraction of the military waste that can and should be cut.

In effect, the President did the right thing when he vetoed the bill, but for the wrong reasons. It was excessive foreign aid that he should have attacked, not a reduction in the amount of military waste.

I was pleased to hear from the White House staff today that the President would not attempt to add money back to the bill for military spending and would support title V funding.

For all these reasons I have decided to vote to sustain the veto.●

● Mr. MARKS. Mr. Speaker, the President's veto of the supplemental is a political and substantive mistake. The political error is in going back on his word to approve the supplemental if he received support for the revenue reform bill we passed before this recent recess. The support he has lost in the Congress by doing so will come back to haunt him as he continues to seek assistance in passage of his own spending priorities—such as the Caribbean Initiative, defense appropriations, and future spending cuts and revenue reform measures.

Mr. Speaker, compounding this political misjudgment is the seeking of an unnecessary confrontation with the Congress—attempting to force administration spending priorities, to the last penny, on a Congress which clearly has differing views on how much various functions and programs will receive within current budget constraints.

The substantive error represented by this veto is also two part. First, the President is not being honest with the American people when he calls this supplemental a budget buster. The totals in the bill are about $2 billion less than the President requested. This bill provides about about $8 billion less in budget authority and about $1.2 billion less in outlays than requested. This supplemental is fiscally responsible and represents our collective best judgment of how these Federal dollars should be spent. Allocating Federal funds is a congressional prerogative and constitutional duty of the first magnitude. A President should veto appropriations so strongly supported by a Congress only on the most serious grounds, not on the spurious reasoning and dubious political maneuvering this veto represents.

The second part of this substantive error is the President's obduracy in expecting a Congress to turn its back even further on the handicapped, the needy, the elderly, and students who will not attend college without this legislation.

The $148 million for education of the handicapped is needed. The $217 million for college student aid is needed. The $210 million for employment opportunities for the elderly is needed. All of these needs are far more vital than rushing advance procurement of next year's generation of weaponry into this year's supplemental. Incidentally, for Congress to do this would set a very bad fiscal precedent and I trust, if the veto is sustained, Congress will continue to refuse such advance funding as we negotiate with the administration on the next slimmer version of the supplemental.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, let me address a few remarks to a program which this administration seems determined to kill—and that is employment funding for the elderly under title V. As ranking minority member of the Health and Long-Term Care Subcommittee of the Committee on Aging, I feel very strongly about the vital necessity of preserving this valuable program.

By vetoing the supplemental the President plans to eliminate about 54,000 more jobs in the U.S. economy—and this will be done directly—the responsibility for this added unemployment cannot be placed at the door of economic bad times. These jobs and all they represent in self-respect, dignity, home care for the less ambulatory elderly, and cost-effective return in services for every Federal dollar spent must be preserved. These jobs will have been eliminated by Presidential veto.

In my own State of Pennsylvania over 2,200 jobs will be eliminated for the elderly. These senior aides are vital for the alternatives to institutionalization. They work as homemakers, home health aides. They assist in delivering meals to the bed or home ridden. They perform weatherization services and maintenance and cleaning chores in homes and at nutrition sites and senior centers.

A recent report indicates that by providing these services the Government actually benefits by hiring senior aides. For each dollar spent, aides return $1.31 in services, taxes, and so forth. These programs are clearly cost-effective—vastly more so than unguided missiles which recently attacked Danish resort areas. The value of the feeling the elderly get from giving of themselves has no dollar measurement—except that an active and involved senior citizen is far less likely to need expensive Government medical, psychological, and income supplement services.

This veto is a terrible mistake and I urge my colleagues to vote to override. Should the veto be sustained, I trust my colleagues will fashion and support a supplemental which contains no additional funds for defense and funds title V at the full level.●

● Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge quick action to override the President's veto of the supplemental appropriations bill, which contains funding for a wide range of programs vital to our citizens. These programs are in vital need of funding; many will shut down unless the veto is overridden. Already, we have seen that 19,000 IRS employees were threatened with imminent furloughs until an emergency, temporary transfer of funds was made. But this transfer is valid until only 5 days from today.

Some of the major programs included in the bill are:

Unemployment compensation: It provides for both extended unemployment benefits authorized in the recently enacted tax bill, and $20 million for program administration costs, at the State level. Extended benefits are essential for millions of American workers who were cut off from such benefits by the 1981 Reagan budget bill, which changed trigger formulas for such benefits. My own State lost eligibility for such benefits, and will get back 6 weeks worth, if this veto is overridden.

Education: $148 million is appropriated for education for disadvantaged children.

Higher education: $217 million is appropriated for college students, of which $140 million is for Pell grants, and $77 million for supplemental education opportunity grants.

Jobs for older Amercians: $211 million is appropriated for the senior community service employment program, which will have to shut down if funding is cut off. Yesterday, in Connecticut, I was told that pink slips are already being delivered to the 600 elders employed by this program. Nationwide, 54,000 senior citizens are currently participating in this meaningful, community-based service program.

Health: $122 million is appropriated to the States for the medicaid program.

Child disease immunization: $6 million is included for this program, of which $1.5 million is for tuberculosis vaccinations which should be given at the start of the school year.

Transportation: $30 million is appropriated for the Federal Railroad Administration; $37 million for the Urban Mass Transportation Administration and $133 million for interstate highways.

Handicapped education: $26.5 million is appropriated to help education programs for handicapped citizens.

I want to take a minute to make particular notice of two programs contained in the supplemental bill which are of grave concern and importance to my home State of Connecticut. First, the title V senior community service employment program employs over 600 elders living in Connecticut. While I was home over the congressional work period, I was taken aside by countless seniors who urged my continued support for title V. These seniors were both title V employees and those who they serve in the community. It was not only the elderly who spoke to me about the importance of the program; persons of all ages working in their communities, in schools, in nutrition centers, they all benefit from title V services and cannot understand the President's opposition to senior community service employment. Frankly, I do not understand it either. One would think that he would have more compassion for his peers.

If it is not the elderly who are being victimized by the President's fiscal policies, it is our Nation's children. Only yesterday, I cochaired a forum in Connecticut on the effects of the New Federalism on the children in my State. George Springer, the president of the Connecticut State Federation of Teachers, testified on cutbacks in public education support. Mr. Springer drew attention to the funding for title I, compensatory education for disadvantaged children, contained in the supplemental bill. The $148 million for title I represents the amount necessary to overcome the potential loss of funds based on either 1970 or 1980 census data. Mr. Springer noted that the children of Connecticut stand to lose $3 million in title I funds if the veto of the supplemental bill is not overridden. 4,100 disadvantaged children would lose services and over 200 staff positions would be terminated.

I wonder how the President would explain his supposed profamily stance to the 4,100 title I children and their parents in Connecticut?

In addition to these vital social programs, the bill contains funding for many Government agencies, including the Internal Revenue Service. This is particularly ironic, since the Congress just recently enacted the largest peacetime tax increase in our history, at the urging of the President, to help close the record deficits generated by the President's budgets for the next 3 fiscal years. The centerpiece of this proposal is renewed emphasis on taxpayer compliance, based on the theory that Americans who actually owe taxes should not be permitted to avoid their liability. Because IRS salaries are included in this bill, IRS employees will be furloughed again next week, unless the veto is overriden. Our efforts to increase taxpayer compliance will falter, as thousands of work hours are lost in an utterly pointless charade created by the President. Further, the furloughed employees and their families, along with the Americans who benefits from the social programs funded in the bill, should not be asked to suffer because the President seeks publicity in a showdown with Congress.

The sums involved may not seem large in terms of our $750 billion Federal budget, but they are critical to the success of the programs involved and the future of individuals who are relying on them for assistance. We must not play political games at this time when so much is riding on the ability of Congress to meet the economic challenges before us.

It is important to remember that the President did not veto this bill because the total spending in it is too high. Indeed, the amount appropriated is $1.9 billion less in outlays and $1.5 billion less in budget authority than the administration requested. The President vetoed this bill because he did not like the choices we made—he believes we chose to spend too much on social programs and too little on defense. I find it just slightly incredible that the President objects to $1.5 million for tuberculosis vaccinations at a time when we are already spending $200 billion on the Pentagon.

I believe that the House was correct in passing the conference report on this bill and funding the social programs that the President wants to cut. A massive bipartisan majority voted for this bill—by a margin of 348 to 67. Clearly, the House believes that we should not trade our children's health and education, jobs and medicaid assistance, transportation improvements, or aid to unemployed workers for unnecessary increases in defense programs. I hope that the 348 Members of the House who originally supported this bill will join me in voting to override the President's veto of this critical legislation.●

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6863, the supplemental appropriations for the balance of this fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, it strains credulity when one considers the administration's rationale for opposition to this important piece of legislation. The President's contention that the $14.2 billion supplemental appropriations measure "would bust the budget by nearly a billion dollars" is inaccurate.

According to the Congressional Budget Office H.R. 6863 is $3.2 billion less in budget authority than the budget ceiling established in the revised fiscal year 1982 budget resolution, and $1.1 billion less than the ceiling in outlays.

Thus, rather than exceeding the budget by nearly a billion dollars, the bill is more than a billion below the ceiling established by the fiscal year 1982 budget resolution which this House adopted at the urging of President Reagan.

Moreover, while the bill passed by the Congress does not bust the budget, the measure requested by the administration would. According to the latest budget estimates by the CBO, the President's request would exceed the budget outlay ceiling contained in the fiscal year 1982 budget resolution by more than $250 million.

Finally, the facts also refute the President's contention that the bill would "undermine the confidence crucial to continue the reductions in deficits and interest rates." "H.R. 6863 is $1.5 billion less than the President's request in budget authority and $1.3 billion less than the request in outlays.

Therefore, the President's request, not the bill passed by the Congress, would be more likely to undermine confidence. It's request for $1.3 billion more in outlays would increase the deficit by that much more.

What the President has also objected to is that the Congress has set its own priorities and did not reflect his supplemental request on a program by program basis. I believe that the decision made by this House to modestly correct come of the problems inadvertently created by the cutbacks being made in domestic programs—older workers programs, compensatory education for the disadvantaged, student financial aid, among others—is the right decision. The House confirmed this position when it voted 348 to 67 on August 18 to pass the conference agreement to this bill.

Specifically, the bill before us today includes funding for the senior community service employment program, which employs approximately 54,200 low-income elderly. This cost effective and valuable program faces being shut down unless the $211 million contained in this bill is quickly approved. The bill includes funding for school districts which have had increases in the number of disadvantaged students who qualify for special aid. If this funding is not made available soon, school districts throughout the country will be unable to pay for this program. The bill also includes necessary funding for handicapped education programs and student financial assistance which has been cut very sharply in the past. Finally, it includes the new Federal supplemental extended unemployment benefits which were authorized in the tax and entitlement reconciliation bill passed last month. While money to pay benefits may be temporarily borrowed from the UI trust fund, the $20 million for staff to receive and process the claims will be lost, resulting insufficient administrative capacity for the program.

This is not a budget busting bill by any stretch of the imagination; and the priorities which are established in this legislation simply reflect a continuation of the highest national priorities this Congress and the American people have clearly mandated. I urge all of you to support this important commitment and vote to override the President's veto.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to join with me in rejecting President Reagan's veto of this supplemental funding bill, H.R. 6863. The reasons why we should do this are numerous and compelling.

First and foremost, contained in this bill is funding for the title V senior community service employment program. If this program does not receive additional funding—$211 million contained in this bill, the program will terminate the end of this month and all 54,200 older workers currently employed will be fired.

As one of the original sponsors of the Older Americans Act amendments of last year which extended this program through 1985, I know firsthand the value and the merits of this program. I also feel that I do not need to reiterate its merits to my colleagues here as I am confident that title V workers have made themselves known in their communities and known to their representatives. Thousands of these workers, fearful that they will lose the very jobs which allow them to maintain a modest degree of self-sufficiency, are letting their voices be heard—and heard in a big way. We have heard how these workers provide nutritions services, home health services, and a variety of other support services to their elderly peers. We have heard how they assist in senior centers, in libraries, in hospitals, and in homes. We know that if we lose this vote, these 54,200 low-income elderly workers will be forced into public welfare rolls into lives of dependency and never-ending poverty.

It is essential to provide for funding of this program now in order to continue it to the end of its program year, June 1983. The authorizing legislation, signed by President Reagan last year, provides for forward funding of this program in order to allow for planning on the part of sponsors and participants. Any attempt to include funding for this program in a 1983 funding bill will be a clear violation of the statute and would result in a 9-month delay of the program until July 1983. Clearly, such a move would, in all practicality, end the program on September 30 of this month for sponsors would be required to close out programs until they receive funds next year. The problem is now—and funding this program now in a fiscal 1982 appropriations bill is the only way we can assure that this program will continue in an orderly fashion. Mere rhetoric in support of this program on the part of the administration will not assure its funding. Unless Congress appropriates the money now, the words of support will be rendered meaningless to the thousands of elderly now depending on this program.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I also wish to insert into the RECORD a listing of the kinds of services that are provided by senior workers in the title V program to other seniors. I would point out that nearly half the enrollees are providing direct services to the elderly nationwide. I am also including a listing of funding of this program by State as well as the number of senior workers employed in each State.

In my dual capacity as a member of the Education and Labor Committee and the Select Committee on Aging, my commitment to this program is based upon my personal knowledge of its effectiveness and its importance to older workers. It is the only employment program that we have for older workers. It is also one of our most cost-effective employment programs—returning $4 for every Federal $1 spent. Finally, it is the only employment program for the elderly which allows them to maintain a productive role in their towns and communities instead of being forced to rely on income support programs such as food stamps and SSI.

Congress overwhelmingly adopted House Concurrent Resolution 278 last month expressing its full support for the title V program at current funding levels. This resolution was adopted by a vote of 407 to 4 in the House. It is high time that we back this vote with this vote to override. If not, mere words and expressions of support will not keep these workers on the rolls. Already pink slips have been sent out and already horror stories are surfacing of seniors having heart attacks and other illness related to tension and stress of being fired from their jobs. Clearly we must act and act now in order to avert the true terror which will rise if we fail to provide money for title V.

I also wish to note the importance of the $169 million provided for Pell grants and the $148 million provided for title I funding in this bill. Mr. Speaker, no other social programs have faced the kinds of cuts which our education programs have received. These funds will provide modest relief to students and schools who depend on these programs. The Pell grant program—targeted toward our neediest college students—and the title I program—targeted toward our neediest elementary and secondary students—must be maintained at current services. This appropriation will allow for that continuation.

Recent reports have indicated that as a result of last year's draconian cuts in student aid programs, public colleges are witnessing a dramatic increase in enrollments for this fall. Private institutions are increasingly hard-pressed to provide aid to needy students and Pell grants provide the bulk of aid to this group if we cut this program any further, we risk returning our private colleges and universities into bastions for the rich—which they once were.

Another consequence of our failure to override will be a fiscal crisis of tremendous proportion in the Coast Guard. At issue in dollar terms is some $33 million in essential funds to permit the Coast Guard simply to function at present levels. According to a report in today's New York Post the headline reads "Cash Crisis May Spark Coast Guard Layoffs, 750 Civilians Here Are Facing the Ax." I am a former chairman of the Coast Guard and Navigation Subcommittee of this House and I remain a full-fledged supporter of the outstanding work which the Coast Guard performs on a regular basis for the people of this Nation. It is not fair to subject the uniformed or civilian employees of the Coast Guard to this game of fiscal roulette. I believe the damage which will be done to the Coast Guard if the veto is sustained provides still another reason to vote to override.

I urge my colleagues to vote to override this unfortunate veto and not allow many worthwhile programs to be terminated without cause.

TITLE V AND SERVICES TO THE ELDERLY

If title V of the Older Americans Act were not continued beyond September 30, 1982, States and communities would lose valuable services being provided to the population in general, and to older people in particular. As of the end of the last program year for which data are available (June 1981), just about half, or 27,935 enrollees, were providing services to the elderly nationwide.

The following table shows how many title V enrollees were serving older people in each state, and, among those, how many were working in the extremely important areas of nutrition and of "health and home care."

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1982—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WRIGHT), the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, about 3 weeks ago 130 Members of the Republican side voted for this bill.

□ 1540

On that day, August 18, 130 of the Members—70 percent of the Republicans in the House—voted for the students, voted for the elderly, voted for the handicapped, voted for the programs that make money possible to cure childhood diseases through immunization.

In a very few minutes, we are going to find out how many of the Members meant it, how many are serious about it, and how many are going to back their own convictions or how many are going to let the White House lead them around with a ring in their nose like a prize bull at the county fair.

Just about 6 weeks ago, on July 20, 406 Members of this House voted for a resolution, bravely voted for a resolution saying that title V ought to be fully funded—fully, fully funded. The House voted for that last December and the President demanded it be taken out of the supplemental bill. He said it will go into the first supplemental this year. We put it in the first supplemental this year. He took it out again. He said we will put it in the next supplemental. We put it in the next supplemental. He said take it out now, sustain my veto, and we will do it some other time.

The warm smile, the gracious manner, and the cold heart that embraced the leaders of the Congress so warmly in such a high sounding tribute to bipartisanship and unity in the Rose Garden, 1 week later went out of its way to pick an unnecessary fight with the Congress. He did not have to. A phony charge. Every one of us knows that it does not have anything to do with budget busting. Every one of us knows the President asked almost $2 billion more be spent than we appropriated in this bill. So it is a phony charge, as phony as a three dollar bill to say that the Congress is budget busting.

What he wants to do is take money away from the students, take money away from the elderly, take money away from the children and the programs that will immunize them against diphtheria and typhoid and other diseases and give it to the military.

I am for military readiness, but we have increased military strength by 19 percent this year. We have added $36 billion over last year, and we have already cut educational programs by 25 percent. It is a question of priorities and it is a question of whether you meant it when you vetoed your convictions for this bill.

If half of the Members on the Republican side stand by their convictions of 3 weeks ago, we will override the veto, and once again we will demonstrate that a responsible Congress is capable of conducting the public debt.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. O'NEILL).

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to override the President's veto. Less than a month ago I joined with the President in support of his tax bill. Partisan differences were set aside. Election considerations were overcome. Democrats and Republicans did, in my opinion, what was best for the Nation. The response from the financial markets of this display of unity was immediate and overwhelming. The stock market gave this country its first good economic news in a long time.

Today I rise in opposition to the President because he has chosen to break that spirit of cooperation over the Congress decision to fund jobs for the elderly, loans for the students, and education for the poor.

This bill is not, as the President claims, a budget buster. It is a billion and a half dollars less than he requested, most of the savings coming out of defense in a fiscal year when we have appropriated nearly 20 percent more for defense than we did last year.

By vetoing this measure, the President wants us to make a choice between weapons and handicapped children. Well, we do not have to accept this. We have made our choices, responsible choices, fair choices and I say let us stick to them.

Most of the Members have seen the television program the last couple of nights on title V and what it does to the older Americans is brutal. One would have to be a glib-tongued, effervescent personality, and have a heart of stone, to be able to vote against the title V program shown on the television the last couple of nights.

I say to the Members, I could outline the whole bill. The majority leader on my side I believe has done an excellent job. I say to the Members on my side, 16 of the Members voted against this bill originally. I believe we are going to perhaps have no more than the same 16.

Over on that side, 130 Republicans saw fit to do what they thought in their heart and their mind and their conscience was the right thing for America, last month, they knew that we had gone too far in the budget cuts previously.

Today, I am asking the Members as a leader in this House to stay with their conscience, to stay with their will, to stay with their high principles, to stay with those who need it the most in this country; and if 50 percent of the Republican Members who voted for this bill will vote to override the President's veto, then it is a victory for America.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEILL. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. FENWICK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to honor the gentleman from Massachusetts for his words. This is the attitude and these are the thoughts that will certainly move us to a bipartisan motion that we consider in the interests of the people. I think we cannot have, and I was sorry to hear some of the cheers for some of the remarks concerning our President. It is not in that spirit that we will work for the public good.

I thank the Speaker.

Mr. O'NEILL. I want to thank the gentlewoman and I want to leave the Members with this: Let us not leave the elderly, the handicapped, the physically disabled behind. This is our opportunity to do a good deed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time to conclude the debate, by pointing out what in my mind is more significant than anything that has been said heretofore.

The President asked for some $16 billion in appropriations, about 84 percent of which is required by law. We cut $1.9 billion. It cannot be said that we are exceeding the budget.

The President in his veto message points out that we cut the military. Now he says that they do not want that restored. So it comes back to whether we are going to stand up for our rights and meet the obligations that we have as Members of the legislative body, because this bill is not a budget buster; it is below the budget.

Throughout the year, I have had letters from the Office of Management and Budget demanding the right to control funding of items which are in the hands of the people's branch of the Congress. As I look at the veto message, listen to this:

The bill also unnecessarily restricts the executive branch from exercising its authority to allocate funds appropriated by the Congress.

We must fight to keep the rights of the people located in the House of Representatives, the people's branch of the Government. I do not believe any man in history has supported a President in his requests any more than I have.

May I say that I myself do not support everything in this bill. There are a number of items different from what I might prefer. I opposed the Caribbean Basin additions and I shall vote against legislation to be recommended. But when it comes to sacrificing to the executive branch, or through the President, to his Office of Management and Budget, the right to determine specific items to be funded, I must say no.

Again the President is within his rights under the Constitution to say how much; but it is up to the Congress to say what for.

I urge you to vote to override this veto, which provides much-needed funds while staying within the budget, and protecting our rights as legislators.

Thank you.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CONTE. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, is a yes vote a vote to override?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A yes vote is a vote to pass the bill.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Under the Constitution, this vote must be determined by the yeas and nays.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 301, nays 117, not voting 15, as follows:

ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATION FOR JAMES MADISON BUILDING

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 556 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 556

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order, section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) to the contrary notwithstanding, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6666) to amend the joint resolution of October 19, 1965, to provide additional authorization for the Library of Congress James Madison Memorial Building, and the first reading of the bill shall be despensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

□ 1610

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TAYLOR), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 556 provides for the consideration of H.R. 6666, to increase the construction authorization for the James Madison Building of the Library of Congress. It is a simple open rule providing 1 hour of general debate divided equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Public Works and Transportation Committee. A waiver of section 402(a) of the Budget Act is provided because H.R. 6666 constitutes an authorization bill that was reported after May 15 of the fiscal year preceding that for which the authorization is made.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6666 increases the construction authorization for the James Madison Building of the Library of Congress from $130,675,000 to $139,200,000. This additional amount—$8.5 million—will be used to settle a claim by the J. W. Bateson Co., Inc., one of the building's construction contractors, for losses incurred because of alleged "Government delays." The original claim was for more than $20 million.

The Architect of the Capitol contends that the delays were primarily caused by the deficiencies, errors, and omissions of associate architects. The Justice Department has filed suit against the associate architects to recover approximately one-third of the cost of delays.

It is the opinion of the Architect of the Capitol that this agreement will obviate lengthy and costly negotiations and facilitate litigation against the associate architects.

Mr. Speaker, this is a noncontroversial rule and I urge its expeditious approval. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 556 is a 1-hour open rule under which the House will consider legislation to increase the authorization for construction of the James Madison Building of the Library of Congress.

This rule contains one waiver, that of section 402(a) of the Budget Act, in order to allow the House to consider the bill, H.R. 6666. That section of the Budget Act requires legislation containing new budget authority to be reported from committee by May 15 of the preceding fiscal year. In this instance, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation did not report H.R. 6666 until July 28.

In addition to the necessary waiver, this rule provides one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order legislation that will increase the cost of construction of the James Madison Building by $8.5 million. This amount is in addition to the $130.6 million we have already spent on the new building.

During our hearing in the Committee on Rules, we were told that this additional $8.5 million will be used to pay off a claim against the Government for losses to one of the building contractors, the J. W. Bateson Co., Inc., allegedly caused by Government delay.

The legislation represents an attempt by the Committee on Public Works to put our stamp of approval on an agreement negotiated between the Architect of the Capitol and the Bateson Co.

There was no controversy about the need for this legislation in the Rules Committee, and I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NELSON). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 6666, with Mr. BONIOR of Michigan in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FARY) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. STANGELAND) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FARY).

Mr. FARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 6666 increases the authorized limit of cost for the James Madison Memorial Library from $130,675,000 to $139,200,000, or an increase of $8,525,000. Mr. Chairman, the James Madison Memorial Library of Congress Building was accepted for beneficial occupancy commencing in April 1979 and full occupancy will be concluded during fiscal year 1982. The building is substantially complete with the exception of the so-called punch list and warranty items and the decorative screen to be installed at the front of the Madison Building.

Mr. Chairman, in 1980, George White, Architect of the Capitol, had requested a $10-million increase in the authorized limit of cost for this project. However, at that time, the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation determined that the request should be brought up at a later time due to the fact that the contractor's (J. W. Bateson Co., Inc.) delay claim amount was indeterminate.

On June 1, 1982, the Architect of the Capitol wrote to the chairman of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the Honorable JAMES J. HOWARD, stating that a proposed settlement with the contractor for $8,525,000 was in place, and as such, requested that legislation be introduced immediately. I would like to point out that the initial contractor's delay claim demanded a total of $23.5 million. However, after in-depth negotiations between the Architect and the contractor, on December 9, 1981, these efforts culminated in a settlement by letter of the entire delay claim for the lump-sum figure of $8,525,000. I do want to point out to the House that the letter agreement signed by Mr. White and the contractor did acknowledge that the Government was liable for delay claim in the amount of $8,525,000, and further, that if funds were not paid to the contractor by July 1, 1982, the contractor would have the right to commence legal action on the unpaid portion of the claim in the U.S. Court of claims, in order to protect his interests and to assure that interest on the agreed amount would commence to run at the then current U.S. Treasury rate. Yesterday, the Architect of the Capitol advised the committee that the delay claim in the amount of $8,525,000 which is listed in the committee report was wrong; that in fact on January 7, 1982, the Architect's Office had paid $385,000 to the Mills Co., a subcontractor, due to the fact that the company was ready to file for bankruptcy unless the money due them was paid. In light of this new fact, I do have an amendment at the desk which will reduce the amount of funds sought in this authorization from $8,525,000 to $8,140,000. Thus, the new figure providing for the total construction of the James Madison Memorial Library Building will be $138,815,000. I have checked further with the Architect's Office to make sure that no other portion of this claim has been paid, and the Architect advised that no other portion of the claim has been paid, and when it is paid, it will be in one lump sum.

The Architect of the Capitol states that a major causative factor in the lengthy and costly delays incurred on this project was the inordinate number of design deficiencies, delays, and errors or omissions of the associate architects. This matter has been referred to the Department of Justice and suit has been filed against the associate architects seeking to recover approximately one-third of the amount the Government has been forced to pay as a result of delays on the project. While any recovery in such an action will not be returnable directly to the project appropriation, it will go directly to the Treasury and will, therefore, serve to offset to some extent the cost of this proposed settlement.

Mr. Chairman, to conclude, this proposed settlement with the contractor has the effect of bringing to an end a series of lengthy, and of course, costly negotiations, and appears to be fair to all concerned. It also obviates the need for resort to protracted litigation by the contractor, which could lay the Government open to a potentially heavy judgment, plus whatever interest would accrue thereon.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of H.R. 6666, as proposed to be amended by the amendment at the desk.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my support for this legislation which would increase the authorization ceiling for the Library of Congress James Madison Memorial Building. This additional funding is necessary to satisfy various delay claims now pending against the Government that arose during construction of this building. It is my belief that the funding level in this legislation as it will be amended by the Committee is fair and provides both the Government and the contractor a reasonable and acceptable compromise.

This in not to say that the prior history of price escalations on this project is one which we should be proud. In 1965, $75 million was authorized and, should we approve H.R. 6666, the authorization ceiling will be close to double what we originally authorized.

Despite these huge cost overruns and escalations, I firmly believe that we must honor our commitments and reimburse the contractor for delays on this project caused by government action or inaction. I would like to emphasize that before any of these claims are paid, they are validated by the Government to insure their accuracy.

For example, initially a total of 616 days of Government-caused delay were alleged. Subsequently, this has been lowered to an agreed-upon figure of 375 days of delays. Similarly, as has been previously pointed out, a total of $23.5 million was demanded originally but since that time, the Architect of the Capitol and the contractor have reached an agreement on a negotiated lump-sum figure.

Finally, I would like to join with my chairman and urge that the Department of Justice should continue actively to pursue its investigation regarding any inordinate number of design deficiencies, delays, errors, and omissions by the associate architects for this project. Any recovery will then be able to be used to offset the amount the Government has been forced to pay as a result of project delays.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANGELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, could the gentleman confirm the figures in the report here? As I understand, when this building was first authorized in 1965, we authorized an appropriation of $75 million to construct the building; is that correct?

Mr. STANGELAND. Yes; that is correct. The initial authorization was for $75 million.

On March 16, 1970, there was an additional authorization bringing it up to $90 million.

On February 27, 1976, there was an additional authorization bringing it up to $123 million.

On October 30, 1978, there was an authorization of up to $130,675,000. This authorization would bring the total cost of the Madison Library to about $138 million.

Mr. WALKER. What we have virtually done is doubled the cost of this building from the time that it was first proposed; is that correct?

Mr. STANGELAND. Basically that is correct; yes.

Mr. WALKER. This final $8.5 million is basically to pay cost overruns; is that correct?

Mr. STANGELAND. I think that would be correct. I was not here. The gentleman was not here. I do not know my memory serves me exactly correctly. This building was initially authorized perhaps as a House office building. There was a dispute and a determination that there was a need for an addition to the Library of Congress. There were a great number of design changes because as an office building, it would have been constructed in one fashion; as a library, with the load weight the floors had to carry, it needed a different type of construction.

Some of this increase was because there was a change in how that building was to be utilized after completion.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman. I was here as an aide at that time. I remember that controversy well. It was originally authorized I think as a library building. Then there was talk it was going to become a House building. Then it went back to a library building. There was quite a bit of discussion about that.

Nevertheless, what we have here is a doubling of the cost. It seems to me now to come in at a time when we have a budget crunch to say that we are authorizing another $8.5 million to pay some of these cost overruns is a little tough on the taxpayers.

I for one am going to vote against the bill.

I thank the gentleman for responding.

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this legislation.

This legislation represents the fourth cost overrun for this project. This is the fifth time this Committee has been on the floor seeking funds for this project, and each time the funding requested was to be the full amount required to complete the project.

In 1965 the Congress authorized $75 million to construct the Madison Library. In 1970 the Congress revised that to $90 million. In 1976 we raised it to $123 million. In 1978 we raised it to $130.7 million. And now in 1982 we are asked to raise it again to $139.2 million.

I was chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds in 1978 when the authorization for this project was last considered. Given the past history of cost overruns for the project, we scrutinized what was then a request for an additional $10 million. I worked very closely on this matter with my colleague, the since-retired ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the Honorable Bill Walsh of New York. We both felt that the request before us has to be trimmed to only those items for which the Architect of the Capitol had been able to show specific justification. Accordingly, we reduced the request to $7.67 million. And furthermore, both Mr. Walsh and I felt it was imperative that we put all concerned on notice that this would be the last request which would be permitted, and that those managing the project should conduct their business accordingly.

We made our position very clear in marking up this legislation in subcommittee in 1978. Mr. Walsh stated:

First, I want it stated in the record and understood in this Committee that this is the last request for funds that I would participate in for this project. I would hope that in the future, those people associated with this project can be more cost-conscious, and this Committee will exercise tighter control in order to prevent such cost overruns as we have experienced in this project.

I added my own commitment: "let it be clearly understood by all parties involved in this project that this is, in fact, the last request."

I will not go back on that commitment today. This authorization is not required. The request today is for an additional $8.5 million to settle contractor delay claims against the Architect of the Capitol. I have no idea whether such claims are justified or not. But they are best adjudicated through the normal Court of Claims process. If they are found to be justified, the Court of Claims may order them paid without legislative authorization. And if they are not justified, we will have saved the taxpayer some money. I think the taxpayer would be best protected by having both the Architect of the Capitol and the contractors present their respective cases in open court.

I therefore oppose the bill.●

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6666, a bill to provide an additional authorization of $8,525,000 for the Library of Congress James Madison Memorial Building.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FARY), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, for his fine presentation of this legislation to the House today. I would also like to thank the ranking minority member of the full committee (Mr. CLAUSEN), and the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds (Mr. STANGELAND), for their hard work and bipartisan support on this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, as my colleagues are aware, Congress authorized the Architect of the Capitol to construct the Library of Congress James Madison Memorial Building in 1985 at a cost of $75 million. On three different occasions, Congress found it necessary to increase the cost, whereby, today the authorized ceiling is set at $130,675,000. This legislation as proposed to be amended will increase the ceiling to $138,815,000. Today, I am pleased to state this will be the last time Congress will have to deal with this matter. The moneys incorporated in this legislation will finally bring to completion the outstanding delay claim filed by the contractor. The Architect of the Capitol had requested funding for this purpose in 1980, however, our committee felt it wise to hold up on an authorization until Mr. White had an opportunity to establish what the precise amount would be. I am pleased to point out that the initial claim filed by the contractor in 1978, demanded a total of $23,532,928, and only after lengthy negotiations, the contractor and the architect of the Capitol have agreed to a settlement of the entire delay claim in the amount of $8,525,000.

It should be noted that the Government has filed a law suit against the architects of the Madison Library Building alleging design deficiencies which ultimately led to delays being incurred by the contractor. The Architect of the Capitol has advised the Department of Justice has filed suit against the architects, and it is anticipated approximately $2 million to $3 million will be recovered by the Government.

To conclude, the Architect of the Capitol has assured the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, that by agreeing to this proposed settlement with the contractor, J. W. Bateson Co., Inc., that enactment of this legislation will bring to an end the lengthy and costly negotiations with Bateson and its subcontractors. It also avoids protracted litigation which could be potentially more costly for the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of H.R. 6666 as proposed to be amended.●

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FARY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6666

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the Architect of the Capitol to construct the third Library of Congress building in square 732 in the District of Columbia to be named the James Madison Memorial Building and to contain a Madison Memorial Hall, and for other purposes" approved October 19, 1965 (79 Stat. 986; Public Law 89-260), is amended by striking out "$130,675,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$139,200,000".

□ 1700

Mr. FARY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FARY

Mr. FARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FARY: Page 2, line 6, strike out "$139,200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$138,815,000".

Mr. FARY. Mr. Chairman, yesterday, the Architect of the Capitol advised the committee that the delay claim in the amount of $8,525,000 which is listed in the committee report was wrong; that in fact on January 7, 1982, the Architect's office had paid $385,000 to the Mills Co., a subcontractor, due to the fact that the company was ready to file for bankruptcy unless the money due them was paid. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the amendment at the desk will authorize $8,140,000 to be appropriated which takes into account the $385,000 which has already been paid. Thus, the new figure providing for the total construction of the James Madison Memorial Library Building will be $138,815,000.

I have checked further with the Architect's office to make sure that any other portion of this claim has not been paid, and the Architect advises that no other portion has been paid, and when it is paid, it will be in one lump sum.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment to reduce the authorized limit in this legislation by $385,000. At this time I would like to express my displeasure that the committee has been made aware of this needed reduction at such a late date. It appears that one of the pending delay claims has already been satisfied by the Architect and that the authorization in H.R. 6666 has not been reduced correspondingly. I would hope that in the future the Architect of the Capitol would keep this committee updated on all developments of the legislation he has pending before us so that we can avoid wasting the time and effort of the Members on matters that should be resolved at the committee level.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FARY).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments? If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BINGHAM) having assumed the chair, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6666) to amend the joint resolution of October 19, 1965, to provide additional authorization for the Library of Congress James Madison Memorial Building, pursuant to House Resolution 556, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 188, nays 186, not voting 58, as follows:

Ms. OAKAR, and Messrs, NELSON, D'AMOURS, NEAL, NELSON, FOUNTAIN, and WORTLEY changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. AuCOIN changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

TERRITORIAL OMNIBUS BILL

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5139) to authorize appropriations for certain insular areas of the United States, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the House amendment to the Senate amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amendment of the Senate to H.R. 5139, strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

TITLE I—GUAM

SEC. 101. Section 7 of the Organic Act of Guam (64 Stat. 384, 487), as amended, is revised to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a) The people of Guam shall have the right of initiative and referendum, to be exercised under conditions and procedures specified in the laws of Guam.

"(b) Any Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or member of the legislature of Guam may be removed from office by a referendum election in which at least two-thirds of the number of persons voting for such official in the last preceding general election at which such official was elected vote in favor of recall and in which those so voting constitute a majority of all those participating in such referendum election. The referendum election shall be initiated by the legislature of Guam following (a) a two-thirds vote of the members of the legislature in favor of a referendum, or (b) petition for such a referendum to the legislature by registered voters equal in number to at least 50 per centum of the whole number of votes cast at the last general election at which such official was elected preceding the filing of the petition.".

SEC. 102. Section 1(a)(1) of Public Law 95-348 (92 Stat. 487) is amended by deleting "involved." and inserting in lieu thereof "involved, and $6,052,000 for fiscal year 1983, such sums to remain available until expended.".

SEC. 103. Section 205 of Public Law 95-134 (91 Stat. 1159, 1162), as amended by subsection 1(d) of Public Law 95-348 (92 Stat. 487, 488), is further amended by deleting "Medical Center of the Marianas:" and inserting in lieu thereof "Medical Center of the Marianas, to renovate, maintain, and operate the Guam Memorial Hospital, and to construct, maintain, and operate a health care facility in the northern part of Guam:".

SEC. 104. The Organic Act of Guam (64 Stat. 384), as amended, is further amended—

(a) by deleting the first sentence of the sixth paragraph of section 6, as amended (82 Stat. 842, 843), and substituting the following: "The Governor shall prepare, publish, and submit to the Congress and the Secretary of the Interior a comprehensive annual financial report in conformance with the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting within one hundred and twenty days after the close of the fiscal year. The comprehensive annual financial report shall include statistical data as set forth in the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting relating to the physical, economic, social, and political characteristics of the government, and any other information required by the Congress. The Governor shall transmit the comprehensive annual financial report to the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior who shall audit it and report his findings to the Congress. The Governor shall also make such other reports at such other times as may be required by the Congress or under applicable Federal law. He shall also submit to the Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, and the cognizant Federal auditors a written statement of actions taken or contemplated on Federal audit recommendations within sixty days after the issuance date of the audit report."; and

(b) by deleting section 9-A (82 Stat. 842, 845), as amended (91 Stat. 1159, 1161), in its entirety, and inserting in lieu thereof the following new section 9-A:

SEC. 9-A. (a) The following functions, powers, and duties heretofore vested in the government comptroller for Guam are hereby transferred to the Inspector General, Department of the Interior, for the purpose of establishing an organization which will maintain a satisfactory level of independent audit oversight of the government of Guam:

"(1) The authority to audit all accounts pertaining to the revenue and receipts of the government of Guam, and of funds derived from bond issues, and the authority to audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds and property pertaining to the government of Guam including those pertaining to trust funds held by the government of Guam.

"(2) The authority to report to the Secretary of the Interior and the Governor of Guam all failures to collect amounts due the government, and expenditures of funds or uses of property which are irregular or not pursuant to law.

"(b) The authority granted in paragraph (a) shall extend to all activities of the government of Guam, and shall be in addition to the authority conferred upon the Inspector General Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 1101), as amended.

"(c) In order to carry out the provisions of this section, the personnel, assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available or to be made available, of the office of the government comptroller for Guam related to its audit function are hereby transferred to the Office of Inspector General, Department of the Interior.

TITLE II—TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

SEC. 201. In section 402(a) of Public Law 96-597 (94 Stat. 3478) strike "by October 1, 1982," and insert in lieu thereof: "by a date not later than ninety days following termination of the trusteeship agreement governing the administration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,".

SEC. 202. (1) The Act of June 13, 1975, (89 Stat. 212) is amended by inserting the following language before the last sentence:

"The corpus, income of, or distributions from such trust, or distributions to the beneficiaries of such trust shall not be subject to any form of United States Federal, state, or local taxation.".

(2) The corpus, income of, or distributions from the Ujelang Trust Fund numbered 2 (established by the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands), or distributions to the beneficiaries of such trust fund shall not be subject to any form of United States Federal, state, or local taxation.

SEC. 203. The Act of March 21, 1972 (86 Stat. 87), relating to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is amended—

(a) by amending section 5 (86 Stat. 88), to read: "The chief executives of the governments of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, Palau, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall prepare, publish, and submit to the Congress and the Secretary of the Interior a comprehensive annual financial report in conformance with the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting within one hundred and twenty days after the close of the fiscal year. The comprehensive annual financial report shall include statistical data as set forth in the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting relating to the physical, economic, social, and political characteristics of the government, and any other information required by the Congress. The chief executives shall transmit the comprehensive annual financial report to the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior who shall audit it and report his findings to the Congress. The chief executives shall also make such other reports at such other times as may be required by the Congress or under applicable Federal laws. The chief executives shall submit to the Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the cognizant Federal auditors a written statement of actions taken or contemplated on Federal audit recommendations within sixty days after the issuance date of the audit report. This section is not subject to termination under section 502(a)(3) of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (90 Stat. 263, 268).".

(b) by deleting section 4 of the Act of June 30, 1954 (68 Stat. 330), as amended (87 Stat. 354; 91 Stat. 1162; 94 Stat. 85), in its entirety, and inserting in lieu thereof the following new section 4:

SEC. 4. (a) The following functions, powers, and duties heretofore vested in the government comptroller for Guam with respect to the government of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the government of the Northern Mariana Islands are hereby transferred to the Inspector General, Department of the Interior, for the purpose of establishing an organization which will maintain a satisfactory level of independent audit oversight of the governments of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, Palau, and the Northern Mariana Islands:

"(1) The authority to audit all accounts pertaining to the revenue and receipts of the governments of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, Palau, and the Northern Mariana Islands, and of funds derived from bond issues, and the authority to audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds and property pertaining to the aforementioned governments including those pertaining to trust funds held by such governments.

"(2) The authority to report to the Secretary of the Interior, the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the chief executives of the governments of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, Palau, and the Northern Mariana Islands all failures to collect amounts due the governments, and expenditures of funds or uses of property which are irregular or not pursuant to law.

"(b) The authority granted in paragraph (a) shall extend to all activities of the governments of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, Palau, and the Northern Mariana Islands, and shall be in addition to the authority conferred upon the Inspector General by the Inspector General Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 1101), as amended. This section is not subject to termination under section 502(a)(3) of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (90 Stat. 263,268).

"(c) In order to carry out the provisions of this section, the personnel, assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available or to be made available, of the office of the government comptroller for Guam related to its audit function, with respect to the government of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the government of the Northern Mariana Islands are hereby transferred to the Office of Inspector General, Department of the Interior.".

(d) Section 201(a) of Public Law 96-205 (94 Stat. 85), is hereby repealed in its entirety.

SEC. 204. (a) That the Northern Mariana Islands shall not be considered a foreign country for purposes of subsection (k) of section 2680 of title 28, United States Code.

(b) This Section shall expire upon the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

SEC. 205. The Secretary shall conduct, upon request of the affected regional governments and through the Director of the National Park Service, a comprehensive inventory and study of the most unique and significant natural, historical, cultural and recreational resources of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (specifically composed of the Mariana, Caroline and Marshall Islands). Areas or sites exhibiting such qualities shall be described and evaluated with the objective of the preservation of their values and their careful use and appreciation by the public, along with a determination of their potential for attracting tourism. Alternative methodologies for such preservation and use shall be developed for each area or site (including continued assistance from the National Park Service); current or impending damage or threats to the resources of such areas or sites shall be identified and evaluated; and authorities needed to properly protect and allow for public use and appreciation shall be identified and discussed. Such inventory and study shall be conducted in full cooperation and consultation with affected governmental officials and the interested public. The inventory and study shall also identify areas or sites which qualify to be listed on the Registry of Natural Landmarks and the National Register of Historic Places. A full report on such inventory and study shall be transmitted to the respectively involved governments, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the U.S. House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate no later than two complete calendar years after the effective date of this Act.

TITLE III—VIRGIN ISLANDS

SEC. 301. (a) Effective October 1, 1982, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Interior $150,000 for to be paid as a grant to the government of the Virgin Islands for use by the College of the Virgin Islands to study and plan for the creation of an institution for Caribbean educational, cultural, and technical interchange.

(b) The Secretary may place such stipulations as he deems appropriate on the use of funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) of this section.

(c) Grant funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) but not obligated or expended during the fiscal year in which they are appropriated shall remain available for obligation or expenditure in subsequent fiscal years.

SEC. 302. Section 405 of Public Law 96-205 (94 Stat. 84, 89) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The officials of the Customs and Postal Services of the United States are directed to assist the appropriate officials of the United States Virgin Islands in the collection of these taxes.".

(g) The Act of June 30, 1949, as amended (63 Stat. 350; 48 U.S.C. 1407 to 1407i); Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall affect the pension rights of former employees of the Virgin Islands Corporation.

(h) The Act of October 29, 1951 (65 Stat. 661; 48 U.S.C. 1409m through 1409o).

(i) Section 30 of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands (68 Stat. 509; 48 U.S.C. 1544).

(j) Section 4 of the Act of August 19, 1976 (90 Stat. 1195; 48 U.S.C. 1574d).

SEC. 310. The Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands (68 Stat. 497), as amended, is further amended—

(a) by amending the fourth paragraph of section 11 (68 Stat. 503), as amended (82 Stat. 837, 838), to read: "The Governor shall prepare, publish, and submit to the Congress and the Secretary of the Interior a comprehensive annual financial report in conformance with the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting within one hundred and twenty days after the close of the fiscal year. The comprehensive annual financial report shall include statistical data as set forth in the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting relating to the physical, economic, social, and political characteristics of the government, and any other information required by the Congress. The Governor shall transmit the comprehensive annual financial report to the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior who shall audit it and report his findings to the Congress. The Governor shall also make such other reports at such other times as may be required by the Congress or under applicable Federal law. He shall also submit to the Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, and the cognizant Federal auditors a written statement of actions taken or contemplated on Federal audit recommendations within sixty days after the issuance date of the audit report. He shall have the power to issue executive orders and regulations not in conflict with any applicable law. He may recommend bills to the legislature and give expression to his views on any matter before that body."; and

(b) by deleting section 17 (68 Stat. 505), as amended (72 Stat. 1094; 76 Stat. 43; 82 Stat. 840; 91 Stat. 1162), in its entirety, and inserting in lieu thereof the following new section 17:

"SEC. 17. (a) The following functions, powers, and duties heretofore vested in the government comptroller for the Virgin Islands are hereby transferred to the Inspector General, Department of the Interior, for the purpose of establishing an organization which will maintain a satisfactory level of independent audit oversight of the govenment of the Virgin Islands:

"(1) The authority to audit all accounts pertaining to the revenue and receipts of the government of the Virgin Islands, and of funds derived from bond issues, and the authority to audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds and property pertaining to the government of the Virgin Islands including those pertaining to trust funds held by the government of the Virgin Islands.

"(2) The authority to report to the Secretary of the Interior and the Governor of the Virgin Islands all failures to collect amounts due the government, and expenditures of funds or uses of property which are irregular or not pursuant to law.

"(b) The authority granted in paragraph (a) shall extend to all activities of the government of the Virgin Islands, and shall be in addition to the authority conferred upon the Inspector General by the Inspector General Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 1101), as amended.

"(c) In order to carry out the provisions of this section, the personnel, assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available or to be made available, of the office of the government comptroller for the Virgin Islands related to its audit function are hereby transferred to the Office of Inspector General, Department of the Interior.".

TITLE IV—AMERICAN SAMOA

SEC. 401. Effective January 1, 1983, section 5 of Public Law 95-556 (92 Stat. 2078) is amended by striking out the colon and all that follows and inserting a period in lieu thereof.

SEC. 402. Section 501 of Public Law 96-205 (94 Stat. 90) is hereby deleted in its entirety, and inserted in lieu thereof is the following new section 501.

"SEC. 501. (a) The Governor of American Samoa shall prepare, publish, and submit to the Congress and the Secretary of the Interior a comprehensive annual financial report in conformance with the standards of the National Council on Governmental Accounting within one hundred twenty days after the close of the fiscal year. The comprehensive annual financial report shall include statistical data as set forth in the standards of the National Council of Governmental Accounting relating to the physical, economic, social, and political characteristics of the government, and any other information required by the Congress. The Governor shall transmit the comprehensive annual financial report to the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior who shall audit it and report his findings to the Congress. The Governor shall also make such other reports at such other times as may be required by the Congress or under applicable Federal law. He shall also submit to the Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, and the cognizant Federal auditors a written statement of actions taken or contemplated on Federal audit recommendations within sixty days after the issuance date of the audit report.

"(b) The following functions, powers, and duties heretofore vested in the government comptroller for American Samoa are hereby transferred to the Inspector General, Department of the Interior, for the purpose of establishing an organization which will maintain a satisfactory level of independent audit oversight of the government of American Samoa.

"(1) The authority to audit all accounts pertaining to the revenue and receipts of the government of American Samoa, and of funds derived from bond issues, and the authority to audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds and property pertaining to the government of American Samoa including those pertaining to trust funds held by the government of American Samoa.

"(2) The authority to report to the Secretary of the Interior and the Governor of American Samoa all failures to collect amounts due the government, and expenditures of funds or uses or property which are irregular or not pursuant to law.

"(c) The authority granted in paragraph (b) shall extend to all activities of the government of American Samoa, and shall be in addition to the authority conferred upon the Inspector General by the Inspector General Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 1101), as amended.

"(d) In order to carry out the provisions of this section, the personnel, assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available or to be made available, of the office of the government comptroller for American Samoa relating to its audit function are hereby transferred to the Office of Inspector General, Department of the Interior.".

TITLE V—PUERTO RICO

SEC. 501. Section 202 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (P.L. 97-117) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the amount of any grant for treatment works in Puerto Rico made under this Act shall be 95 per centum of the cost of construction thereof (as approved by the Administrator) in the case of a grant from funds authorized for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, 90 per centum of the cost of construction thereof (as approved by the Administrator) in the case of a grant from funds authorized for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, 90 per centum of the cost of construction thereof (as approved by the Administrator) in the case of a grant from funds authorized for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, 85 per centum of the cost of construction thereof

(as approved by the Administrator) in the case of a grant from funds authorized for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and 75 per centum of the cost of construction thereof (as approved by the Administrator) in the case of a grant from funds authorized for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985.".

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 601. Section 607 of Public Law 96-597 (94 Stat. 3477, 3483) is amended by deleting subsections (b), (c), and (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The Governors of Guam and the Virgin Islands shall, as a condition for a grant pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, submit a plan which is designed to eliminate the respective territory's general fund deficit by the beginning of fiscal year 1987 to the Secretary of the Interior. Within sixty days after he has received such a plan, the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit the plan, together with his comments and recommendations to the Congress.

The plan shall provide for—

"(1) implementation of an effective budgetary and accounting system:

"(2) realistic revenue and expenditure projections which will progressively reduce current year general fund deficits and result in a balanced general fund budget no later than the beginning of fiscal year 1987;

"(3) financing of accumulated general fund deficits; and

"(4) quarterly goals and timetables for implementing the plan. The plan shall also indicate that the Governor has the necessary authority to implement the plan.

"(c) Not later than thirty days after the close of each quarter which occurs after the plan has been transmitted to the Congress, the respective Governor shall submit a report to the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress describing in detail the success or failure of such territory in meeting the goals and timetables described in such plan.".

Mr. WON PAT (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the House amendment to the Senate amendment be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what is involved for the benefit of the Members of the House?

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, let me say that I take great pride in the amendment in the nature of a substitute which is being offered to the Senate's amendment of H.R. 5139 today.

Our substitute is a good faith compromise with the administration on this omnibus measure for the insular areas of our Nation. It was produced by my Subcommittee on Insular Affairs after extensive hearings and other work. This included consultation with the insular areas themselves, the administration, and our counterparts on the other side of the Capitol who are responsible for the amendment to our original bill for which we offer a substitute today.

The Senate amendment picked up all provisions of H.R. 5139 as it passed the House on December 11, 1981, with the exception of one no longer needed, and added other worthwhile provisions.

Our substitute incorporates all aspects of the Senate amendment but one. And, I am greatly disappointed that the opposition of the administration compels us to delete that provision.

Section 401 of the Senate amendment would have reimbursed Guam and the Virgin Islands for the unintentional—but still devastating—impacts of the administration's income tax rate reductions, enacted last year.

Because Federal law mandates that the tax codes of these territories "mirror" the Federal Code, their treasuries are losing an enormous amount of local revenues—our primary Federal support of them—as a result of the tax cut. The Congressional Budget Office estimates this loss at $254 million between fiscal years 1983 through 1985.

Despite the administration's promise to correct this situation, there has been no effort to do so. And the territories, of course, are powerless to rectify it themselves.

The Senate's section 401 of this bill would have authorized the partial compensation of the territorial treasuries to the extent of a total of about $90 million in fiscal years 1983 through 1985. Such assistance is needed because the staggering revenue loss imposed over our objections is contributing to crippling deficits and an inability to locally provide for essential infrastructure.

However, the inclusion of this budgetary assistance in the Senate amendment resulted in the threat of an administration veto of this entire, imperative omnibus legislation. I believe this threat is unwise and callous; but we have accepted the reality of it.

As a consequence, we have reluctantly concluded that it is necessary to delete this needed provision from H.R. 5139, as passed by the Senate, to enable the enactment of other provisions which are, for the most part, supported by the administration.

The provisions that we urge be added are described in a statement of explanation which I request be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of this statement. Most have no cost associated with them. They do include, though, some contribution to the most vital of the infrastructure needs which the federally imposed revenue loss makes impossible for Guam and the Virgin Islands to finance, including projects supported by the administration.

The result is that this amendment represents a dramatic savings over the Senate amendment. Whereas the Congressional Budget Office set the budget impact of the Senate amendment at $95.15 million, we have reduced that amount to $19.2 million.

As I have indicated, we have proposed eliminating most of the cost of the Senate amendment as an effort to facilitate approval of what we hope will be this Congress major contribution to territorial law. We have acceded to the administration's wishes in restraining authorizations not requested in the President's budget, to arrive at an omnibus measure that should be acceptable to the administration.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore recommend passage by this House, acceptance of our substitute by the Senate, and approval by the President.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 5139

The amendment of section 102 to increase the $5 million authorization for capital projects on Guam by $1,052,000 is necessary to fully fund the Apra Harbor improvements supported by the administration. Delegate WON PAT, who has sponsored this project, has convinced us that useful development of the island's only commercial port requires this. It would complete the moving of an existing roadway, the first phase of which is funded in this year's budget.

The new section 103 would simply redefine an existing authorization for improvement of Guam medical facilities to conform it to the work as actually planned, taking account of the fact that the Medical Center of the Marianas has become the Guam Memorial Hospital. It would also specify that a portion of the funds are to be used to provide a much-needed clinic for the northern part of the island, now remote from any health care.

The new section 104 was suggested, with minor modifications, by recommendations contained in a General Accounting Office report on Federal auditing in the insular areas. They have the support of virtually all concerned, including the administration. The amendment would transfer the audit authority and staff of the U.S. Government Comptroller for Guam to the Inspector General of the Interior Department, retaining technical assistance resources in the Office of Territorial and International Affairs. It would also require the local government to prepare an annual comprehensive financial report and to report on actions taken pursuant to Federal audit recommendations.

The new section 202 provides income tax exemption for the trust funds established by the U.S. Government for the victims of nuclear testing on Bikini and Enewetak Atolls in the Marshall Islands. Because the establishment of these funds neglected to exempt their proceeds from Federal taxation, it has not been possible to invest them to produce the optimum assistance for the beneficiaries.

Since the U.S. Government Comptroller for Guam also serves the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands, the new section 203 extends the fiscal accountability procedure improvements which would be made by the new section 104 to those four Micronesian governments.

The new section 204 clarifies the applicability of the Federal Tort Claims Act to the Northern Mariana Islands. It was recommended by the Northern Marianas Federal Laws Commission and is supported by the Commonwealth.

The new section 205 would require the National Park Service to inventory and study the outstanding natural, historical, cultural, and recreational resources of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The amendment would have the findings transmitted to Congress within 2 years of enactment. The survey would follow current historic evaluation work in the islands.

The new section 303 would address a situation long of concern to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The deficiencies in water and power infrastructure in the Virgin Islands impede economic self-sufficiency and impair the quality of life to a degree that should be unthinkable in modern-day America. The amendment would authorize funding of the first phase of a comprehensive, 4-year improvements plan, consistent with the administration program of providing similar assistance through the Caribbean Basin Initiative to the foreign neighbors of these American islands.

The new section 304 would make a proper Federal contribution to the serious Virgin Islands crime problem. Because of a lack of facilities, the juveniles suspected of committing a substantial majority of the offenses must now be released to the streets when apprehended. The authorization would construct juvenile pretrial detention centers on St. Croix and St. Thomas.

The new section 305 is also a component on the administration's Caribbean Basin Initiative. It would permit the Governor to exempt rum refining in the Virgin Islands from certain effluent discharge requirements contained in the Federal Water Pollution Control Act in specified circumstances. This is to enable the Virgin Islands industry to compete with that of its regional competitors, which would be assisted by other portions of the President's proposal.

The new section 306 would repeal two provisions of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, the purposes of which have already been accomplished. The amendment was drafted by the Department of Justice.

The new section 307 was also drafted by Justice. It updates references to the Legislature of the Virgin Islands in the continuing provisions of the 1936 Organic Act.

The new section 308 would repeal obsolete provisions of the 1936 Organic Act. It was drafted by Justice.

The new section 309 would repeal other obsolete provisions of law pertaining to the Virgin Islands. It was also drafted by Justice.

The new section 310 is a counterpart to the new sections 104 and 203. It would improve Federal auditing and local financial accountability in the Virgin Islands.

The amendment of section 401 would delete a Senate-added amendment, strongly opposed by the administration, and substitute a minor clerical amendment instead. The Senate provision would have compensated Guam and the Virgin Islands for a portion of the local revenue losses directly—but unintentionally—attributable to the administration's 1981 tax rate reduction because of the so-called mirror system. According to the Congressional Budget Office, it would have authorized an estimated $90 million of the total $254 million in territorial losses between fiscal year 1983 and 1985. Such assistance would seem the minimum fairness would dictate in light of the staggering burden upon these territorial governments. We very reluctantly move to delete the Senate provision only because of the threat of a veto of this imperative omnibus measure.

Section 402 would be redesignated as section 601 for purposes of order. The new section 402, which would substitute, is a counterpart to the new sections 104, 203, and 307. It would improve Federal auditing and local financial accountability in American Samoa.

The new section 501 would alter the cost-sharing formula for waste water treatment plant construction in Puerto Rico in fiscal years 1982 through 1985 under the Water Pollution Control Act. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the amendment would not, however, result in any additional cost to the Federal Government. Instead, Puerto Rico would be enabled to use the same total funding for a lesser number of projects. This flexibility is imperative because Puerto Rico has already started construction of seven regional sewage treatment plants under the EPA Clean Water Act, and unless the island can assure the EPA that matching funds will be found in the near future, an estimated $48 million in Federal grants already given to Puerto Rico's Aqueducts and Sewer Authority may be deobligated or lost. Precedent for this includes the exemption from cost sharing already accorded other territories.

Finally, at the request of the administration, we note that section 302 of the bill, a Senate amendment, is silent on the question of reimbursement of the Customs Service by the Virgin Islands for costs directly associated with the Federal collection of territorial revenues. Presumably, reimbursement would continue until the need for it is obviated by the appropriations process. The purpose of the amendment, as we understand it, is simply to require that the collection assistance be provided so long as the local government wishes it to be.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5139, the territorial omnibus bill, which initially passed the House on December 11, 1981, and was subsequently amended by the other body on May 10, 1982. Since that time additional issues have arisen in America's insular areas, necessitating legislative action. In response, the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs held additional hearings on August 19, 1982; and many of today's amendments are reflections, stemming from the findings of those hearings.

For example, at the administration's request, sections 104, 203, 310, and 402 transfers the audit authority and staff of the Comptroller for the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Marianas, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to the Inspector General, U.S. Department of the Interior, and requires the local governments to prepare an annual, comprehensive financial report, thereby strengthening the financial accountability of the territorial governments. Also in response to the administration, obsolete material has been deleted from—while clarifying provisions have been added to—the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands.

Our committee amendments also drastically reduce the amount of territorial authorizations passed by the other body, resulting in a total of about $19 million rather than $95 million. Only those projects essential to the maintenance of adequate healthcare and sanitation, as well as protection of the public's safety and economic stimulation, have been retained.

Specifically, I would like to call your attention to two amendments of great merit—although of little expense—relative to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. In recognition of the hardships imposed upon the peoples of the Bikini and Enewetak atolls as a result of U.S. nuclear testing in the Pacific, the Congress awarded ex gratia payments to them in the form of trust funds. These trust funds were to be invested with the interest derived therefrom distributed to all those eligible. Inadvertently, however, the Congress failed to exempt from Federal taxation proceeds from these investments. Consequently, the funds have been invested in foreign accounts. Clearly, the Congress had no intent to tax these funds, which were granted on humanitarian grounds; and even more clearly, it was not the intent to bar domestic investment. Accordingly, section 202 of this legislation corrects this deficiency.

Last January, a committee oversight inspection was conducted in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. As many of you may know, negotiations are currently underway to determine the future political status of the Micronesian governments which presently make up the Trust Territory; that is, the Marshall Islands, Palau, and the Federated States of Micronesia. At present, it appears that all three governments will opt for free association with the United States, which in general equates to the granting of Federal subsidies and technical assistance in exchange for a guarantee of U.S. national security interests in Micronesia.

We, who made that long journey, were greatly impressed wherever we went with the scenic beauty of Micronesia along with its historical World War II significance. We found, however, that the Micronesians had few experts in park management and, in fact, were unaware of all the potential tourist attractions at their disposal. Currently under section 6, Public Law 95-348, the National Park Service has been directed to conduct a survey of World War II battle sites in Micronesia and to submit its recommendations to the Congress. Section 205 of this bill would merely extend the scope of that study—if so requested by the affected regional governments—to include natural, cultural, and recreational resources as well. Not only is such a provision in keeping with our current U.N. trust responsibilities; it also coincides with the extension of Federal technical assistance in the post-trusteeship period. Through its application, it would serve not only as a means to preserve some of the world's most pristime oceanic areas, but also a measure to develop the Micronesian economies through the enhancement of tourism.

Mr. Speaker, this is prudent legislation. Although it recognizes the unique characteristics of America's insular areas, it is also in line with today's fiscal responsibility. I, therefore, urge my colleagues to support unanimously H.R. 5139 as amended.

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask this House to endorse the package of amendments to H.R. 5139 submitted by my colleague, Mr. WON PAT. These amendments are very important to the people of the territories and their passage would once more illustrate this Congress understanding of, and concern for, its responsibilities toward the territories.

As there are a number of amendments, I will only address those which touch the U.S. Virgin Islands.

The amendment providing $10 million in water and power assistance is critical to the safety, health, and economic future of the Virgin Islands. The supply of water and power has been an ongoing battle, with the demands on local facilities clearly overpowering their capabilities. The population in the territory doubled from 1960 to 1970, and doubled again between 1970 and 1980. This rapid growth, while producing the highest standards of living in the Caribbean, also had the effect of creating havoc with the infrastructure responsibilities of the local government.

As a result of our successful experience with desalination plants, we are just emerging from years of relying upon the exhorbitant and wasteful process of barging water from Puerto Rico. Water supply, however, is still below demand. The water distribution system, meanwhile, has eroded through the years. Erosion coupled with increased pressure on the small pipes due to rising demand has lead to breakages, resulting in a 30-percent water loss.

Electric outages are frequent, with damaging consequences throughout the territory: Normal activities are periodically disrupted, businesses are forced to shut down, consumer goods are ruined, and business and public institutions must be power self-sufficient or have standby capabilities if they are to operate without interruption. The inadequacies of the system have seriously hampered the quality of life and forestalled further economic development.

The problems faced by the Virgin Islands water and power facilities have been carefully studied so as to provide a reasoned solution to our problem. The savings to the Virgin Islands government through the resulting efficiency in the system would provide much of the revenues needed to proceed with the long-term plans to bring local facilities up to reliable operating capacity.

The amendment providing $3 million for the construction of juvenile detention centers is clearly needed due to the serious criminal activity in the Virgin Islands which has increased at an alarming rate. There have been many negative consequences. Most importantly, residents have suffered as victims or from fear of becoming victims. The islands' largest industry, tourism, has suffered substantially from adverse publicity.

Much of the crime is said to be attributable to young, repeat offenders. Local law enforcement has been frustrated by the lack of facilities in which to hold young criminals prior to trial when apprehended. The result has been that many are returned to the streets where they commit additional crimes while pending trial.

These facilities will go a long way to curbing a situation which has compounded criminal activity in the islands.

Both of these amendments, I might add, have been provided for in the Interior Committee budget for fiscal year 1983.

I also ask your support for an amendment having no revenue impact, but which is of extreme importance to the economic future of the Virgin Islands. Approximately one-sixth of the revenues of the territorial government derive from the collection of excise taxes on rum produced in the Virgin Islands and sold in the United States. The rum industry employs some 3 percent of the territory's manufacturing work force. In light of the importance of the rum industry to our economy, an economy much more fragile than those of the 50 States, it is necessary that the people of the Virgin Islands have a more direct voice in the balancing of costs and benefits to determine the environmental standard to which that industry will be held.

The amendment would permit the Governor of the Virgin Islands to exempt the nontoxic ocean outfall discharges of existing rum distilleries in the territory from certain provisions of the Clean Water Act if he determined that the continuance of such discharges would not adversely affect water quality, a balanced population of aquatic life, or human health. This amendment has been reviewed and endorsed by the respective chairmen and ranking minority members of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and that committee's Subcommittee on Water Resources, which has jurisdiction over Clean Water Act matters. The administration has also indicated its support for this amendment in the context of the Caribbean Basin legislation which now may pass out of Congress this year. The amendment also has the support of all segments of the Virgin Islands government and people, from the Chamber of Commerce to the League of Women Voters. I hope that my colleagues will support this important amendment.

Another amendment having no revenue impact, but important to the Virgin Islands, amends obsolete sections of the Organic Acts applicable to the territory. This is essentially a housecleaning amendment.

The other amendment takes the step, recommended by the General Accounting Office report on the territorial audit function issued in March of this year, of transferring the audit authority and staff of the territorial comptrollers, currently under the Department of the Interior's Office of Territorial and International Affairs, to its Inspector General's Office. This amendment is supported by the administration and should provide for a more equitable assessment of territorial finances since the audit responsibility will be removed from the office which administers the audited funds to territorial governments.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of these amendments. Thank you.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the matter just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1982

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to make the point that we have several pieces of legislation that are now being bottled up, including the regulatory reform bill and several other important pieces of legislation. It seems to me that the only way we may be able to get at some of these bills is to not allow the Calendar Wednesday request to go through, and begin going through the roll of the committees so that we can begin the process of bringing some of those bills out of the Rules Committee and other places where they have been bottled up. In particular, today we had a motion on the floor which allowed a discharged day to be put aside for a very good reason, but nevertheless we are not going to be able to have a discharge day if we should get 218 signatures on the balanced budget amendment, and so at this point I shall not object, but I am basically putting the House on warning that from now on in that may be a tactic that will be used, to object to the Calendar Wednesday being dispensed with so that we can begin to get at some of this legislation off the bottling up process.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PROCESSED COMMODITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, since 1979, the volume of protein-fortified products shipped under title II of Public Law 480 has fallen from 43 percent to an estimated 20 percent this year and next. The volume of processed foods has fallen from 61 percent to 55 percent.

As we all know, the purpose of title II is to meet the nutritional needs of people less fortunate than ourselves. Through the years, the United States has donated millions of tons of food to people in developing countries.

In this time of tight budgets, it is important that we schedule shipments in such a way as to get the most "bang for the buck," but we cannot afford to ignore the nutritional needs of the recipients. The only way we can be sure that the recipients are receiving adequate nutrition is to send nutritionally balanced products: processed products.

Today, I am introducing a bill to require that the Department of Agriculture and the Agency for International Development increase the percentage of processed and protein-fortified products shipped under title II of Public Law 480.

This will not only assure that recipients receive proper diets, it also will provide substantial benefits to our troubled economy.

Increasing processed, or added-value products will benefit farmers by expanding the demand for raw commodities. It will benefit processors by creating a large export market for their products. And it will benefit the Nation's workers by increasing the number of jobs available in the processing and transportation industries.

A 1981 Department of Agriculture study investigated the effects of increasing exports of selected added-value products in terms of gross output, gross employment, and personal income. The products studied were wheat flour, corn-dressed poultry, wet corn milling products, soybean oil products, and cottonseed mill products. The study found that for 1980:

The U.S. exported 6.4 billion dollars' worth of wheat, but only 211 million dollars' worth of flour. If an additional 10 percent of the wheat had been exported as flour, the United States could have gained an estimated 5.635 billion dollars' worth of business activity, 122,400 additional jobs, and 1.217 billion dollars' worth of increased personal income.

If an additional 10 percent of the 8.6 billion dollars' worth of corn which was exported in 1980 had been processed into wet milling products for export, there could have been as much as 7.645 billion dollars' worth of business activity generated, up to 163,400 jobs created, and a $1.695 billion increase in personal income.

Soybean exports were valued at $5.9 billion. A 10-percent increase in processed soybean products would have expanded business activity by $1.646 billion, created 28,320 jobs, and increased personal income by as much as $253.7 million.

In addition to these economic benefits, increased exports of added-value products would reduce excess domestic supplies, strengthen commodity prices, and reduce the cost of Government price support programs.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is needed to help this Nation meet its humanitarian commitments, while helping to restore prosperity to the Nation's economy. I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

Thank you.●

THE CONGRESSIONAL FRANKING PRIVILEGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. FORD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I take this time on behalf of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and the Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards to inform the House that a decision has been rendered in the lawsuit brought by common cause contesting the constitutionality of the congressional franking privilege. We are pleased to report that our position has been sustained and that the Common Cause complaint has been dismissed.

On September 7, a three-judge panel for the U.S. District Court (D.C.) issued a unanimous opinion rejecting all of Common Cause's claims, granting our motion for summary judgment, and dismissing the complaint.

Basically, the decision—which is appealable to the U.S. Supreme Court—holds that Congress is doing a reasonable job of regulating its use of the frank and that there is no basis at present for the court to become involved in Congress internal affairs.

Common Cause's fundamental contention was that the congressional franking statute gives incumbents an advantage so substantial as to violate the constitutional rights of challengers and potential challengers. The court concedes that the franking privilege does have an impact on the electoral process and is of value to incumbents. But the impact is not demonstrably great enough to violate the constitutional rights of challengers, according to the court. The frank serves legitimate public policy purposes, and the creation of some inherent electoral advantage is unavoidable when Members use the frank for these purposes. The court finds that Congress, since 1973, has been doing well enough in attempting to minimize this electoral advantage to avoid constitutional challenge. The court indicates that the House's 1977 tightening of franking rules and the 1981 enactment of the franking statute amendments are examples of Congress good-faith, self-policing efforts. The court concludes on the following cautionary note, however:

We do not suggest that the franking privilege may never be shown to create such an imbalance in the campaign process as to constitute a cognizable interference with important rights. We hold only that the level of impact has not been shown to be sufficient in this case for us to assume the responsibility of redrafting a statute or promulgating regulations to govern the congressional use of the frank.

Although the court has ratified the effectiveness of our self-policing efforts to date, we believe it is essential that the House continue to improve upon these efforts. In this regard, the Commission will shortly be conducting a review of its existing franking regulations with the goal of making any necessary refinements in time for the beginning of the 98th Congress.

For the reference of Members, the complete text of the court's decision follows:

[U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 1887-73]

COMMON CAUSE, ET AL., PLAINTIFFS, v. WILLIAM F. BOLGER, ET AL., DEFENDANTS, AND HOUSE COMMISSION ON CONGRESSIONAL MAILING STANDARDS, INTERVENING DEFENDANT

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Statement of the case

By an amended complaint filed March 12, 1974, plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that 39 U.S.C. § 3210, granting to Members of Congress the privilege of sending mail through the United States Postal Service as franked mail, is unconstitutional. Plaintiffs claim, in essense, that the franking privilege afforded by the statue provides an unconstitutional "subsidy" to incumbent candidates for Congress because franked mail inevitably has the effect of aiding Members' reelection efforts. Plaintiffs reason that because they are not afforded similar campaign advantages, section 3210 abridges their First Amendment rights to associate freely for the advancement of political beliefs, as well as deprives them of equal protection under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. In addition, plaintiffs seek a judgment that section 3210 permits an unlawful use of public funds for a non-public purpose in violation of the General Welfare Clause of Article I, Section 8, of the Constitution.

The Postmaster General[1] and the Secretary of the Treasury were the original named defendants in this case. Subsequently, on September 8, 1976, the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards was permitted to intervene as a defendant and the United States Senate, through its Select Committee on Ethics, formerly the Select Committee on Standards and Conduct of the United States Senate, was allowed to participate as amicus curiae.

It is the position of all defendants and the amicus that the franking statute and the congressional rules enacted thereunder facilitate the necessary and constitutionally protected communication between Members of Congress and their constituents and draw a proper line between legitimate and illegitimate uses of the frank, i.e., between communications on official business and communications for personal political advantage. They deny that the franking statute violates any of plaintiffs' First or Fifth Amendment rights. The case therefore presents a classic example of the tension which sometimes arises between conflicting claims of right.

Prior proceedings

On July 1, 1974, after denying defendants' motion to dismiss, the court granted plaintiffs' motion to convene a statutory court of three judges pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2284.[2] This court, in turn, considered and denied defendants' renewed motion to dismiss on February 10, 1975. Both motions to dismiss were predicated in part on plaintiffs' alleged lack of standing to bring this action, and were denied. Thereafter, all parties engaged in discovery through interrogatories, documentary requests, depositions and requests for admissions. Because of the nature of much of the material, a protective order was issued on March 1, 1976 and various coding systems were established to protect the confidentiality of Members of Congress and other witnesses. Without detailing the precise nature and volume of the discovery pursued by both sides, it is fair to say that the discovery concluded on April 22, 1981 has been thorough and complete. Many of the basic facts are not in dispute; what is sharply contested are the inferences to be drawn therefrom.

Present posture

Pursuant to the Court's timetable, plaintiffs, defendants and the intervening defendant filed motions for summary judgment on May 22, 1981. Oppositions were filed by the parties on June 12, 1981, as well as a memorandum of the United States Senate in support of the motions of defendants and intervening defendant and in opposition to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. The matter was argued at length on September 30, 1981.

Statutory basis for the franking privilege

1. The History of the Frank

The origin of the franking privilege can be traced to 17th Century England, when the privilege was granted to Members of the House of Commons concurrent with the establishment of the first public postal service in that country. The clear purpose then, as it is today, was to facilitate the carrying on of official business.

In 1775, the Continental Congress authorized the use of the frank by its own members and by those on active duty in the Continental Army. The First Congress, when it acted to establish a postal system in 1789, retained the privilege for official correspondence and documents. In 1873, after the Civil War, the privilege was temporarily abolished by Congress, but was restored in proprio vigore in 1985. 28 Stat. 593, 622 (Sec. 85).

Until the comprehensive revision of 1973, the Act of 1895 authorized Members of Congress to use the frank for correspondence on "official business." The responsibility to interpret the meaning of the term "official business" was exercised by the Post Office Department, which, upon request of anyone, including members of the public, provided official guidance in the form of advisory opinions as to whether a mailing or contemplated mailing could be franked.

This procedure was changed in 1968 when, in recognition of the practical as well as possible constitutional problems of its advisory position, the Department decided to give up its practice of issuing opinions to members of the public. It did, however, continue to give advisory opinions to Members of Congress until 1971, when, with the establishment of the new Postal Service, the Post Office Department relinquished any remaining responsibility in this area.

This confused state of affairs led to a spate of lawsuits in the federal courts of four different circuits by candidates running against incumbent members. At least two of these challenges, focused on the propriety of certain franked mailings by particular members,[3] were an acute embarrassment to Congress. Other more flagrant abuses surfaced, among them the reported event of a member mailing his lawn furniture to Bimini in the Bahamas, under a frank with the tag reading "Official Business." The combination of these factors plus the threat of further lawsuits led to Arizona Congressman Morris Udall's introduction of H.R. 3180 in Early 1973. Similar proposals were introduced in the Senate, and after the differences between the two bodies were accommodated in conference, the Franking Act of 1973, Public Law No. 93-191, was signed by the President and became law on December 18, 1973.

2. The 1973 Statute

The statute is set forth primarily in 39 U.S.C. §§ 3201, 3210-19. In this litigation, our attention is focused on section 3210.

In its opening declaration of policy, the statute states that the privilege of sending mail under the frank is "to assist and expedite the conduct of the official business, activities, and duties of the Congress of the United States." 39 U.S.C. § 3210(a)(1). "official business" is defined to "cover all matters which directly or indirectly pertain to the legislative process or to any congressional representative functions generally or to the functioning, working, or operating of the Congress and the performance of official duties in connection therewith, and shall include, but not be limited to, the conveying of information to the public, and the requesting of the views of the public, or the views and information of other authority of government, as a guide or a means of assistance in the performance of these functions." 39 U.S.C. § 3210(a)(2).

There follows a list of what the Congress considered to be frankable mail matter. The list includes, but is not limited to:

(a) Mailings to any person or any government official regarding programs, decisions and other matters of public concern. § 3210(a)(3)(A);

(b) The "usual and customary congressional newsletter or press release." § 3210(a)(3)(B);

(c) The "usual and customary congressional questionnaire." § 3210(a)(3)(C);

(d) Mail expressing condolences to a person who has suffered a loss or congratulations to a person who has achieved some personal or public distinction. § 3210(a)(3)(F);

(e) Mass mailings of federal documents and publications and publications containing items of general information. § 3210(a)(3)(G);

(f) Mail consisting of voter registration or election information or assistance. § 3210(a)(3)(H);

(g) Mail including a biography or autobiography of a member or family members which is part of a federal publication or in response to a specific request and not included for publicity purposes in a newsletter or other mass mailing. § 3210(a)(3)(I);

(h) Mail containing a picture, sketch or other likeness of a Member which is part of a federal publication or in response to a specific request, or, when contained in a newsletter or other mass mailing, is not of such size or does not occur with such frequency as to lend to the conclusion that the purpose is to advertise the Member, rather than illustrate the accompanying text. § 3210(a)(3)(J);

By way of contrast, the unauthorized uses of the frank are specified to cover the following: purely personal mailings unrelated to official business, § 3210(a)(4); mailings "laudatory and complimentary" of a member "on a purely personal or political basis," § 3210(a)(5)(A); "greetings" from the spouse or other members of the member's family, § 3210(a)(5)(b)(i); reports on how and when the member or his spouse or family spends time other than in connection with legislative, representative, and "other official functions," § 3210(a)(5)(B)(ii); mail "which specifically solicits political support," § 3210(a)(5)(C); and "any mass mailing . . . less than 28 days immediately before the date of any primary or general election . . ., § 3210(a)(5)(D).

The statute therefore permits franked mass mailings (defined to mean newsletters and similar mailings of more than 500 pieces) when they are made at least 28 days prior to a primary or general election. 39 U.S.C. § 3210(a)(5)(D). The statute also allows a member of the House to use the frank on postal patron mass mailings addressed not only into the area of his congressional district, but also into an area which he does not presently represent, but in which he will be a candidate in the next election because of redistricting. 39 U.S.C. § 3210 (d) (1)(A) and (B). Accordingly, material may be mass mailed under the frank to points outside the district of a Representative or outside the state of a Senator, subject only to the 28-day restriction.[4] Materials such as newsletters and press releases printed with campaign contributions are specifically permitted to be mailed under the frank. 39 U.S.C. § 3210(e).

It is clear from the legislative history, as well as from the text of the statute, that the 1973 Act was designed to give explicit approval to the traditional uses of the frank. As Congressman Udall, the leading supporter of the legislation, stated more than once, the approved uses were intended to be a summary of present practices. He emphasized that "we are simply confirming the sound, solid, responsible use of the frank which the vast majority of Members of Congress have always followed."[5] The entire legislative history confirms the position expressed by Congressman Udall.

3. The House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards and the Select Committee on Standards and Conduct of the Senate (now Select Committee on Ethics)

The 1973 statute also established for the House of Representatives a special commission composed of members and know as the "House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards," (hereinafter House Commission) and for the Senate, the Select Committee on Standards and Conduct of the Senate (hereinafter Senate Committee). 2 U.S.C. § § 501, 502. Both groups are required to "provide guidance, assistance, advice, and counsel, through advisory opinions or consultations, in connection with the mailing or contemplated mailing of franked mail" under the 1973 Act. 2 U.S.C. §§ 501(d), 502(a).

The Act also specifically provides for an administrative procedure for the receipt, investigation and hearing of complaints concerning alleged violations of the franking statute and limits the jurisdiction of the federal courts hearing such complaints.[6] Both the House Commission and the Senate Committee are required to "prescribe regulations governing the proper use of the franking privilege." 2 U.S.C. §§ 501(d), 502(a).

Each House of Congress, in response to the statute, has enacted formal rules which set further limits on the kind of material which may be franked. House Rule XLVI;[7] Senate Rule XLVIII, renumbered as 48(3).[8] While varying in certain respects, the Rules of both branches of Congress reflect concern as to the adequacy of the 1973 Act in two important respects:

(a) They extend the prohibition on mass mailings before a primary or general election in which the Member is a candidate from the 28 days permitted under the statute to 60 days.

(b) They require that the costs of mass mailings be defrayed exclusively from appropriated funds, although the statute permits the franked mailing of such material when paid for out of campaign funds.

4. Public Law No. 97-69

Most recently, Public Law No. 97-69, enacted on October 26, 1981, has further amended the 1973 statute by embodying the above two provisions of the House and Senate Rules as well as the prohibition barring mass mailings outside a member's district, when he is a candidate for another public office. The new law also extends the postal patron mailing privilege to the Senate and directs the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration to establish limits on such mailings.[9] Furthermore, the statutory authorization for letters of condolence and congratulations for personal distinction is eliminated and letters of congratulation can be sent only for "some public distinction."

To summarize, since this action was originally brought, the Congress has tightened considerably the respective features of the 1973 Act, particularly by incorporating into law the two important limitations embodied in the House and Senate Rules and implementing regulations and by eliminating authorization for the franking of all letters of condolence and certain letters of congratulations. The plaintiffs nevertheless remain firm in their challenge.

The issues

It is in the context of the foregoing statutory scheme governing the use of the franking privilege that two paramount issues are presented:

1. Whether the statute, as written and implemented, deprives the plaintiffs of their right to a fair political process, in violation of their constitutional rights under the First and Fifth Amendments.

2. Whether the statute recognizes and protects the constitutional right and duty of Members of Congress to communicate with their constituents and at the same time limits any incidental adverse effects on the political process.

The factual record

We are convinced, after careful review of the evidentiary record[10] amassed over the length of discovery in this case, that the basic facts underlying plaintiff's challenge are not in dispute. We, therefore, set out our findings of fact in this case for the principal purpose of providing a clear context for our discussion and decision on the differing legal and constitutional arguments made. We preface these findings with two general assumptions, neither of which is genuinely disputed.

First, it stands to reason that incumbency alone is a valuable asset to the public official who seeks reelection. An incumbent Member of Congress enjoys a certain "visibility" among his constituents that a challenger may find difficult or impossible to match. It is also beyond argument that any communication with constituents, whether through local meetings or through the mail or mass media, contributes to such visibility and thus may have a direct effect (however slight) in influencing the outcome of an election. To the extent that the effect is positive from the incumbent's standpoint, it is undoubtedly detrimental to his challenger's position. This is so whether the communication is part of an overt campaign effort or made simply in the normal course of a member's representative function.

Second, there is little doubt that the franking privilege is a valuable tool in facilitating the performance by individual Members of Congress of their constitutional duty to communicate with and inform their constituents on public matters. As noted earlier, it is this particular duty which has justified the frank through its history.

Plaintiffs do not argue with the necessity of or public value in some kind of Congressional franking privilege. Their challenge before this court is based only on assertions that section 3210, as it stood in 1973 and, notwithstanding increased restrictions embodied in the Rules of both Houses and in subsequent amendments, even as it stands now, is drafted to enable more than the justifiable uses—that it permits Members of Congress to use the frank to make campaign-related mailings, particularly mass mailings.[11]

On the basis of the convincing evidentiary base offered by plaintiffs to support their argument, we make the following findings and offer a sampling of supporting evidence:

1. Members of Congress and their staff have received advice from many sources to take full advantage of the franking privilege in their campaign efforts. The publication of "The Job of the Congressman," co-authored by Congressman MORRIS UDALL, Chairman of the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards and sponsor of the bill which became the Franking Act of 1973, advises Members of the benefits of such use. Campaign committees from both the Republican and Democratic parties have held seminars for congressional staff members concerning the effective use of newsletters, questionnaires and other franked mailings. The Republican Senatorial Committee employed a direct mail consultant to give advice concerning effective campaign use of mass mailings—including franked mailings. A 1974 Democratic Campaign Committee manual entitled "Maximum Campaign Budget" called for integration of targeted franked mass mailings into overall campaign strategy. It is apparent that at least some members and their staffs believed that the use of franked mailings can be politically beneficial and should be employed.

2. At least some Members of Congress used direct mail consultants during the 1972, 1974 and 1976 campaigns to build mailing lists and to help integrate franked mailings into the overall campaign strategy.

3. Several Senators and Representatives have targeted franked mass mailings in ways that frequently have no relationship to official business and which are closely connected to reelection plans and strategy. Such targeted mailings, which are identified and documented, make use of voter registration lists and may be designed to convey views on an issue to a select group which is likely to be receptive to those views. Mailings may be made to voters on the basis of demography (race, religion, sex, age), geography, political affiliation or membership in special interest groups. The importance of special interest group mailings and of targeted mass mailings is demonstrated by the fact that, during the period from 1973–75, less than two percent of franked mass mailings by Senators were general newsletters.

4. The "usual and customary congressional questionnaires," frankable under section 3210(a)(3)(C), are often used for purposes other than merely determining constituents' views on particular issues. They may be used to obtain demographic and other information helpful to identifying recipients for targeted mailings, thus facilitating the member's political "responsiveness" to various groups and interests.

5. Members often include self-laudatory material in franked mailings, including favorable editorials, reports of awards, compliments of others concerning the member's performance of his duties, pressure group ratings, and the like. They also use franked mails to compliment and honor constituents to generate good will which, according to plaintiffs, improves the members' chances of reelection.

6. The House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards has specifically approved the uses of the franking privilege described above. Mailings referred to in these findings and made by Senators were registered with the Secretary of the Senate.

7. The volume and timing of franked mass mailings, revealed by data stipulated by the parties to be reasonably accurate, indicate widespread use to promote incumbents' reelection efforts. The volume of franked mass mailings is significantly higher in the year preceding House or Senate elections than in the year following elections. The volume builds to a peak just before the preelection cutoff and drops sharply. The volume of non-mass franked mailings stays relatively constant from year to year in both the House and the Senate. It is an undeniable conclusion that the fluctuations in the volume of franked mass mailings are caused by the electoral cycle, rather than by fluctuations in legislative activity.

8. Measured in financial terms, the franking privilege confers a substantial advantage to incumbent Congressional candidates over their challengers. We find that Congress recognized the potential financial benefits conferred by section 3210 on campaigning incumbents at the time it passed the Act.

9. We make no specific finding concerning the extent to which use of the franking privilege has contributed to the electoral victories of any incumbent Members of Congress. We are inclined by the lack of evidence on this point to conclude only that there is no statistical relationship between the use of the frank and the outcome of an election and that proof of the decisive impact of the privilege in any particular election is elusive, whatever the potential financial benefit of the frank.

Analysis

It is the plaintiffs' basic position that the First Amendment and the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment mandate that the government remain neutral in electoral matters and avoid any action which unfairly benefits some participants in the political process to the detriment of others. They claim that by affording what amounts to a postage subsidy which may be used to send materials which promote an incumbent's efforts toward reelection, the franking statute violates this constitutional principle of fairness.

Defendants on the other hand vigorously deny that the franking statute is consitutionally unsound, asserting that the bounds of the franking privilege have been drawn to facilitate the constitutional duty of Members of Congress to communicate with their constituents, and at the same time to limit as much as possible any adverse effects on the political process. It is to the constitutional issues underlying these opposing positions that we now turn our discussion.[12]

The first amendment aspects of plaintiffs' claims

The "Freedom of Speech" clause of the First Amendment, according to plaintiffs, protects several aspects of the political process with which the frank, by providing a subsidy to incumbents, interferes and harms. These include, under plaintiffs' analysis, the ability of candidates to win elective office, to attract financial support, to communicate with citizens, to educate the public and to influence the political discourse of a campaign. While we do not agree with plaintiffs that there is a First Amendment-based right to win elective office, we agree that important aspects of the political process do fall within the general rubric of speech under the First Amendment. As the Supreme Court stated in Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy, 401 U.S. 265, 272 (1971), the constitutional standard that a person's speech remain unfettered and unabridged by governmental action "has its fullest and most urgent application precisely to the conduct of campaigns for political office."

While plaintiffs do not claim that their right to speak, to vote and to associate for political ends have been directly restrained by the franking statute, this absence of direct restraint does not render the First Amendment protections inapplicable. It is well-established that "the Constitution's protection is not limited to direct inference with fundamental rights." Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 183 (1972). Claims of First Amendment violations demand heightened judicial sensitivity, "[e]ven where a challenged regulation restricts freedom of expression only incidentally." Schad v. Borough of Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 69 n. 7 (1981). See also Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 21 (1976).

The essential element of plaintiffs' argument is that, to the extent that it enables Members of Congress to use franked mail to promote their own campaign efforts, the franking statute works an effective restriction on challengers' access to the political process, thereby violating rights of expression and association. It is argued that the postal subsidy effectively created by the franking statute violates the rule under the combined First and Fifth Amendments requiring that the government neither impose unequal burdens nor grant unequal benefits upon participants' exercise of their rights to speech and association in the political process. Although we endorse the principle that protection of the fundamental fairness of the political process is necessary to ensure the uninhibited competition of candidates and in ideas which "is at the core of our electoral process," Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23, 32 (1968), and accept that granting financial benefits to some interests may be under some circumstances the same as restricting the First Amendment rights of others, see Taxation with Representation of Washington v. Rogers, 676 F.2d 715, 744 (D.C. Cir. 1982), we do not accept plaintiffs' contention that the facts of this case require strict judicial scrutiny of the statute at issue.

It is clear from our reading of Supreme Court cases involving governmental restrictions on the exercise of free speech that the standard of strict scrutiny, which requires that the government justify a particular regulation by demonstrating that it "is necessary to serve a compelling interest and that it is narrowly drawn to achieve that end," Widmar v. Vincent, 102 S. Ct. 269, 274 (1981), is reserved for those instances where the restriction impacts directly on the content of the restricted communication. See, e.g., Widmar v. Vincent, supra; Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490 (1981); Central Hudson Gas & Electric Co. v. Public Service Commission, 447 U.S. 557 (1980); Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Commission, 447 U.S. 530 (1980); Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455 (1980); Police Dep't of the City of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92 (1972). We do not believe that this is such a case, and is distinguishable in important respects from the decision in Greenberg v. Bolger, 497 F. Supp. 756 (E.D.N.Y. 1980), upon which plaintiffs principally rely.

In Greenberg, a First Amendment challenge was raised against a statutory scheme granting the two major political parties special reduced mailing rates while denying similar rates to minor parties. Plaintiffs argued in that case that by denying them the same discounted postal rates enjoyed by the major parties Congress had restricted their access to the mails and thereby had violated their First Amendment rights of expression and association. The court correctly observed that regulation of First Amendment rights of expression must be "content neutral," noting that "[t]he Supreme Court has often explained that '. . . above all else, the first amendment means that the government has no power to restrict expression because of its message, its ideas, its subject matter, or its content.'" Id., at 774, quoting Police Department of the City of Chicago v. Mosley, supra at 95-96. The court then determined that the statute challenged in that case was not content neutral. It reasoned that by drawing a line between major and minor parties, Congress had granted a postal subsidy for the expression of the most "popular" political ideas while refusing similar advantages to those who held political positions substantially different from those of the major parties. It concluded that "[b]y subsidizing the mailings of the Republicans and Democrats, the government has chosen to benefit those with popular views and burden those with unpopular views. To handicap the mailing of campaign literature because a political party has not achieved a required level of acceptance is not different from censoring speech because of its substance." Greenberg, 497 F. Supp. at 776.

The principal difference between this case and Greenberg is in the nature of the restrictions worked by the statute. In Greenberg the restrictions were direct and drawn along party lines. They therefore effectively limited the expression of particular political ideas. Although this case involves issues of access to the political process similar to those raised in Greenberg, the impact here is not upon defined political positions. The lines drawn by the franking statute distinguish individuals, not ideas. And because the individuals affected—non-incumbent congressional candidates—must be presumed to represent the full spectrum of political ideology, we cannot hold that the franking privilege creates any discrimination or restriction which is content related. This case does not fall within the rationale for strict First Amendment scrutiny adopted in Greenberg.

In fact, beyond acknowledging that the franking statute has some limited impact upon speech-related rights, the First Amendment finds little place in our analysis. Although the language of the First Amendment ensures that one's own speech be free, unfettered, and unabridged, it does not alone require that each individual be entitled to this particular privilege of incumbency that certain others may enjoy.[13] For this reason, questions of the constitutionality of governmental-created imbalances are much better suited to analysis under the principle of equal protection than under freedom of speech. It is thus to the Fifth Amendment that we now turn.

The fifth amendment claims

The plaintiffs' equal protection argument is direct and straightforward: by permitting the franking of materials which may be sent for no purpose other than to advance incumbency, the franking statute affords campaign advantages to incumbents, seriously imbalancing the political process to the detriment of any challengers. Plaintiffs argue that because of its impact on rights to free speech under the First Amendment the discrimination worked by the franking statute may be justified only by demonstrating a compelling interest.

The cases offered by plaintiffs to support their argument that the government may not discriminate among candidates by unequally imposing handicaps on some or granting benefits to others deal almost exclusively with the same sort of content-based discrimination discussed briefly above—drawing lines of distinction by party affiliation or ideology. We find little discussion in case law relating to the advantages which incumbents may enjoy simply by virtue of their incumbency over any challengers who seek this in public office.

In Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347 (1976), for example, the Supreme Court held that patronage dismissals violated the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The basis of the holding, however, was not necessarily that an incumbent might use the system to tip the electoral balance unfairly against any challenger, but that the threat of dismissal severely restricted the political beliefs and associations of the employees affected. The Court held that the requirement that employees pledge political allegiance to one party or another, work for the election of other candidates of the incumbent party, contribute a portion of their wages to the party, or obtain the sponsorship of a member of the party, all in order to maintain their jobs imposed an unconstitutional condition on the right to continued employment. There is no similar condition in this case. The franking statute imposes no direct condition upon the right of any person to challenge an incumbent, to support one or another party in a particular election, or to use the mails. Its impact upon political speech and association is at most indirect, and then ony to the extent that it may make campaign-related communication through the mails more expensive for a non-incumbent candidate than for the incumbent who seeks reelection and uses franked mail to promote that end.

We cannot overlook the fact that, despite their broadside objections to the franking statute, plaintiffs concede that the frank serves an essential public purpose in facilitating communication with constituents and that some sort of franking privilege is necessary in the performance of official congressional business. They concede that the problem is merely one of drawing lines—striking a proper balance between legitimate and illegitimate uses of the frank.

The franking statute effectively draws two lines of demarcation. The first is drawn by the granting of the franking privilege to Members of Congress only. In general, this distinguishes Congress from the general public, and also has the effect of drawing the line between incumbent and non-incumbent congressional candidates. Plaintiffs do not argue that non-incumbents should also be afforded the franking privilege. They seek only to limit its use by Members of Congress. The second line drawn by Congress draws a distinction between official and unofficial use of the frank. Our sole concern is with this second line of demarcation and to this we direct our attention.

Under present practice a mailing is considered to be "official" if, on its face, it falls within the permitted types (or at least outside of the prohibited types) of materials listed under section 3210. The statutory test does not look to motives, but only to "the type and content of the mail." § 3210(e). Plaintiffs argue that attention to content only, without considering the motives for sending a particular mailing, enables Members to use the frank for the unofficial purposes of promoting reelection. Plaintiffs thus fault the present franking statute and congressional practice for failing to subject franked mailings to a test of official versus unofficial motivation. Absent standards based on underlying motives, plaintiffs urge that the franking statute be modified to eliminate categories of mailings which have been prone to abuse in the past. We cannot accept plaintiffs' suggested cause of action.

Were the frank shown to be available and widely used for reelection purposes and had plaintiffs demonstrated that such use has a substantial detrimental impact on opposing candidates or members of the voting public seeking to educate themselves on the candidates and the issues, plaintiffs' claims, particularly those based on the First Amendment, would have considerable merit. But such level of interference with the electoral process has not been shown in this case. We are hesitant to apply a standard under the guise of strict judicial scrutiny to a situation where there has been no demonstration of significant harm to the plaintiffs' constitutional rights. The conceded and undisputed legitmate interests promoted by the franking statute are sufficient to justify the limited impacts on the rights of the plaintiff class and to satisfy the invocation of the rational basis test, which we apply in this case. We cannot hold the franking statute unconstitutional simply because it sets forth a standard to determine "official" uses of the frank different from that proposed by plaintiffs.

It is important to view the franking activities of Members of Congress from an overall perspective. It seems undeniable that all mailings, franked and unfranked, from any particular Member of Congress may be grouped into three types. The first type is composed of "official" mailings, those related directly to the legislative and representative functions of Congress. This is the type of communication which Members of Congress arguably are under a duty to provide and to which the frank has been extended over the past 200 years. At the other extreme are mailings which are on their face political or private and therefore "unofficial" in nature. Congress itself has recognized the dangers, constitutional as well as practical, of extending the franking privilege to these types of mailings and has excluded them or expressly prohibited them under the statute and rules in both Houses. Between these two extremes lies a class of mailings whose purposes are less easily discernible. For example, it is undeniable that Senator X, acting in his elected capacity, should have a right to make mailings within this middle area related to his official duties. It is equally obvious that this same individual acting as candidate for the Senate has an interest in mailing the same material to prospective voters to promote his campaign efforts. Thus the motivations, even behind a particular mailing, may be mixed. Plaintiffs' complaints here can only be about the actions and purposes of the candidate, however, and not the senator.

Congress drafted the franking statute expressly to include many of the types of mailings which unquestionably fall within this middle area. This of itself does not require that we invalidate the scheme as unconstitutional. The question before us is not whether the particular line which Congress has drawn between "official" and "unofficial" uses of the frank necessarily has the least possible potential, in comparison with other methods of drawing the line, for adversely affecting challengers' effective access to the mails. The question is only whether the line is a reasonable one.

A statutory scheme need not be drafted or even administered so as to eliminate completely all possible abuses before it is constitutionally acceptable. We can be concerned only with whether the standard adopted bears a rational relation to the twin goals at hand: one, to facilitate (even encourage) official communication and two, to discourage or eliminate unofficial communication. It is clear from the record that Congress has recognized the basic principle that government funds should not be spent to help incumbents gain reelection. The details of the franking scheme, including its distinction between official and unofficial mailings, appear to be rationally designed to work for that end. (It is relevant in this regard that the record in this case consists principally of abuses rather than routine uses of the franking privilege). It would be most inappropriate for the judiciary to step in and demand that Congress restructure this scheme under the circumstances of this case.

To state the obvious, it simply is impossible to draw and enforce a perfect line between the official and political business of Members of Congress. The franking privilege is only one of many perquisites afforded to them which may be turned one way or another into a campaign advantage over any challenger. We have already accepted as an assumption and stressed the fact that an incumbent is, by virtue of his incumbency alone, much more visible to the voting public than is a would-be challenger. He has greater access to the media, both local and national; he usually has one or more offices in his home district, in addition to his Washington office; he has a staff paid out of public funds; he has a WATS line for telephone calls which he may use to communicate with his constituents.

Plaintiffs do not suggest that the incumbents' use of these tools of office be strictly limited to purposes which cannot possibly contribute to efforts at reelection. This would be a most difficult standard to administer in any case, for each and every act of an elected representative may, in a political context, be seen as an effort to demonstrate that the voters' choice was a good one. It is impossible, without probing into the deepest thoughts and motives of an individual Member of Congress, to determine exactly why he votes as he does on a particular issue, why he casts a letter to a constituent in the terms in which it is cast, why he communicates with other Members of Congress as he does, why he assigns particular staff functions as he does, or why he does any of the myriad of things that a Member does in his day-to-day routine. It is no less difficult to apply and administer a subjective standard in the use of the frank. Moreover, we cannot require that such a standard be substituted for what we accept as an already reasonable objective standard adopted under section 3210.

For similar reasons, we cannot hold that the particular types of mailings to which plaintiffs object are so prone to abuse that they should not be permitted. Just as plaintiffs have identified the suitability of mass mailings (targeted or general), newsletters, questionnaires and other materials for campaign purposes, there is not a type of mailing challenged which is not also suitable for legitimate "official" purposes. Targeted mailings, for example, may be a means of directing discussion or information on particular issues to those groups in a particular Member's constituency which might be most affected, at the same time saving the cost of preparing and mailing information to individuals who are less likely to be interested. And notwithholding allegations that questionnaires are most often used to obtain demographic information beneficial to a candidacy, it goes without saying that any method of obtaining constituents' views and impressions on particular issues may be invaluable to a Member of Congress who truly considers himself responsible to the people.[14] It does little, therefore, for the plaintiffs to emphasize the potential in these types of mailings for abuse, without also acknowledging the legitimate ends to which they are put. We are not convinced by any of plaintiffs' arguments that there exists no rational and legitimate basis for Congress' decision to retain these particular "middle area" uses of the frank within the stated category of "official use," and we defer to the judgment embodied in the statute.

Prudential considerations

Our deference to Congress is guided also by important prudential considerations. We must give weight to the fact, mentioned earlier, that section 3210 was originally enacted in an attempt to curb widespread abuses of the franking privilege. It has since been refined by detailed regulations in each house to meet the more obvious of objections which arise even under its amended language. The House and Senate have also established machinery to monitor, review, and receive complaints concerning uses of the frank.[15] The plaintiffs seek to have the Congress, through judicial compulsion, "redraw the line" and strike a different balance. This we decline to do for at least two compelling reasons. First, the distinction between "official" and "unofficial" cannot be sharply defined or delineated and for the court to assume this burden would be an impossible task. Second, to grant the relief which plaintiffs seek would in effect require us to issue rules of behavior superseding those that Congress, a coordinate branch of government, has responsibly set for itself. It is not this Court's function to examine the policing efforts of committees created by Congress to deal with the particular types of concerns raised by plaintiffs in this case with an eye to compel even more refined standards and closer examination. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia recently manifested a reluctance "to develop rules of behavior for the Legislative Branch," or "to monitor every action taken by a senator and his aide in an effort to determine whether it is sufficiently 'official' or too 'political,'" United States ex rel. Joseph v. Cannon, 642 F.2d 1373, 1384, 1385 (D.C. Cir. 1981). We follow course in this case.

Conclusion

We do not suggest that the franking privilege may never be shown to create such an imbalance in the campaign process as to constitute a cognizable interference with important rights. We hold only that the level of impact has not been shown to be sufficient in this case for us to assume the responsibility of redrafting a statute or promulgating regulations to govern the congressional use of the frank. Our rationale for rejecting plaintiffs' claims under the First and Fifth Amendments holds as well for the challenge raised under the General Welfare Clause of Article I, Section 8. We find no constitutional violation.

For the foregoing reasons we grant judgment to the defendants and defendant-intervenor and dismiss the complaint.

An order consistent with the foregoing has been issued this day.

In addition, the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards, pursuant to its Rule XLVI, has issued extensive regulations governing the use of the frank and rules of practice in proceedings before the Commission. Regulations on the Use of the Congressional Frank by Members of the House of Representatives (February, 1979).

[8] Adopted April 1, 1977 in Senate Resolution 110. The Senate Select Committee on Ethics has similarly implemented its Rule XLVIII through the issuance of regulations. The latest of these are Regulations Governing the Use of the Mailing Frank by Members and Officers of the United States Senate (June 26, 1979).

[9] Present House Rules limit such mailings to six per year.

[10] Contained in plaintiffs' voluminous Statement of Material Facts Not in Dispute incorporating plaintiffs' Request for Admissions (570 requests) and defendants' responses thereto. The extensive response of defendant intervenor alone to plaintiffs' Request for Admissions comprises 622 pages.

[11] Plaintiffs object specifically to several types of mass mailings explicitly or implicitly permitted by the provisions of section 3210; mailings including self-laudatory material; reports concerning visits to Washington by constituents; solicitation of political support (falling short of the specific requests barred by the statute); congratulatory messages; and questionnaires.

[12] The additional issue of plaintiffs' standing to bring this action has been raised at numerous times during this litigation. Defendant-intervenor argues that, despite all the evidence offered by plaintiffs, there is little showing that the "injuries" suffered by members of the plaintiff group who have run against and lost to congressional incumbents were caused by operation of the frank. Our attention is then drawn to several cases, including Winpisinger v. Watson, 628 F. 2d 133 (D.C. Cir. 1980), for the principle that standing cannot be based on speculative and tenuous theories of causation and injury.

We do not regard the issue of standing as a frivolous one and acknowledge that there may be a legitimate concern over whether plaintiffs' limited showings are sufficient to establish standing. We also recognize that the type and cause of injuries claimed in this case are not easily subjected to proof. Rather than to resolve the complexities of this issue, we prefer to confine our holding to plaintiffs' constitutional claims.

[13] We cannot ignore the fact that the plaintiffs' arguments against this particular advantage of incumbency can also be directed against others, i.e., greater access to the media, local and national, one or more local district offices, staff paid out of public funds, WATS line for telephone calls to and from constituents, etc.

[14] While we need not agree with defendant-intervenor's sanguine appraisal that the typical member follows the advice of Edmund Burke to the voters of Bristol in 1774 and votes his own conscience rather than following the expressed wishes of his constituents, it is nonetheless true that members, to be successful representatives, must at least learn at the outset the views of those who put them in office. Thereafter, they must keep themselves informed.

[15] For example, each house has its own method for policing mass mailings, which, as must be apparent, are the greatest single source of plaintiffs' claims of abuse. In the House, before sending a mass mailing a Member must first submit the same to the Franking Commission for an advisory opinion. In the Senate all mass mailings must be registered with the Secretary of the Senate and are available for public inspection.●

SENIOR COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, in the past 24 hours there has been a great deal of confusion about the administration's position on continued funding for the senior community service employment program as authorized under title V of the Older Americans Act. Since this program is a key part of the supplemental appropriations bill now under consideration it is important that we have the facts before voting.

The most important fact is that the administration's position on continuation of the title V program has been clear and consistent: The President is opposed to it; his fiscal year 1983 budget proposal zeroed out the program, and he has repeatedly stated his opposition to the program in correspondence with the Congress. I believe that the supplemental appropriations bill was vetoed in part because it contains funding for title V.

The question we are now faced with is what happens if this supplemental appropriations bill is not enacted. This is where the confusion arises.

As you know, the fiscal year 1982 appropriation in the continuing resolution provides only enough money to operate the title V program from July 1, 1982 through September 30, 1982. This level was based on a Senate Appropriations Committee decision to discontinue the past practice of forward funding the older worker program. We know that this was not done to terminate or in any way harm the title V program, and that the intention was to use fiscal year 1983 appropriations to support the program during the regular fiscal year from October 1, 1982 through September 30, 1983.

However, that level was decided upon before enactment of the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1981 (Public Law 97-115), in which Congress agreed that title V should continue to be forward funded. Section 508(b) of the new OAA states that money appropriated "for any fiscal year shall be used during the annual period which begins on July 1 of the calendar year immediately following the beginning of such fiscal year and which ends on June 30 of the following fiscal year." This language prohibits the Department of Labor from using fiscal year 1983 appropriations for the older worker jobs program during the 9-month period between October 1, 1982 and June 30, 1983. Thus, the jobs of thousands of needy elderly men and women will be terminated in October, regardless of the amounts provided for the fiscal year 1983 appropriations bill or continuing resolution.

The best way to avoid throwing older workers off their jobs is to pass the supplemental appropriations bill. This would provide $211 million to sustain the title V program until June 30, 1983. At that time the fiscal year 1983 appropriations will take over and continue funding for the program through the end of the fiscal year.

Part of the confusion over the necessity of including title V moneys in the supplemental appropriations was created by a letter from David Stockman to the distinguished minority leader. That letter claims that the President's veto of the supplemental would have no effect on continuation of this program. The letter goes on to say that the first budget resolution provides for continued funding at fiscal year 1982 levels. Thus, according to Mr. Stockman's logic, if Congress passes a continuing resolution for fiscal year 1983 the title V program would be saved.

There are several problems with Mr. Stockman's logic. First, as I mentioned earlier the authorization for title V prevents the use of fiscal year 1983 funds before July 1, 1983. Any continuing resolution or appropriations bill, therefore, would have to include an amendment to the Older Americans Act to allow funds for title V to be spent prior to July 1983. Amending authorizing legislation through appropriations bills is an inappropriate way to legislate.

Second, notices have already been sent to title V workers informing them that the program will come to an end on September 30. Thus, thousands of workers are now in a state of panic and are threatened with losing their jobs unless a continuing resolution for fiscal year 1983, with an amendment to the Older Americans Act, is enacted before September 30. It is unlikely that the continuing resolution would be passed in time, which means this valuable program must be dismantled.

The disruption caused by these funding problems points up the need to continue forward funding of the title V program. The 54,200 older workers employed by this program are low income and elderly. They cannot afford the loss of their jobs for even a few days. This administration is taking a callous attitude toward these needy Americans by contributing to the confusion over funding of this program. If the administration really cared about title V they would support funding it through the supplemental appropriations. The smokescreen created by Mr. Stockman's letter was, in my opinion, an attempt to confuse the issue and thereby jeopardize the title V program.

I strongly urge you to vote for overriding the veto of H.R. 6863.●

HALLMARKS OF A KENTUCKY GENTLEMAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ADDABBO) is recognized for 10 minutes.

●Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share an article with my colleagues—an article that provides a rare glimpse into our dear friend and colleague, BILL NATCHER.

We all know BILL as an outstanding legislator and the powerful chairman of the Labor-Health and Human Services Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. But this refreshing piece by Martin Tolchin gives us a further insight into BILL NATCHER, the man. I know my colleagues will enjoy this fitting tribute:

The article follows:

HALLMARKS OF A KENTUCKY GENTLEMAN

(By Martin Tolchin)

WASHINGTON, Sept. nber 6.—The Congressional negotiators on a key spending bill were bogged down. The House conferees blamed the Senators for failing to consult them in drafting the bill. The Senate conferees countered that the House members had gone off on early summer vacations.

It was Representative William H. Natcher, a Kentucky Democrat, who got them back on track. The House conferees had sought $63 million for summer youth jobs. "Mr. chairman," said Mr. Natcher, "instead of the $63 million, how do you feel about $50 million, and instead of $57.6 million for the Work Incentives Program, how about $31 million?" When the Senate conferees still resisted, Mr. Natcher proposed the winning combination: $45 million for youth jobs and $35 for work incentives.

The compromise was agreeable to President Reagan, who had vetoed two previous spending bills, and he signed the agreement into law.

Last week, however, the President vetoed another spending bill, and Mr. Natcher is expected to play a key role in formulating House strategy to override that veto when Congress goes back to work on Wednesday.

"A REALLY DECENT GUY"

Mr. Natcher, a courtly, sharp-featured 72-year-old, has been breaking Congressional deadlocks almost since he arrived here in 1954. His meticulous attire and no-nonsense demeanor have earned him almost universal respect in the chamber, and the leadership often has given him the gavel when difficult legislation is on the floor.

"Bill Natcher runs the House as a parliamentarian better than anyone I've ever seen," said Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr.

Mr. Natcher has a unique way of conducting his Congressional life. He has no press secretary, administrative assistant or legislative assistant. Instead of the 22 aides to which he is entitled, he has eight, six in Washington and two in his district in West Central Kentucky. All are women.

More remarkably, in his 28 years in the House, he has never missed either a roll-call vote or a quorum call. He long ago set the House record, and at last count had answered 12,659 consecutive roll-calls and quorum calls.

Nor has Mr. Natcher ever taken a campaign contribution. He finances his campaigns out of his Congressional salary. This year, with two primary opponents, he plans to spend about $8,000.

"I made up my mind before I got here that there were certain things I'd never do," Mr. Natcher said. "I'd never take a campaign contribution, and I'd stand up and be counted on every roll-call vote."

"I don't have an A.A., an L.A.," he said, referring to administrative assistant and legislative assistant "or a press secretary, because that's what they sent me up here to do," he said.

The Congressman lives by some of the old-fashioned traditions of the chamber. "His word is as good as gold, but he never forgets those who cross him," said one colleague.

Mr. Natcher's power base is his chairmanship of the Labor-Health and Human Services subcommittee on the Appropriations Committee, which oversees $307 billion of this year's $769 billion budget. He is the third-ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee, a position that has enabled him to funnel millions in appropriations into this Congressional district.

Previously, Mr. Natcher headed the subcommittee on the District of Columbia, and earned the enmity of some black leaders by listing his two major objectives as reducing the city's crime rate and illegitimate births. He said that the district "should not be turned into a haven for those who roost on welfare payments."

But although he voted against most of the early civil rights bills, he supported the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and most of the antipoverty and housing programs of the Johnson Administration. He says that he is proudest of his votes for the Manpower Training Bill, the Clean Air Act, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and the New York City fiscal aid bill.

In 1974 Mr. Natcher presided twice over House deliberations on the New York City bill. "I took the position that we can't permit one of the greatest cities in the world to go under," he said.

He has witnessed the decline of the system of strong committee chairmen. "When I came here we had men like Sam Rayburn, Dan Reed, Clarence Cannon—strong, able men," Mr. Natcher recalled. "You had faith in them, you believed in them."

He also has seen the decline of the Appropriations Committee, whose subcommittee chairmen were once referred to as "the College of Cardinals." But now much of their power has been taken by the Budget Committee.

Mr. Natcher is a devoted diarist. He has recorded the events of his era in 42 bound volumes, and is now working on the 43d. His impressions also are recorded in more than 1,600 letters he has written his six grandsons.

Mr. Natcher is the product and now leader of his district's Democratic organization. Born and reared on a farm, he became a lawyer and district prosecutor, handling 13 murder cases. He had to wait until his seniors in the Democratic organization gave him the nod to run for Congress.

"I wanted to come to Congress 12 years before I got here," Mr. Natcher said. "They were 12 long years. I had to mark time for three old men."

Mr. Natcher played by the rules, and has been doing so ever since. The experience only underscored what his colleagues have long since discovered.

"I have a lot of patience," Mr. Natcher said "I've had it all my life."

REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM H. NATCHER, DEMOCRAT OF KENTUCKY

WASHINGTON, September 6.—Representative Natcher corresponds regularly with six grandsons. In a recent letter, he described the turning point in the Presidential nomination of Woodrow Wilson, on the 85th ballot of the 1912 Democratic National Convention in Baltimore. Mr. Wilson bested Champ Clark, who was born in the district Mr. Natcher now represents. Excerpts follow:
